Series for Lent

THE WITNESS series for Lent will deal with current movements that are allies, competitors or both of Christianity. Movements to be dealt with are Nationalism; Alcoholics Anonymous; Peace of Mind Cult; Humanism-Secularism; Psychiatry; Communism; Peace Movement; the Church. A group of distinguished writers, to be announced next week, are to deal with these subjects. This is our preliminary announcement in order that clergy and others may plan now to use the series with discussion groups or otherwise distribute The Witness in their parishes during Lent. The first article of the series will be in our issue of February 16th. Order blanks will be sent to the clergy presently.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Young Adults of California Organize for Action

Reports at Conference Reveal Their Interest In Various Phases of Church Work

★ "Young adults hold a crucial position in the Church as we prepare for a new curriculum," Canon Charles M. Guilbert told one hundred representatives of young adult groups from eighteen near-by parishes, after they had given three-minute reports at their first annual dinner in the old crypt of Grace Cathedral on Nob Hill, San Francisco. "You are providing already a good proportion of our church school teachers and also of parents in our parishes," he said, as their reports clearly showed that participation in church school work was a major concern.

Top place in activity projects, judging from the reports, was their functioning as "a service organization for the parish," doing painting and repair jobs on church buildings, parish houses, rectories and sundry equipment. Young women provided junior choir vestments, kept them in repair, helped at bazaars and sales of work. The second most frequently mentioned interest was dancing, parties, and other social functions. Third place goes to the church school, led by such statements as "We furnish all the instructors in our Sunday school"; "Young adults care for the junior division of the Church school," "We added four teachers and a secretary since September," while others told of plans for Christmas trees and pageants. One group sponsors a Saturday afternoon boys' club in a downtown parish. Another helps at a Friday evening teen canteen, which registered 355 members in four weeks. Another supports a representative on a community recreation council. Another collects clothing for boys in Ireland.

The nature and frequency of comments regarding study interests suggested the possibility that newly-formed groups of young adults need about two years' experience of fellowship in social activities and other projects before they are ready to plan together a well-balanced program which includes subjects for study and discussion, unless they began as a Sunday or weekday study or service group. The National Council's marriage course seemed to be the most popular. After the meeting, one interested rector said that he had been able to introduce at most meetings of his young adults a single reference to Church history or customs, to which his audience gave close attention.

One group gave details of its devotional emphases and of training received for a fuller participation in the worship of the Church and a clearer understanding of its doctrines. Another parish group reported "attending Sunday service in a body quarterly." Several help at "the coffee hour" after service. A downtown parish group asked for a monthly Sunday evening service, forms its choir, and serves coffee after. Of particular interest was the bold assertion of a young woman who said of her group, "Every member belongs to some other organization in the parish, and we all attend church services regularly." A young man, reporting for a group which has been active for three years, said with emphasis, "We are definitely encouraged to participate in other parish organizations." Another young man, later elected to office, sent regrets for his absence, "because he had to attend a vestry meeting." In telling of financial contributions, one group's spokesman said that its members gave three units ($30 annually for five years) to the Church Divinity School of the Pacific. Of particular interest were brief statements presented by representatives of groups from two Negro congregations, two Chinese missions and one Japanese. Several speakers, in reporting for their group, said they wanted ideas for their programs, which they probably got before the evening was over.

As one listened to these eighteen reports it appeared that most of the groups started informally, and a number have continued "as informal as possible." One grew out of a former Y. P. F. Most included married couples and single persons and meet monthly, a few twice a month, one three times each month. Those who meet weekly do so on Sunday evenings in connection with a service, or a larger youth program which includes a service at 5:30 p. m., a pot luck supper, discussion or a movie.

The whole body elected four of their number as president, secretary, treasurer, and program chairman of the diocesan young adults' committee for 1950. They had been selected by a nominating committee from four different areas in the northerly section of the diocese, nearest to the see city, suggesting that the time has come for more attention to be given to developing the work in other parts of the diocese, with possible plans for regional organization for young adult groups elsewhere.

Others who spoke during the evening were the Rev. Edward A. Wicher Jr., the Rev. Canon Charles M. Guilbert, the Rev. A. Ronald Merrix and Bishop Karl Morgan Block. The Bishop challenged the young adults to be ready to offer themselves as evangelists and teachers, to take the initiative in inviting others to church services and meetings, to visit homes in nearby areas on Saturday or Sunday afternoons, and help to start Sunday schools and youth groups in districts where the Church's ministrations were needed.

OBTAIN JOBS FOR HANDICAPPED

★ The Rev. George R. Selway, rector of St. Paul's, Lansing, Michigan, reporting for a commission for the employment of the handicapped, informed Governor Williams last week that at least 847 jobs were found during the campaign which was staged during a week in October. The commission is now continuing with the second objective of a long range study of the people who are unemployed because of physical handicaps. It will contain recommendations for improving their chances for work.

CONFERENCE FOR VERMONT CLERGY

★ Bishop Vedder Van Dyke of Vermont was the leader of the annual Advent clergy conference, held December 12-13 at Rock Point. One of the features of the program was an explanation of the national religious educational program, presented by the Rev. John Norris of Brattleboro.

YOU BETTER WATCH FOR THIS MAN

★ A man calling himself the Rev. James Manning, claiming to be of the diocese of Sacramento, has been making calls on the clergy. In Utica, N. Y., he attempted to take the Rev. Stanley P. Gasek for a touch. But when "Mr. Manning" was confronted with the evidence that he was not on the clergy lists he left town leaving behind a hotel bill. The Rev. Stanley P. Gasek, 1642 Sunset Ave., Utica 4, N. Y., can give you a detailed description if you think it might be handy.

UNITED EFFORT IN BOSTON

★ It is generally recognized that the Protestant Churches must work together to a much greater degree than in the past. In many cases, the churches in a community are working together but in far too many of these the cooperation is between the ministers or between small special committees. Instances where the cooperation reaches down to the roots—to all the parishioners—are far too few.

One place where a real effort is being made to bring together all the parishioners of all the parishes is in the old Back Bay area of Boston, Massachusetts—an area a little over a mile long and a third of a mile wide. The character of the Back Bay has changed materially in the past quarter century. Formerly, it was a district of separate homes, whose owners had lived there many years. The churches were true parish churches, with their memberships living close by. Now the Back Bay is "downtown." Much of it has gone over to business. The rest is increasingly an area of apartments (generally small), student quarters and lodging houses. The population is in a constant state of change, and while the bulk of the parishioners are still fairly near by, the membership is spread over the entire metropolitan area.

In this small area there are ten Protestant Churches — one Baptist, two Congregational, three Episcopal, one Methodist, one Presbyterian and two Unitarian.

Recognizing the need for closer cooperation by all the parishioners, and for greater knowledge of each others activities, problems and plans, the women's missionary groups of these ten churches have undertaken what, it is hoped, will be the first of a series of joint meetings, devoted at first to the mission field. If these work out as anticipated, it is expected that an informal council of the ten women's groups will be formed, to develop a joint program of activities and of study.

The first meeting was on January 4 at Emmanuel Church. At this meeting Mr. Paul Rusch spoke on "Can the Christian Church fill the spiritual vacuum in Asia?" He said that unless we move into that vacuum created by the war, we had better give up and let the other ideology move in.

Mr. Rusch is returning to Japan in the spring as executive vice president of the Brotherhood of St. Andrew in Japan—which, among other activities, is developing a rural Christian community patterned on a New England village, with church, health center, experimental farm and community center.

FACULTY CONFERENCE ANNOUNCED

★ "Christianity and the modern campus" will be the theme for the faculty conference in the second province, to be held at Bard College, Annandale-on-Hudson, N. Y., February 3-5, 1950. The conference is sponsored by the provincial committee on college work and the national association of faculty Episcopalians. Chairman of the conference, Prof. Virginia D. Harrington at Barnard College, New York, is national vice-chairman of the association of faculty Episcopalians.

The three major addresses will be given by President Edward C. Fuller of Bard College, Prof. Whitney J. Oates of Princeton, and the Rev. Robert N. Rodenmayer, rector of Saint John's Church, Northampton, Mass. Time will be allowed for group discussion concerning the responsibility of Christian professors on the modern campus.

It is hoped that the provincial association of faculty Episcopalians will be organized during the conference.

ISSUES WARNING ON MINISTRY

★ Bishop Stephen C. Neill, assistant to the Archbishop of Canterbury, told those attending an inter-seminary conference meeting at Rock Island, Ill., that nobody should enter the ministry because of home tradition, a desire to escape from the hardness of life, or because of personal ambition. He also suggested to the seminarians that they finish their seminary training "then go out and hold down a lay job for at least two years. If you can take it and, at the end of two years, still want to be a minister, then you will have proved to yourself that you are not seeking escape from life in the ministry."

PUERTO RICAN CHURCH CELEBRATES

★ The Church in Puerto Rico climaxed its celebration of the 400th anniversary of the Book of Common Prayer with a procession through the streets of Ponce, and a solemn Te Deum before an outdoor altar erected on the grounds of Holy Trinity Church. All parishes and missions sent delegations, and Bishop Charles B. Colmore, retired Bishop of Puerto Rico came from his home in Florida to attend the celebration and preach the sermon.

The procession feature was the religious liberty bell of Puerto Rico, which is owned by Holy Trinity Church. It belonged to the first Anglican church established in Puerto Rico in 1872, the parish being the first non-Roman congregation ever established in the Spanish colonial empire. Because of restrictions contained in the concordant between the English government and the government of Spain, the bell remained silent until July 25, 1898. Then it was rung for the first time, announcing the arrival of American troops and the coming of religious liberty to Puerto Rico and proclaiming the right to worship God according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church as contained in the Book of Common Prayer.

SUMMER CONFERENCE MOVES

★ The summer conference of the province of Washington, popularly known as the Sweet Briar conference, is to meet this year, June 11-17, at Hood College, Frederick, Md.

BISHOP GRAY LEADS CONFERENCE

★ Bishop Walter H. Gray was the leader at a conference on the ministry held Dec. 30 at Christ Church Cathedral, Hartford, attended by 75 students from schools and colleges. Other leaders were Dean Hirshson, the Rev. Howard F. Dunn and the Rev. Gerald B. O'Grady. Highlights of the affair were addresses by two seminary students, Brendan Griswold of Berkeley and John W. McCann of General.

NEW HEAD FOR PROMOTION

HENRY DARLINGTON RESIGNS

★ The Rev. Henry Darlington, rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, New York, has resigned, effective March 1, 1950 which is the 28th anniversary of his rectorship. During this time the Heavenly Rest was consolidated with the Church of the Beloved Disciple. Also one of the most beautiful churches in the country was built, together with chapel and parish house, all completely paid for. The reason for the resignation, which has been reluctantly accepted by the vestry, is poor health. A committee consisting of the wardens, with power to increase the number to six, has been appointed to suggest a new rector, with Dr. Darlington having agreed to continue as minister of the parish if the new rector has not been found by March 1.

HENRY DARLINGTON

BISHOP GORDON VISITS IN OWN PLANE

★ Bishop Gordon of Alaska recently acquired a cruiser plane which he is now using on visitations. It will be a great time-saver. Thus to go from Fairbanks to Fort Yukon by boat requires 611 miles of travel. By plane, straight across the mountains, it is 150 miles.

Bishop Gordon commented that "one is called upon to learn a good many things when serving the Church in Alaska." When he came to Alaska six years ago he had never seen a dog team. Since then he has covered some 6,000 miles by dog sled, during five Arctic winters. He said too, that he found that to visit river missions it was necessary to use a launch, so he learned to operate the boat, "Godspeed," covering 3400 miles in visitations last summer.

WATERLOO RECTOR GETS MEN

★ The Rev. Herbert Lamb Jr., rector of St. Paul's Church, Waterloo, N. Y., a parish of 500, has rocked his flock with a greater dose of medicine than many of the new curative drug preparations, and the greatest disease of all, that of "Episcopal apathy" is getting the worst licking in Central New York Episcopal history.

Just 9 months ago, to bring about this drastic change, Mr. Lamb had to swallow his priestly pride and employ modern means to herd his men into church. The results of what has been accomplished follow: One year ago the average men's attendance was 15 on a Sunday, and today it is over 75. One year ago the every member canvass was made by 40 persons, 15 men and 25 women. This year it was handled by 40 men and no women.

This is the way it was done: Starting in February and going through May 1949, first, Mr. Lamb really wanted his men in church and prayed for God's help for this; second, each week he personally invited 10 men to pledge themselves to attend church for 4 consecutive Sundays. At the end of 15 weeks, 150 men had signed up. Third, the rector had the attendance roll kept, and checked all who missed. Fourth, as the four week pledge expired, a layman asked the men to renew the pledge for another four weeks. These were acknowledged by the rector in a note. Fifth, Mr. Lamb kept track and checked the absentees in these groups in person or by phone. The result was that average men's attendance for these four months was increased by 99. Sixth, after the summer vacation, all men received a general invitation to revive their pledges for four Sundays. In the first eight weeks, 77 men have been in church four times; 14 three times; 12 two times; and 49 once, a total of 152. Later figures indicate a steady increase. Seventh, the weekly parish bulletin sent to all families at their homes includes the attendance figures and arouses a great deal of interest.

Some of the results of this "Episcopal Churchmen's Association attendance campaign" are: Last May there were 120 men at the Men's corporate communion, and along with the men have come their wives, daughters and aunts; the entire parish spirit is full of renewed enthusiasm. Each organization has gained a new outlook on life, the Sunday school is increasing, the loose offering has tripled, pledges are better paid, and an increase of well over 10% in the total pledging has taken place. Most amazing of all is the fact that the men publicly admit that they don't find going to church so bad after all.

The entire program is a pilot run on increasing church attendance sponsored by the Episcopal Churchmen's association's local branch in Waterloo.

MARRIAGE INSTITUTE IN BOSTON

★ An institute on marriage and the home is being held on successive Friday evenings, January 6-February 17, at the Advent, Boston. The lecturers are all eminent doctors, psychiatrists and professors connected with various hospitals and colleges. The final lecture will be by the rector of the parish, the Rev. Whitney Hale, on building a successful home. The aim of the institute is to provide a community service on a professional level to young married people and those planning to be married. Following each talk there are discussion periods, with questions addressed to a panel consisting of the speaker, a clergyman and a third person informed in the field of marital counseling.

FORUM ON LABOR IN NEW HAVEN

★ An open forum on the relationship of the Church to organized labor was held at Trinity Church parish house, following the charge by labor leaders that some churches in New Haven were having work done by non-union men. There were about 75 present; ministers, vestrymen and trustees, and spokesmen for unions. Jerome Davis, lecturer and former professor at Yale Divinity School, urged that contracts for church work should go to union organizations whenever possible, saying that to do so was to carry out the implications of Christianity. Pastor James Lenhart of the United Church, in replying to the criticism of a union leader, stated that 90% of the city's Protestant church contracts went to union labor, but that if the building trades council chose to picket his church he would accept the challenge.

FREDERICK GRANT PREACHES

★ The Rev. Frederick C. Grant, professor at Union Seminary and a member of the editorial board of The Witness, was the preacher at a union service held recently at Trinity, New Haven. He declared that "Protestantism means freedom of the human spirit, the glorious freedom which can never be enslaved by dictated doctrines."

HAIL TO THE CHIEF

★ Bishop Gilbert of New York was made a full-fledged deputy fire chief on January 5. With the honor went two automobile medallions of blue and white which, presumably, means that he can whip through the streets of New York and also park without being tagged.

CONVENTION WEAKNESSES POINT OUT

★ The Rev. Theodore P. Ferris told the congregation of Trinity Church, Boston, that there were too many lawyers in the House of Deputies at General Convention. "One of the weaknesses of the Church which we felt at the convention," he said, "is that a great many of its people, for lack of something better to delight in, delight in the working of the machinery for the machinery's sake. That is a weakness."

DEFENDS RIGHT TO SMOKE

★ Rector Harold W. J. Urquhart of Trinity Church, Watertown, S. D., resigned from the ministerial association there after his fellow members, by formal motion, asked him not to smoke at a meeting. He said, "I object very strenuously to others trying to dictate what constitutes acceptable Christian behavior, and also doing it in a rude and unmannerly way. They could merely have asked me to stop smoking. I wish to be no longer associated with a group that has no manners." The motion had asked him to stop smoking "because it is un-Christian behavior," whereupon Mr. Urquhart left the meeting to eat by himself where he could smoke unmolested.

ATLANTA MISSION GROWS

★ In 1947 St. Timothy's Church, a mission in Atlanta, Ga., purchased an army chapel from an abandoned army camp near Moultrie, but the Moultrie authorities refused a permit for moving. The war assets administration insisted the chapel belonged to the church because it had been paid for, but they did nothing to protect workmen when they came to move it. This story was told in The Witness at the time.

Before they could secure their building and erect it, they had to disband one class of the Sunday school; two classes met outdoors until the end of November, while another class met in an automobile. The congregation has now been in the new building for a year, and the Sunday school has trebled, and new families have joined the church. The men have put in many hours designing and building class rooms. The budget for 1950 was presented on loyalty Sunday recently, after service, when 90% of the amount was pledged. The following Sunday it was over-subscribed. Preparation for loyalty Sunday was begun in September with weekly prayer meetings for missions, and with a quiet day on Armistice day. The rector of St. Timothy's is the Rev. C. B. Lucas.

MISSIONARY RETURNS TO LIBERIA

★ Fenton B. Sands, agricultural missionary in Liberia for the past three years, has returned to that country following a furlough in the U. S. He is a graduate of Cornell and did some graduate work there during his furlough. He writes the National Council: "I now have a reserve of ideas and proven plans that should be instrumental in making our work progress satisfactorily."

Bishop Harris is enthusiastic about the agricultural program in Liberia. He sees it as a means of raising standards of living and bringing better health to the whole area. He says: "This is a vital part of our whole educational program, designed to provide food and a balanced diet for the personnel in our institutions, which they have never had, and to teach modern agriculture to a limited number of young men."

CONFERENCE ON MINISTRY

★ Men considering the ministry as a vocation held a conference at Manlius, N. Y., December 28-30, sponsored by the diocese of Central New York. Leaders were Bishop Peabody, Bishop Higley, the Rev. Condit Eddy of Binghamton, the Rev. F. T. Henstrindge of Elmira, the Rev. J. C. Mason of Cortland, the Rev. Rugby Auer of Manlius, the Rev. R. J. Page of Aurora and the Rev. R. B. Stott, chaplain at Cornell.

MUSICAL PIECE BY RECTOR

★ The Rev. Van R. Gibson, rector of St. Mary's, Yonkers, N. Y., wrote a musical selection, "Shepherds Gazing at a Star" which was offered at the Christmas service. The music was by Robert H. Terry, organist at St. Andrew's, Yonkers. It is the second time they have teamed up for a Christmas carol.

SOUTHWESTERN VIRGINIA HAS GOOD REPORT

★ Following an optimistic report by the Rev. W. E. Roach, promotion chairman of the diocese of So. Western Virginia, the executive board adopted appropriations for 1950 which authorized the bishop to pledge $22,317 to the National Council, the amount of the full enlarged quota. The board also contributed to the cost of a parish house at St. John's, Waynesboro, and voted funds to develop work in the growing Williamson section of Roanoke.

ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL HAS FIRE

★ St. Luke's Hospital, Church institution in Tokyo, now housed in a temporary building, suffered from a fire December 17. All of the patients, together with the staff, got out safely. The loss was at first estimated at $15,000 but is now thought to be greater.

BISHOP BENTLEY THE SPEAKER

★ Bishop Jno. B. Bentley, vice-president of the National Council, was the speaker at the meeting of the Newark Auxiliary on January 4th. He spoke on the program adopted at General Convention with Bishop Ludlow explaining what could be done about the budget to pay for it.

Hollywood in New York

THE WITNESS was invited to send a reporter to a dinner, speeches, and a showing of a new film "Guilty of Treason." The buildup stated that the Overseas Press Club was devoting this whole affair at New York's Waldorf Astoria to the subject of "religious freedom." Press notices preceding the occasion headlined an oration to be given by Cardinal Spellman on the first anniversary of the arrest of Cardinal Mindszenty of Hungary, and listed among the distinguished guests to be present, Mrs. Roosevelt, Governor Dewey, Senator Lehman, Secretary Acheson, Dr. Bunche, David Sarnoff, Arthur Sulzberger, Mrs. Ogden Reid, William Randolph Hearst, Jr., Roy Howard, Kent Cooper, Claire Boothe Luce, and a host of others. It would surely be something to attend, and The Witness was happy to accept.

Our reporter presented himself at the grand ball room of the Waldorf, was shown the dining room and told to sit any place. Lobster newburgh was served, with all the trimmings, and the food was made even more delightful by the company at the table, newspaper men and women, among the most talkative H. V. Kaltenborn. Following the princely repast, we sauntered into the ball room, and had very choice seats right up in front. We watched the Cardinal arrive and then the Hollywood contingent. It was impossible to escape the artificiality of the actors as they moved into their reserve section, contrasted with the naturalness of the newspaper crowd. The president of the Overseas Club, Frank Kelly, opened the session somberly by saying that our minds go back "to a tragic event just a year ago. Cardinal Mindszenty was a prince of the Church, and we can agree with Secretary Acheson when he said he was sickened and horrified by what happened. There is little we can do to reverse that happening, but we can pay tribute to the Cardinal." He then introduced Cardinal Spellman by saying that his eminence would not speak because he had had a very busy Christmas season, and the Cardinal took a bow. Mr. Kelly then spoke of his regrets that so many who were expected to be present were not and called upon Claire Booth Luce to take a bow. Mr. Kelly then introduced another famous name, which had not been on the original list, the correspondent, Homer Bigart. That went awry because Bigart wasn't there. He thereupon gave up after allowing the star of the film, Bonita Granville, to utter a few words. The house lights were lowered, and we beheld the prevue of the screenplay by Emmet Lavery called "Guilty of Treason," sub-head "The story of the 'trial-behind-the-trial' of Cardinal Mindszenty."

"QUOTES"

I AM obliged to exercise unlimited forgiveness because, if I did not forgive, I should be untrue to myself, in that I should thus act as if I were not guilty in the same way as the other has been guilty with regard to me. I must forgive the lies directed against myself, because my own life has been so many times blotted by lies; I must forgive the lovelessness, the hatred, the slander, the fraud, the arrogance which I encounter, since I myself have so often lacked love, hated, slandered, defrauded, and been arrogant. I must forgive without noise or fuss. In general I do not forgive, I do not even get as far as being merely just.

Movie criticism is beyond our reporter. But he felt right at home, being an addict of westerners. Charles Bickford as the Cardinal played pure grade-B-western-style-old-man that the bandits are torturing in order to get his treasure, accompanied by a similar stilted and soupy portrayal of a heroine on the part of Miss Granville. Richard Derr was as perfect as the dupe-of-the-gang-of-thieves ever is. The only one that didn't fit in was Paul Kelly as the newspaper correspondent. His acting was too good for the rest. All of the constabulary had pretty stars on them. There is a fair amount of shooting and torturing to please all western addicts, and the plot is plain black and white stuff, just good and evil, no mixture. The villains are very villainous and the virtuous are most virtuous.

It might be all right for the kiddies to see it at your local theater, though the torture scenes go beyond the ordinary in most westerns. Also the music is extremely moving, as it weaves in and out, and could give them bad dreams. But there is something else which might have a more insidious effect on the young, as well as adults. In the vital statistics handout given the audience there is this statement "Painstaking attention to accuracy unusual even to Hollywood's traditional sticklers for authenticity has been lavished on 'Guilty of Treason'." Our reporter was not convinced by that remark. Those present were being gently seduced to believe some things which were not necessarily true. You could read in a morning newspaper the next day that Cardinal Spellman spoke, and that many people were present who were not, because the press release given out at the affair said so. It was not possible to discover who paid the bill for a meal that fed three to five hundred persons, but it was said by a member that the Overseas Press Club doesn't have that kind of money.

Something was being pulled, and is being pulled, with this film. It certainly has a message. It shows the Roman Catholic Church as the sole protector of liberty in our day. Blatantly it equates Nazism and Communism, and declares that Roman Catholicism is the savior from all tyranny. It does it in a way which can make people forget that it was simple for the Pope to conclude concordats with Mussolini and Hitler, and that it is easy for him to be the friend of Franco and Peron. It mentions the fact that part of the trouble between Mindszenty and the government was over the schools, but it fails to say what was true, that the Cardinal violently protested the government's removal of compulsory religious education in Hungarian schools. It gives the impression that the sole matter of controversy in this area was government interference in parochial schools. It might be supposed that the American idea of liberty is better seen in the government's action than in the Cardinal's stand.

Probably unconsciously the author reveals his own troubled mind. Invariably the Communists are shown as never confused about what they should do, because the Kremlin tells them and they strictly follow the line. But the Cardinal also has no conflicts, for he does not have to choose between the Pope and anything else. Again he insists that the Pope prays for peace and works for it, and all we have to do is think of the many reports emanating from the Kremlin of avowals of peace. The growing similarity between Vatican and Kremlin disturbs freedom loving people who are not sure that liberty is going to come from either source, and prefer to find an allegiance in another form of government.

It may be ungrateful for a reporter to say that the hospitality he enjoyed had a dishonesty about it. But it must be done for this film must be branded everywhere as devilish.

Church Child Care Agencies

By REV. J. BROOKE MOSLEY
Dean of Cathedral Church of St. John, Wilmington, Del.

WE may profitably limit the topic to Church child care agencies and their relationship to the Church. I suggest this narrowing of the topic because I believe this is the proper understanding of the subject under discussion, since we are gathered together as representatives of Church child care agencies. My second point of clarification concerns my own perspective on these relationships. Here it should be understood that I am not an expert in child care nor in any other phase of social work, but am presenting this subject from the point of view of a parish minister with a concern for these things, who would like to have some answers to our common problems here, and who has tried at times to work out with others some of these problems in relationships between agencies and the Church and the community. The final point of clarification is a definition of what I mean, only for the purposes of this paper, by the word "Church." Here it will refer only to those visible and official parts of the faithful Christian fellowship that is seen in the structure of missions, parishes, and dioceses. And now, having narrowed down both the subject and myself to proper dimensions, we can go on.

Since the agencies under discussion are Church agencies, professedly growing out of the life and faith of the Church, it would seem at first glance that all parties concerned would certainly agree that the relationship between the agencies and the Church should be one that is very close, with mutual understanding and care and cooperation paramount in everyone's thoughts and evident in everyone's actions. But this is not always what one finds. To be sure, both the agencies and the Church will usually pay lip service to the values of a close relationship, but often they will either differ on what this means in practice, or by sheer neglect, never get around even to discussing it, much less acting upon it. In such cases as these that I have seen there has also been observable in the relationship between the Church and the agencies at least a trace of paranoia, with both sides somewhat fearful of the other and each, not always explicitly, suspecting the other of being a usurper of the rights and privileges that both believe belong to him alone. I have experienced this as one of the paranoids. If this is not the picture of our relationships generally, and we do know of many exceptions, it is still characteristic of some. And wherever it does obtain, there is a feeling of mutual frustration in Church-agency relationships which has as its natural consequence the weakening of both, for the Church cannot be strong when withdrawn into cloisters and the agency cannot have good works without faith. I do not believe that this statement is debatable here. But how to establish better relationships certainly is debatable.

Nevertheless, better relationships can be established and it can be done even without our agreeing upon the same method. There are probably many methods. But all methods that are successful will sooner or later face the hard fact that both the Church and the agencies are creatures of rigid and very human habits, which we glorify by calling traditions. And these habits or traditions are often close to being immovable objects. In my small experience these immovable objects never yield to an irresistible force but only to an irresistible love.

I am thinking, for instance, of two agencies that were brought closer (it was thought) to the Church by an act of authority on the part of the Church. In these two cases pressure was applied by the diocese which was irresistible pressure, expressed in terms of U. S. currency; and in both cases the faulty and un-Christian tradition that had existed within the agencies and which the diocese was intent upon changing, was removed. And certainly in the case of the one in which I was involved we breathed easier and felt that a great Christian work had been done. But as you would expect from reading your own gospels as well as your own social work texts, the irresistible force that was applied only made the total object more immovable. And relationships between the agencies and the Church had changed from one of indifference, which was bad, to one of fear and distrust, which was worse.

On the other hand, I can think of another agency-Church relationship that was also, at first, based upon indifference by both sides. Both were completely independent of the other, except in one significant way: they both used the other's name whenever each was called upon to boast about himself, which as you know can be often. Using only this important fact, the Church having wakened to its responsibility set out to woo the agency. Because of its rigid traditions and its less than flexible board members this was interpreted by some board members as an encroachment upon their private preserves. These were intelligent and loyal people who had served the board for years with unselfish devotion, even as in some cases their parents and grandparents had done before them, and consequently they had natural and justifiable reasons to feel that this outside interference by the Church as an unwelcome intrusion. They simply were not prepared, nor despite their consecration to the task could they be expected to be prepared, for the task of relating this agency to the Church and to the community.

But within the board there was a small group of equally devoted and intelligent people who were willing to examine critically the agency's traditions. The Church turned to this small group exclusively and in time, with no irresistible pressures, and with their own invaluable help and willingness playing a main part, brought them into a new relationship. This conversion of a part of the board was in the long run (and I believe always is) contagious, so that in time the enthusiasm of these few leaders for new ideas of program that related the agency to both the Church and the community came to be shared by the board as a whole. The eventual consequence was a definite and extraordinarily apparent improvement of the relationships between the Church and the agency and the community. And finally, these new relationships marked their own splendid consequences in the agency's program. The methods used with the willing nucleus of board members were used for about one year and were confined to discussion groups and private interviews, all initiated by the Church which was working closely with and being helped immeasurably by the social relations leaders of the community. But it is important to note and to remember that all of this was pursued to natural conclusions by the board members themselves.

When Church Sits Back

WE have so far, however, confined ourselves to the methods used when the Church is the initiator. What can we do when the Church sits back and does little when the agency wishes to initiate better relationships? I believe the same principles hold true. For the agencies to attempt to prepare some irresistible force to make the Church pay attention to its duties is not usually within the agencies' power. They usually have no such power and, therefore, are not tempted to use it, except for the force of high pressure salesmanship and the force that comes from being the constant gadfly. As attractive as even these comparatively weak measures may sometimes seem whenever they are live choices for an agency, I should think they might be used sparingly and with caution. Instead, I should prefer a method somewhat similar to the one just described. The agency can woo the Church. And of course it is true, just as in the case recently described, that because of the Church's rigid traditions and its less than flexible clergy, this wooing by the agency will often be interpreted by them as an encroachment upon their private preserves. The clergy are often not prepared for this, and on occasion they can be immoderately coy when being wooed. But within their ranks and within the ranks of devout and active lay churchmen, there are people without fears of you and with concerns for you. They can be found and they can be won.

Most easily can bishops be found and with less difficulty than with other clergy than can be won. They can be shown, for instance, that any agency which calls itself "Episcopal," no matter how independent it may be financially or in any other way from the Church, has in itself a full claim upon his time and his interest. For if an institution should do no more than sell gasoline in a service station down the street but calls itself "Episcopal," it is within the bishop's province as the administrator and pastor of that diocese, and rightfully claims his attention. An astute and careful committee of the board can enjoy this match-making. One can disguise the committee, if need be. Call it anything as long as it is a full time committee in those places where the relationship requires it. And the committee can comfort itself with the fact that no new or good relationship exists anywhere unless someone initiates it. To bask in the frustration of a poor relationship, waiting for the other fellow to begin it, no matter how much you are convinced that it is really his duty and not yours to begin it, is not helpful. But it is helpful for the one who first sees the need to begin converting the other. And God works in ways so mysterious that we should be accustomed by now to having him show often the way first to laymen and second, through the laymen, to the ministers of the Apostolic Succession.

Precious Values

BUT whatever method is used for obtaining this close relationship between Church and agency and regardless of who initiates it, the close relationship itself will yield precious values to both. The consequences for the Church are significant in the whole area of what we might call, for our purposes here, "practical religion." For if this relationship is good, the agency becomes an extension of the present kingdom that the Church maintains already exists and gives expression to that faith which must produce good works. We know that a withdrawn and cloistered Church rears and harbors withdrawn and cloistered people; and we also know on the contrary that a Church that goes out in interested service, even if it does it through only one agency, will be helped to rear and nurture outgoing people whose religion as they grow in practical service becomes less pathological and anemic. And it is not forbidden knowledge today that our Church does have within it those whose religion is so strictly personal that it is entirely withdrawn, anemic, and pathological. An improved and a growing relationship between Church and agency can not fail to improve the Church and its people.

Likewise an improved relationship is a distinct asset to the agency. First of all, this is apparent in the mechanics of the agency's work. From this level alone it means new resources for personnel, new resources of interest, and new resources for all types of support for the agency's program. The latter is true even if the Church as an institution never reaches the point of giving the agency official financial support. But better still and on a higher level than these mechanical aids, as the improved relationships grow the agency will add to its program more and more the power of the gospel itself. It is my own belief that a Church agency which does not at least try to give this, has no excuse for its existence as a Church agency. I know some of the arguments against this: that the agency is supported by the community chest, or by a nondenominational group, or by some other broad community interests, and therefore, we must not dare to offend by teaching the Christian faith. But I reject this argument because I think it is valid only in those cases where we, being supported by the community, teach a rigid denominationalism. The "spiritual plus," which is what some Church agencies call this extra something that a Church agency should give, does not depend absolutely upon Anglicanism but certainly does depend absolutely upon basic Christian convictions which are lived by the agency and which are propagated by the explicit teachings of the agency. So I confess to an impatience with any Church agency that does not seek to deliver this "spiritual plus," or whatever one wishes to call it, by an explicit teaching of at least the basic principles and beliefs of the Christian faith, or at the most, in all those cases where the agency is not dependent upon community-wide support (or where that support will tolerate it), the same faith as received by the Anglican communion.

And let us try to understand that for an agency to preach the faith by its living and by its clear and unambiguous teaching does not imply that the by-laws of the agency must eliminate all board members who are not Episcopalians, or that only Episcopalians may be considered by the in-take committee, or that any other similar denominational legalism be created. But I would like to see us united in an understanding that it does mean that those who serve on staff or board should know and be prepared to work with the fact that this agency is a Church agency and that the Church and all its branches proclaims at least the basic elements of the Christian faith and doesn't soft pedal them simply because it happens to be doing, at the same time, a good work.

This approach is one which will be an asset to the agency itself, to the people that are in it, to the community, and to all the work it does. These practical consequences are real, yet even they do not provide the motive for our beginning or pursuing such a program. For the motive is the motive of Christ himself.

Rev. Samuel Entwhistle's Adventures

By THOMAS V. BARRETT
Chaplain at Kenyon College

THE LADIES

MR. ENTWHISTLE called, "Good afternoon, ladies," forcing his most care-free head tones against the braying of the pack. When he entered the guild room on Tuesday afternoon, he felt like a hunter sounding a view halloo. The hubbub sank rapidly to a momentary whimper that always sounded to Samuel like "Good-after-twistle-Entwhistle-noon-whistle," after which the whole pack was off with a clamor that rose to a babel of sound. When the voices reached and sustained an F above high C, the chairman, Mrs. Throckburton rapped for silence. When it finally arrived, Mr. Entwhistle had found a seat and Mrs. Throckburton was inquiring for the minutes of the last meeting. Mr. Entwhistle meditated during the reading of the minutes on the problem of how to make minutes interesting. Especially at women's meetings. "It would be better," he said smiling quietly at his own wit, "to read a passage from the White Plains telephone directory."

The report of the treasurer, Mrs. Isincollop, revealed the apparently alarming fact that there was a balance of only $2,678.59. "I cannot understand," Mr. Entwhistle brooded to himself, "why it is that women's organizations operate like trust companies. They have had a balance of over $2,000 since 1927. It must be covered with mold by this time. I wonder if I could get them to spend fifty dollars for . . ." The voice of Mrs. Throckburton exploded his reverie.

"The rummage sale next month ought to bring us back up to our previous balance . . . $2,930. I know we all hope so. And that reminds me . . . our chairman, Mrs. Shratnap, says that hats over two years old will not be acceptable for the sale . . ."

"Madame president, I don't see why not," Mrs. Settleback interrupted. "After all the styles today are no better than they were . . ."

Helmets," murmured Miss Van Horsten loudly. "Hideous helmets."

"What?"

"1927 hats . . . they come way down here." Miss Van Horsten pulled an invisible hat down to her lantern jaw bone.

"Grace, I think the rummage sale ought to be on a Saturday. More people can come and . . .

"Last year we had it on Tuesday. I remember because I was doing altar guild duty that week and it was so cold in the church."

"We ought to have a committee to mend some of the altar linens . . ."

"We really need new ones."

"I know but not as much as we need cassocks for the girls' choir . . . Now that the acolytes have those pretty ones we should do something for the junior girls. Sadie Gosned was saying only last night her daughters are just wandering around after school aimlessly and . . ."

"After all we do have Brownies . . ."

"It's not the juniors as much as the teen-agers. Judge Cornfield says this town really needs more adequate play facilities."

"Johnny works after school. We find it makes him self-reliant and . . ."

"Like those missionaries or whatever they are in that place out west somewhere, or was it over in Cuba?"

"Girls," Mrs. Throckburton remonstrated, "I think we'd better finish up our business meeting before we get onto missions. The rector is going to speak to us in a few minutes and we don't want to keep him waiting too long." The word "rector" caught up with Mr. Entwhistle's wandering mind and brought him back from a day dream of New Year's Eve in Brooklyn in 1927. He couldn't remember why he'd been in Brooklyn.

"Not just yet," cooed the chairman waving her hand as Samuel started to get up for his talk. "We have just one more report from our educational secretary, Mrs. Schmink. Mrs. Schmink has just returned from the synod."

Mrs. Schmink spoke on the thrilling experience of meeting the women of the province and especially of the perfectly thrilling experience of listening to Mrs. Gnadenbutton of Minneapolis tell about her visit to an Indian reservation. Mrs. Schmink wasn't positive just which reservation it was but thought it was either the Navahos or the Pueblos or perhaps the Sioux. The Navahos, she said were the ones that made blankets and things and didn't have enough sheep or something. At that point Miss Van Horsten interrupted.

"They have too many sheep. For the land. It's poor."

"Oh is that it?" Mrs. Schmink's voice was distinctly cool. "Oh, I thought Mrs. Gradenbutton said they needed more sheep. I'm quite sure she did but of course . . ."

"I wonder if it was the Navahos," Mrs. Isincollop mused. "I think in the material from headquarters it was the Cherokees in Oklahoma . . ."

"This meeting was provincially planned," said Mrs. Schmink tartly. "It had nothing to do with headquarters and anyway it was the Sioux. I remember now. Mrs. Gnadenbutton spelled it on the board and told us not to pronounce it Siyux, (Mrs. Schmink giggled) and anyway told about the work and it was perfectly thrilling. It's too bad you couldn't all have been there."

Mrs. Schmink sat down amid a mild flutter of applause and Samuel Entwhistle reflected on the utter futility of trying to thrill people about a meeting none of them had attended.

At that point, Mrs. Throckburton called on the rector who made a fairly brief and moving address on "The Meaning of Epiphany" and suggested the guild consider some important questions facing the Church such as the Reunion of Christendom, or perhaps the problem of racial tensions in their own community, or maybe a study course in the Prayer Book. Mrs. Throckburton thanked him for his inspiring and instructive message and threw the meeting open to discussion.

"Of course," said Mrs. Isincollop immediately, "I would like to see us develop the workshop idea, like headquarters suggested. Perhaps on Education for Democracy."

"It seems to me," said Mrs. Duncan rising imperiously to her feet and glaring at the chairman, "we ought to be more practical. I suggest in view of the problem of juvenile delinquency we study the material of the Plan Your Child's Life Society, Incorporated. It seems to me . . ."

"I'm afraid I don't quite agree Madame Chairman," Mrs. Schmink cut in ruthlessly. "Our work among the Sioux for example . . ."

"Why not some Bible study," Miss Van Horsten demanded bluntly. Her question was followed by a brief period of silence while the ladies glanced toward Mr. Entwhistle to see how he took the suggestion. Mrs. Throckburton tittered.

"I know we should all read the Bible more than we do but for this study series I think some topic a little more timely might . . ."

"I think," Mrs. Gosnell said in her booming baritone, "with the world in such a state we should consider the political implications of Christianity. I suggest a series of discussions on how we can help the U. N. and the E. R. A."

"What is the E. R. A.? whispered Miss Twallen.

"Something like the C. I. O. I think," said Miss Strupe.

"I'm afraid we don't know enough about the U. N. to help much," Mrs. Duncan said humbly.

"How about some Bible study?" Miss Van Horsten repeated like a fog siren in a harbor filled with whistles.

"I should think we might consider family problems," Mrs. Duncan said. "The present rate of divorce . . ."

"Did you hear about Nellie and Henry Slack, Grace?"

Mr. Entwhistle looked at his watch. It occurred to him that it might be a smart move in the direction of solving family problems if the guild members were told to disband and go home until the June meeting for the election of officers. He let his mind ponder for some minutes the virtues of such a plan. Then he returned to the somewhat dismal situation at hand to discover action had been taken.

"Very well, then," Mrs. Throckburton was saying. "The majority has decided for a series of workshops on Bhuddism: Its Contribution to World Unity. Are there any other questions?"

Mr. Entwhistle wanted very much to ask how they had managed to get from the marital problems of Nellie and Henry Slack over to Bhuddism and World Unity, but held himself in check. He chided himself for idle day dreaming during which he had completely missed the denouement . . . in fact the culminating action of the whole afternoon. He felt a little depressed.

The meeting adjourned for what Isabel called "one-legged tea" with everybody trying to talk, smoke, eat sandwiches (which Samuel thought always had the taste of seaweed) and balance a tea cup at the same time while shifting the weight of the body from one leg to the other.

Mr. Entwhistle executed a cleverly conceived piece of broken field running around the room in an earnest effort to shake off the pursuit of Mrs. Isincollop who in addition to her job as treasurer of the guild, was president of the League of Women Home Builders, Secretary of the Down Town Shoppers Club and an ardent member of the Committee on Organized Leisure Time Activities for Labor. Mr. Entwhistle was of the opinion that this succession of honors had made Mrs. Isincollop power-mad. She was swiftly developing an obnoxious habit of giving him free and unsolicited information on how to run the Church of the Tribulation.

Mr. Entwhistle eluded a would-be tackler in the person of Miss Van Horsten, side-stepped Mrs. Gosnell without spilling his tea and unwisely loitered a second too long in putting his cup and napkin on the table. Mrs. Isincollop barred the door with a confident smile.

"I just wanted to say before you rush off, Reverend," she said tugging at his lapel, "I do wish you'd do something about selecting stronger men on your vestry. I know you don't mind my speaking quite frankly. Herbert and I were talking about it last night. We don't need to mention names but we all know there are some very weak men on the vestry. Men who have very little political influence in the community . . . if I can be so blunt . . . and Herbert and I know it's because you're so kind hearted and don't notice these worldly things that really are important. We thought perhaps the women could help by suggesting a slate of strong men before the next . . . why Archie, what are you doing here?"

Fortunately for Mr. Entwhistle, Mrs. Isincollop's twelve year old son had crashed the gate in time for tea. Mr. Entwhistle considered Archie a particularly repulsive specimen of his kind, with bad manners and an irreverent habit of poking people all during Sunday school. For once he rejoiced in Archie's timely arrival and in the moment of confusion, slid out of the building.

After supper that night he fell asleep in his chair and dreamed a lovely dream. It was a Tuesday afternoon and all the women of the guild were outside the parish house chattering gaily as they waited to board a bus marked 1927. A Bhuddist monk opened the door and Mrs. Throckburton and Mrs. Isincollop herded the ladies inside. Mrs. Isincollop sat down to show the bus driver the gear shift lever. The bus rolled away and all the ladies waved at Samuel saying "Good-after-twistle-Entwhistle-noon-whistle . . ."

For days Samuel waited outside the door. It wasn't clear to him whether he was waiting to make a speech, or just to greet the ladies on their return. They never did come back. After an infinite time of quiet the bus driver came back to collect a $2,000 fee.

"Where are they?" Samuel asked.

"They've been scattered," said the bus driver morosely.

"O Joy," breathed Samuel. "To where?"

"I had to take them all to their homes. That's what they got for listening to that Bhuddist. He sent them home to meditate. They can't convene for five years . . . anywhere . . . except church."

"O Joy . . . O joy," shouted Samuel so loud Mrs. Entwhistle came rushing into the room.

"Samuel . . . what's the matter?"

"I was asleep," Samuel yawned, and added irrelevantly, "It would be worth $2,000."

Talking It Over

By W. B. SPOFFORD

IN an editorial called "The Other Side," the Southern Churchman implies that The Witness did not know what it was talking about when we reported the cancellation last fall of the Kenyon-Sewanee football game. The reason the game was cancelled, after all the verbiage from both sides is cleared away, was because there were two Negroes on the Kenyon team. We had telephone conversations with the heads of both colleges; we also had lengthy explanatory letters from both Dr. Chalmers and Dr. Green.

The Witness did not, and does not, attempt to fix blame for the cancellation on either institution, or on any individual connected with either college. We did state, and meant, that for two Christian colleges to cancel a football game because Negroes were on one of the teams, is—well, let's use a mild word—regrettable. It is also perfectly clear to us that the heads of both of these Church colleges think the action regrettable.

There is, we think, no "other side." There is one side: colleges, and particularly Christian colleges, should not cancel games for such an un-Christian reason.

Incidentally we notice that our contemporary, the Southern Churchman, does not capitalize the word "Negro" in its editorial. Does that carry with it the implication that Negroes are inferior?

Self Starter??

By PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

Rector of the Ashfield Parishes

SOME such shout as "He started it." "She hit me first" is often the way we report a fight.

Why?

Because we know that the starter has the major share of responsibility.

When telling about our deepest experiences do we begin "The other day I . . ." or do we realize and report that "He started it"? For the truth is that God is the starter of everything. We are not self-starters but reactors.

But it takes two to make a fight. So though the starter bears the main responsibility, the taker-up is also vital. Therefore, though God is the first mover and loves us before we love him, seeks us before we turn toward or know anything about him, there has to be our response before life is made.

Until we turn, taking ourselves out of the way so that the light of God instead of the shadow of us lies upon the path ahead, the love of God cannot bring us into life. It takes two to make life.

What love beyond anything human it is that seeks out and supports both the responsive and the blind, that continually is given while we are yet lost in pre-occupation with ourselves, not waiting to be sought and kindled, but already longing over every one of us no matter what we do! Such is the love of God for us. Therein lies the hope of being rescued from self-indulgence and the justification for our moving toward God.

WILLIAM M. WEBER, a member of The Witness editorial board, is the rector of All Saints', Littleton, N. H. and on the faculty of the diocesan school, St. Mary's-in-the-Mountains. Since moving from the diocese of Newark he meets with the board less frequently than we wish for he is a young man of penetrating insight and unfailing good humor.

LAYREADERS TAKE SERVICES

★ Licensed layreaders, 24 in number, are taking the services at All Saints, Syracuse, N. Y., over a five week period while Rector William Spicer is at the College of Preachers in Washington. Teams of five are taking the services and leading in Sunday school worship each week. All of these business men were adequately trained before being licensed.

BISHOP HARRIS VISITS ST. AUGUSTINE'S

★ Bishop Harris of Liberia visited St. Augustine's College, Raleigh, N. C. recently, thus returning to the institution from which he graduated in 1917. In discussing the importance of education in connection with the work of the Church in Liberia, he said that "any Church that cannot develop its own leadership has no future." He said further that "America is the only place in the world today where the masses of the people get enough to eat," and added that neither Christianity nor democracy can be built on poverty.

UNUSUAL GIFTS ANNOUNCED

★ The New Year's weekend brought two unexpected gifts for Central New York Episcopal churches. Before the start of the weekend, a young couple walked into the home of the Rev. Paul Miller, deacon in charge of St. Matthew's, Liverpool, and this mission's first full time clergyman, and handed him a check for $2,000. They explained that they had been so impressed by his hard work and the need of a properly sounding organ for the little mission, that they had decided to make a memorial for a loved one. The Rev. Mr. Miller said that the couple swore him to secrecy regarding their identity. The 32 year old deacon hopes to buy a new organ shortly after he is ordained to the priesthood this month.

In the closing day of the December surrogate session in Syracuse, the will of the late Miss Annie Kendall revealed that the long time employee of the Crown Woolin mills had carefully saved throughout her life to remember her church. St. John's Episcopal Church, Marcellus, received $500 and its former priest, the Rev. Warren Mace, received the same amount.

Theological Education Sunday

JANUARY 22, 1950

The future leadership of the Church is being trained in our theological schools. On these schools rests the very great responsibility of preparing men for the ministry.

We have splendid theological schools with strong faculties and fine student bodies. These institutions deserve our confidence and fullest support. If we support them, they will give us a well-trained corps of priests, pastors and preachers. If we neglect them, the Church will suffer.

Acting upon the recommendation and request of the Joint Commission on Theological Education, the Presiding Bishop has designated the Third Sunday after Epiphany, January 22, 1950, as Theological Education Sunday. It is hoped that on the Third Sunday after Epiphany addresses stressing the importance of the work of our theological seminaries will be made in every parish of the Church and that our people will be given an opportunity to contribute towards the support of our theological schools. I can think of no better investment than prayers and gifts which will contribute to the strengthening of our seminaries and the training of the Church's ministry.

I hope that Theological Education Sunday may bring a very generous support to our theological schools.

American Seminar

WHEN Dr. J. J. Mallon, the Warden of Toynbee Hall in London, proposed to Sherwood Eddy that the American Seminar, which had been interrupted for a decade by the war, should be resumed—if only for the sake of the relations of Britain and America—Dr. Eddy found all shipping space for 1950 already booked.

The good offices of the Board of Trade of the British Government, however, prevailed upon the Cunard Line to allot fifty berths (twenty-five cabin and twenty-five tourist) on the QUEEN MARY sailing from New York next June 23d and returning August 13th.

After two weeks in England, where Dr. Mallon's leadership will guarantee the same high standard of speakers from members of the Cabinet and House of Commons with side trips to Canterbury and Oxford, the party hopes to proceed to Amsterdam, the Hague, Berlin, Frankfort, Munich, Oberammergau, Venice, Florence, Geneva and Paris.

The cost of the tour is $1,370 with tourist class on Atlantic steamers and $1,505 with cabin class on the steamers.

The fifty educators, ministers and editors who can best interpret the needs of Europe to America upon their return will be accepted for the party.

Applications should be made immediately to Sherwood Eddy, 108 Finley Street, Jacksonville, Illinois, or P. O. Box 357 Grand Central Station, New York 17, N. Y., stating the applicant's probably opportunity for speaking upon his return.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

CHALLENGES FEDERAL COUNCIL ANTI-SEGREGATION BRIEF

Price Daniel, attorney general of Texas, has charged that the Federal Council of Churches does not practice what it preaches in respect to racial segregation. The blast came when Episcopalian Charles H. Tuttle, attorney for the Council, asked permission to file a statement in the U. S. Supreme Court opposing the state of Texas in a case testing the rights of states to give Negroes equal but separate educational opportunities.

METHODIST STUDENTS HOLD CONFERENCE

Dean Liston Pope of the Yale Divinity School told those attending the national Methodist student conference, meeting at the University of Illinois, that the U. S. must use its great power humanely and justly for the benefit of all peoples. He warned that war between Russia and the U. S. might begin in "one year or ten" and that it is also "quite possible that we shall live for decades on the threshold of war between the two powers." Walter White, head of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, just home from a world tour, told the students that peoples of other nations "just don't believe us when we say we believe in human freedom. Any American, particularly if he is a Senator who blocks action to wipe out job discrimination, lynching, segregation, and disenfranchisement is a more dangerous enemy of democracy and Christianity than the eleven Communists recently convicted in New York. He is more dangerous because he has the power to manufacture evidence which will do our country more harm among the one billion non-white peoples of the earth than all of the propaganda out of Moscow."

GERMAN CHURCHMEN COOPERATING

Roman Catholics and Lutherans are cooperating against Communism in Germany, it was reported at the national conference of Catholic Charities, meeting at Atlantic City. "It is more than a relief job," said the Rev. Edward McSweeney, an officer of the organization, "since we are fighting to save Christianity and Germany is the last buffer against Communism." He said further that the billions poured into Germany for economic and social relief have "barely scratched the surface" and he said further that increasing unemployment is an alarming factor.

MANY WORKERS MUST HAVE SINNED

The Rev. M. A. Mechler and the Rev. A. E. Petralia, both of Orange, N. J. told their congregations that they must vote against the left-wing officials of the United Electrical Workers Union at a forthcoming election, "under pain of mortal sin." The workers however voted decisively in favor of officers who had been denounced by the priests as "Communists."

Following their defeat, one of the priests, Msgr. Mechler, following a conference with a parishioner who was one of the successful "left-wing" candidates, issued a statement in which he said that "further investigation seems to prove that there are no Communists or Communist-supporters in your union; therefore I feel that no grievous sin has been committed."

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

BANGKOK CONFERENCE HITS COMMUNISM

The conference of East Asian Churches, meeting at Bangkok, Thailand, passed resolutions stating that Christianity and Communism are fundamentally incompatible. Dealing specifically with China, the resolution states that "the Churches' task in China may be specifically to seek to provide a moral and religious foundation for the new sense of social freedom and economic injustice among the people." Appointment of a representative to link the Churches of the East and the various Church Councils "in a living fellowship" was approved. He is to be an East Asian, with a recognized status in the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council, co-sponsors of the Bangkok meeting, which brought together about 100 delegates from 16 countries.

ANGLICAN EVANGELICAL GROUPS TO MERGE

Merger of the Church Association and the National Church League, evangelical societies of the Church of England, is expected soon. The purpose is to present a united front against Anglo-Catholicism.

NIEMOELLER URGES GERMAN UNITY

Martin Niemoeller has appealed to German Protestants to support efforts for the reunification of Germany, declaring that most of his countrymen prefer unity under the Communists to the present east-west split. "With the establishment of the Western German Federation, begot in Rome and born in Washington," he said, "Germany has lost her former position as the strongest Protestant power on the continent, for the Federation today is a Catholic state." He has been sharply criticized by fellow churchmen for his views.

CZECH BISHOPS URGE RESISTANCE

Roman Catholic bishops of Czechoslovakia have issued a pronouncement calling upon priests to resist every encroachment on Church rights, no matter what suffering they may have to bear. It states that any priest who collaborates with the Communist government in violation of his obedience to the Church would be unfrocked. They stipulated that priests must rigidly refuse to comply with any demands from the government which would invalidate the power of the bishops and reduce the Church to the status of an organization "directed by some laymen and apostate priests who have already separated themselves from the Church." The latter reference is to Catholic Action, an organization of Roman Catholics, including priests, which is cooperating with the government.

FORMER ANGLICAN BISHOPRICS DEPRIVED OF ENDOWMENT

Two former Anglican bishoprics in India which joined the United Church of South India have been deprived of their endowments through court action in England. One fund was set up in 1896 to endow the Bishopric of Tinnevelly and the other in 1913 to endow the Bishopric of Dornakal.

SEEK CANONIZATION OF EMPEROR

Vatican officials have disclosed that a process has been started for the canonization of Emperor Charles, last of the Hapsburg monarchs of Austria-Hungary, who died in exile in 1922. The officials pointed out however that such efforts sometimes take decades.

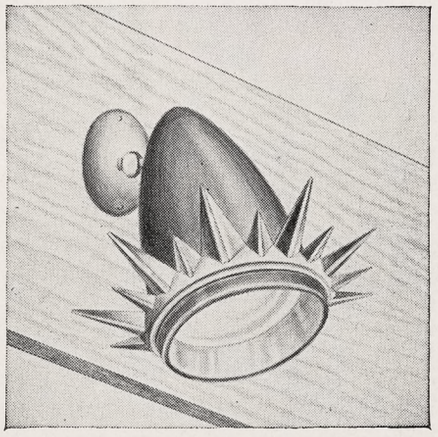
DIOCESAN CONFERENCE IN EGYPT

The Anglican Church Council for Egypt has announced plans for setting up a diocesan conference in its place, in order, according to Bishop Geoffrey Allen, to make the Church "more fully representative of the British and Egyptian branches of the Anglican communion."

MONASTERY DISCOVERED NEAR CAIRO

A 64-room Coptic Christian monastery of the Byzantine period has been discovered southeast of Cairo, by the Royal Excavation Society. Fragments of glass and pottery, as well as gold, silver and bronze coins found on the site show that the monastery was in use as early as the 8th century. In general the impression is of great architectural skill employed in building.

COMMEMORATIVE PAGEANT IN BELFAST



A pageant commemorating the 400th anniversary of the Prayer Book was held in the cathedral in Belfast, marking the first time the building has been used for such a purpose. Members of the religious drama society of Northern Ireland presented the play. There was a controversy over it, with some critics stating it was an act of "gross irreverance."

Morelite IN YOUR CHURCH
THAT'S LIGHT ON YOUR BUDGET

This church, which took the Christian Herald Prize in 1928, was equipped with very handsome wrought-iron chandeliers which undoubtedly gave enough light to satisfy the congregation of that day. Recently, however, a study was undertaken to find inexpensive means of providing more light on the pews—without spoiling the general effect. The choice was Rambusch MORELITE (illustrated below). Behind each truss there are four of these units installed. They are adjusted to throw their light in a slightly forward direction down over the pews, providing ample yet inconspicuous reading light. This is typical of many churches throughout the country where a marked improvement in lighting can be attained by simple and economical means. Why not let Rambusch solve your lighting problem? The sequel to your editorial, "Make Christmas Christian" (December 15, 1949), in which you comment upon your friend's making a gift to the Church as a thank-offering for the friendship of the people to whom, otherwise, she would have sent gifts, is this:

Because of her concern for the restoration of Christmas to its proper place—

a faithful clergyman received significant assistance for the education of his three children, who had reached college level at the same time. His salary—$3600.

a deserving layman's hospital bill was paid, and his recovery has brought new stability to his family.

a young woman from Mexico is having a chance at education in this country.

a nearly-abandoned mission Church was launched upon a campaign for renovation.

a West Indian Negro received financial encouragement for his education in this country.

Even your friend does not yet know these things, for her gift was made in a spirit of self-effacement which asked for nothing except an opportunity to serve.

Congratulations on your article in the December 8th issue entitled, "Church: No Appeal to Men." There is a tremendous amount of truth in what Professor Clark has to say. I would like to add two final sentences to his article: However, the Church will never get them unless and until it eliminates the tremendous amount of archaic language now saturating the Prayer Book and Hymnal. A generation taught to follow mere dots on paper (decimal points) and to weave its way in and out of written contracts in order to earn a daily living simply squirms if it thinks about what it is asked to say and sing in services.

I feel compelled to comment on your editorial, "Advent Self-Criticism" (Dec. 1). It is not your self criticism in which I am interested, but that you have awakened to the crying need of humanity. You, as editors of a Christian publication, are in a position to do much toward directing those who are seeking God to the inner teachings of the Church, where they shall learn how to break through to the supernatural sphere and make use of their own God-given powers.

I know from experience that those in charge of parishes are more than eager to teach what they know of the art of prayer and meditation. By teaching they learn more and are thereby able to teach more; consequently we as individuals are not only robbing ourselves when we look too strongly on the social function of the Church, but are also robbing the Church itself.

You have planted a wonderful seed; nourish it, help it to grow, and it shall blossom into a beautiful flower whose beauty shall know no end. Keep up the good work and may God bless you and guide your every thought and action.

MISS LAURA SCAMMAN
Churchwoman of Boston

That fine editorial "Make Christmas Christian" (Dec. 15) calls for an immediate Backfire. The continuous stream of comments appearing in the papers, and uttered by many, criticising the control the shops, radio, etc. have over Christmas were particularly noticeable this year. Many of us say, "What can be done about it?" and so we scold but hardly do more, except as we, individually bury our pride (for that is what it amounts to sometimes) and keep out of the hands of the commercialists.

The Witness has made a good start, and I want to make the offering that is enclosed as a thanksgiving, urging you to go on by issuing a reprint of that editorial that people may distribute in various ways. A drive started now may help to make Christmas 1950 more Christian.

ANSWER: We will appreciate hearing from others about whether or not to reprint that editorial, together with the letter in this issue by Bishop Hines on what has so far been accomplished by one person's gift.

A. F. GILMAN
Layman of Chicago

It is good to know that the Rev. George L. Paine, after his trip to countries behind the iron curtain, thinks that something good may still come out of Russia (Witness, Nov. 24). After all God is working his purposes out. Henry VIII and Martin Luther weren't exactly saints but they did a lot to refine the Christian Church. Good finally emerged also from the French Revolution.

General Walter Bedell Smith, in recent magazine articles, says that the leaders of Soviet Russia do not believe that the people can govern themselves or regulate their own lives. It seems to me that the Church is rapidly falling into this same mistake for I hear on all sides how man cannot be good of himself but must fall back on God to save him and then the Church steps in and says to reach God he has to rely on its leaders.

If there is anything in Judaism and Christianity it seems to me that all down through the ages God has been trying to set man up on his own feet so that at least a few of us may be fit to associate with folks in the hereafter. He never set up an Inquisition or a Gestapo to force us to love our neighbors, but both Capitalism and Communism must fail until man learns to do just that.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Witness Presents Honor Roll For Unusual Service

Men and Women Are Nominated by Readers And Approved by Editorial Board

★ The Witness Honor Roll for 1949 consists of members of the Episcopal Church who, in the past year or over the years, have given outstanding service to the Church. In each instance the person selected has been nominated by one or more of our readers and then selected by the editorial board. We again remind our readers that the policy is not to list those who have been on previous rolls, which eliminated several who were again nominated.

PHILIP E ANTHES, rector of St. John's, East Boston, Mass., for an outstanding work in one of the depressed areas, and particularly for the spark-plug roll he played in the recent federation of St. John's with St. Paul's Methodist and an Italian Congregational Church.

COURTNEY BARBER, layman of Chicago, who over the years has been one of the outstanding Church and civic leaders in the country.

C. ALEXANDER CAPRON, warden of St. James', Upper Montclair, N. J., a teacher in the church school, a leader in the diocese, an outstanding lay delegate at the 1949 General Convention, an organizer of the Laymen's Movement for a Christian World which he has served as president.

CHARLES B. DUBELL, rector of St. Simeon's, Philadelphia, for his example of humble Christian living, ministering night and day to all sorts and conditions of men.

ELIZABETH FULLWOOD of Wymore, Nebraska, who is one of God's quiet saints, representative of the Church's real strength.

GEORGE H. GOODREID, archdeacon of Indian work of Minnesota, who is doing an outstanding job, not in the old paternalistic way, but in truly Christian fashion.

CHARLES F. HALL, Bishop of New Hampshire, who has demonstrated on numerous occasions his knowledge of the relationship between Christianity and democratic procedures.

J. E. KALB of Holbrook, Arizona, dentist, who, with his wife, are largely responsible for the revived vitality of the Church in that town. This follows similar accomplishments at St. Mark's, Altus, Oklahoma, their former residence.

JOHN T. KNIGHT, rector of St. Mark's, Waterville, Maine, who in two years made it a parish after being a mission for 75 years; who started a mission in Skowhegan, now housed in its own building; who is now busy in neighboring Pittsfield; and who, as Episcopal chaplain at Colby College, started the first Canterbury Club there.

ARTHUR W. MOULTON, retired Bishop of Utah, for his courageous stands for world peace and for social justice.

PAUL RUSCH, layman soon to return to Japan, a down-to-earth Christian whose record of performance in extending Christ's Kingdom over a period of more than 25 years has been outstanding.

ALFRED M. SMITH, chaplain to prisons and reform schools for 30 years for the City Mission of Philadelphia in a ministry devoted to making the "unfit" of the world fit for human fellowship and Christian discipleship.

FREDERICK SONTAG, layman of Syracuse, N. Y., who gives many hours each week to the diocese of Central New York as consultant for public relations and promotion. His work as a volunteer is largely responsible for the diocese having perhaps the best promotion department of the Church, with frequent use of radio and television as well as the press.

MIRIAM VAN WATERS, superintendent of the Massachusetts Reformatory for Women, one of the foremost social workers of the country, who refused to be deterred by corruption in high places. A bow goes to the bishop of the diocese and other clergy for the support given her.

As a group we included the thirteen clergymen of Peekskill, N. Y. and nearby communities, for promptly denouncing the infringement of civil liberties which resulted in mob violence last fall. Episcopalians in the group: Raymond M. O'Brien, Gerardus Beekman, Warren Densmore, Joseph L. Germeck, Frank Leeming.

While it has not been our custom to list Churchmen Overseas, we make an exception in this Honor Roll by naming:

T. C. CHAO, president of the Yenching School of Religion and one of the presidents of the World Council of Churches, who was one of the first to declare, with his reasons, (Witness, Jan. 27, 1949) that he was staying at his post in Peiping, China.

MICHAEL SCOTT, Anglican priest of South Africa, for his ceaseless efforts on behalf of the natives of that country, which he finally succeeded in bringing to the attention of the UN trusteeship committee (Witness, Dec. 22).

MRS. ELWOOD L. HAINES G. F. S. EXECUTIVE

★ The Girls' Friendly Society announces that Mrs. Elwood L. Haines becomes its national executive secretary on February 1. Mrs. Haines, wife of the late Bishop Haines of Iowa, has held many offices in the GFS and has a long list of successes within the organization. She has been vice president first in Province IV and for the last few years in Province VI. She is now national chairman of leadership training and the present GFS representative on the national Woman's Auxiliary board.

It is not only GFS experience that Mrs. Haines brings to her new position. She has a trained professional background that includes a M.A. in religious education from Columbia-Teachers' College, when she lived at Windham House.

CALVIN H. BARKOW DIES SUDDENLY

★ The Rev. Calvin H. Barkow, rector of St. Paul's, Oakland, Cal., died suddenly on January 7th. He came to the parish, one of the strongest in the country, in 1945 from the deanship of the cathedral at Boise, Idaho.

CONTROVERSIAL TOPICS CREATE LIFE

★ "Our club's success is due to the rector's influence and calling, and to the fact that our monthly programs consist chiefly of controversial issues. We aim to have enlightening, argumentative matters of current interest presented to us by speakers who know their subject. The group has become a fellowship with a common purpose to learn." The speaker was a young man who helped to launch the three-year-old organization of young adults in St. Paul's, The Dalles, Oregon, now called "St. Paul's Fellowship." One-half of its membership of more than forty are Episcopalians; the remainder attend other churches, or none, in this town of 7500 inhabitants.

Thirty-five were present at a recent meeting when they were invited to name questions, problems and issues of vital concern to themselves. Their list, as written on a blackboard, follows: the Columbia Valley project; how to combat juvenile delinquency; trends toward a welfare state; socialism; communism; recreation for all ages; "any teen-age problem"; financial structure of the country; reasons for the current crime wave among juveniles; making morality attractive to young people; the pros and cons of religion in public schools; adult education in religion; "how the Sermon on the Mount applies to our lives today."

After discussion there was general agreement with someone's comment that "we need a series of small books relating Christian principles to business, law, medicine, and other fields." During the serving of refreshments a young couple remarked that they did not mention any particular topic of religious interest because they knew practically nothing of religion and wanted to know everything! Their Sunday School experiences had proved of little worth. They had learned most from two Mormon missionaries who called at their home weekly to explain the Book of Mormon in relation to the Bible. They lost interest when the Mormons insisted that theirs was the only true religion.

Another couple stated: "There was a lost generation as far as religion and the Church are concerned. It needs to be instilled gradually. It cannot be assimilated all at once." A young wife thought the group would gain a lot by discussing the pros and cons of "the accepted American standard of living in material things." "The problem is more than merely keeping up with the Joneses," she added. Another interesting sidelight was a young woman's comment: "This town has many clubs, and most of us belong to one or more. Our church group is appreciated because of its programs, and because it makes few demands on us for extra work."

When the group started in November, 1946, their purpose was "to create a bond of fellowship and mutual understanding among the young adults of the church and between the church and the young adults." The present organization is simple. A president is elected annually. The vice-president serves as program chairman. The secretary sends post-card notices of meetings to all members, and arranges for two hostesses who serve refreshments at the end of each meeting. Dues of fifty cents per couple were asked at first, the money being used to pay speakers, when necessary; while this fund has a substantial balance, no dues are collected. Gifts and grants to the local church have been made from time to time.

The rector, the Rev. E. Ernest Tayler, testifies: "I cannot tell how much this group has done for our parish. It has brought it to life. Congregations have increased; so have confirmation classes."

THE MEANING OF THE CREED

★ In addition to the series of articles on Current Movements and Christianity, allies, competitors or both, The Witness will feature a series of articles during Lent by Bishop John E.

Hines of Texas on "The Meaning of the Creed."

Bishop Hines is one of the younger bishops, being but 39. He was the rector of St. Paul's, Augusta, Ga., from 1937 to 1941, going from there to Christ Church, Houston. He was consecrated Bishop Coadjutor of Texas in 1945.

LAYMEN'S COMMITTEE TO MEET

★ The annual meeting of the Presiding Bishop's committee on laymen's work will be held at Seabury House, Greenwich, Conn., January 20-22. It is expected that there will be discussion and planning to carry on through the triennium, the program of evangelism. The committee will consider, in the light of seven years' experience, the undertaking of a study of the ground work upon which a permanent movement may be established. Panel discussions will, it is hoped, develop conclusions which will be referred to diocesan chairmen for laymen's work for further discussion, study and recommendations, all looking forward to the General Convention of 1952, when a program of organization will be decided upon.

There will be reports from the executive director and the associate director, and from representatives of each of the eight provinces. Reports will be received also from representatives of the various Church organizations for men, and a report will be made on the laymen's training program which has given intensive training to 1,150 laymen who are now engaged in telling about the Church's program to vestries and other lay groups all through the Church.

ELECTED BISHOP OF IOWA

★ The Rev. Gordon V. Smith, rector of St. Paul's, Des Moines, Iowa, was elected bishop of Iowa on the 2nd ballot at a special convention held January 10th. There were 175 lay delegates and 36 clergy present.

CLERGY STUDY RADIO

★ Four Central New York clergymen attended a religious radio school in New York last week. Rev. Stanley P. Gasek, rector of Grace Church, Utica; Rev. Paul B. Miller of St. Matthew's Church, Liverpool, for the Syracuse area; Rev. Robert J. Sudlow of Elmira Heights, rector-elect of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, Watertown; and Rev. A. EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

ANNUAL MEETING OF ELSA

★ The annual meeting of the Episcopal League for Social Action will be held at St. Mary the Virgin, New York, February 20, opening in the afternoon with a symposium on "New Life in the Church." The project in Harlem, where six denominations are cooperating, will be described by the Rev. William Webber, one of the four ministers connected with it. The Rev. Warren McKenna of the Workers of the Common Life, Boston, will tell of that project; the Rev. Gibson Winter will speak on Parishfield, the conference center of the diocese of Michigan, and Presbyterian John O. Nelson will explain the program of the interdenominational center at Kirkridge.

Following supper and a short business meeting, there will be a report on the conference on the Church and economic life which is to be held in Detroit, February 16-19.

URGE IMPROVEMENTS IN JOURNALS

★ The urgent need for dioceses to change their diocesan journals from dry statistical records into attractive annual reports which will do a teaching job for the Church is being actively worked on by the department of promotion of Central New York.

Mr. Roy Martin, member of the diocesan council and department of promotion, a civic and business leader, piloted a resolution through the diocesan convention which set up a special task force to revamp the journal. The project which is expected to take 3 years, has already shown results in the 1949 journal just issued. Instead of an unattractive gray cover, a friendly red cover with the words "A report to the people of Central New York about the Church's work" greets the readers. Mr. Martin said that every effort would be made to make the diocesan journal as attractive as the annual reports of hospitals, the Red Cross and other non-profit organizations.

For the first time in the history of any Episcopal diocese, a copy of new diocesan journal has been brought to every daily newspaper and radio station news desk in Central New York. A department of promotion public information task force had revealed that editors had no reference books about the Episcopal Church and so were unable to obtain accurate information about the diocese.

BISHOP HALL URGES FAIR TRIAL

★ Bishop Hall of N. H. on January 9, in a prepared statement, called for a fair trial for Dr. Hermann Sander, Manchester physician, charged with first degree murder in the alleged "mercy killing" of a cancer patient. The bishop makes it clear that his convictions of the subject of enthanesia run counter to those of the doctor, then adds: "I sincerely trust that we will not be deprived of his services because of his decision and action. Whether we agree with him or not, we must know that he has fearlessly and unselfishly exposed a vital certainty in human relations that demands an uncompromising decision."

PARISH HOUSE AT MANLIUS

★ A new parish house for Christ Church, Manlius, has just been put into use. The oldest church in Onondaga county, founded in 1804, finally has obtained adequate quarters for its work, the Rev. Rugby Auer, rector, announced. Four years ago the LBA, a woman's organization, started a small building fund, and with the help of the St. Elizabeth's guild and the Manlius Episcopal churchman's association, the fund grew to $16,500 which enabled the church to build the new parish house.

"Whom the Gods Will Destroy"

THERE'S a lot of truth in the pagan proverb: "Whom the gods will destroy, they first make mad." The substantial truth in it ought to make Christian folk happier today than at any time in the past three years, for the sensational news about China and American policy toward her that have filled the press this past three weeks seems to give conclusive evidence that the gods have indeed made mad the military authorities of America and so given substantial hope that their hitherto dominant influence on United States foreign-policy may be destroyed.

The first public awareness of this military madness was the announcement that the joint chiefs of staff of army, navy and air-force had rescinded their former decision to advise no further bolstering of the Chinese Nationalists and that they were now inclined to surrender to the militant pressure of General MacArthur and to formulate plans for the defense of Formosa as the last bastion of Chiang Kai-Shek's utterly foul and vicious regime. This position was publicly supported by ex-President Hoover and Senator Knowland of California. The result of this announcement was immediate opposition to such a policy by influential persons and groups. Secretary of State Acheson, it was now revealed, had been and still was vigorously against such a policy. Within a week of the breaking of this sensational news, President Truman announced his decision that the Secretary of State would be supported and that there would be no support by this country of the beleaguered remnant of the Chinese Nationalists in Formosa. Great Britain announced her recognition of the Chinese People's Republic and American interventionists were left out on the end of a very shaky limb.

Realistic American lovers of peace and sanity have now breathed a sigh of relief that the danger of military madness and adventure is over. But it is not, unfortunately, as simple as that. Our military and Congressional interventionists are not going to take their present defeat lying down. There will be further excitement and propaganda. The indiscriminate haters of Communism will continue to capitalize on the widespread fears of red domination of America and the world. They will refuse to face the realities of a world desperately in need of peace and of international trade. They will attempt to delay the inevitable recognition of the Chinese Peoples Republic until, when it does come, it will appear to all the world as a diplomatic defeat of American policy. Our interventionists are evidently quite willing to see America even more thoroughly hated in Asia than she is already—which is saying a lot—and to take from the United Nations the last vestige of its international usefulness. The Rev. Henry Sloane Coffin, president-emeritus of Union Theological Seminary, declared three years ago (after returning from a seven months' tour of the Far East) that the prestige of the United States in that part of the world was so low that it "simply cannot go any lower." In spite of this left-handed optimism as to the possible nadir of American prestige, it will certainly drop even lower if our interventionists should have their way—or even argue for it much longer. Columnist Walter Lippmann, from his conservative point of view, sees all this very clearly and speaks out boldly against the madness of the militarists and interventionists.

But what, some of our readers may ask, has all this to do with ordinary Christian people, intent on their religious duties and on their privilege of good citizenship? Had we better not trust our national leaders and let them fight out matters of policy among themselves? The Witness thinks not. The United States is a democracy and quite a sizable proportion of its citizens are Christians. Our leaders, military and political, are our representatives and servants. When a course of action is proposed and, though defeated for the moment, will still be fought for in principle, which violates Christian ideals, international decency and even common-sense, it is our clear duty to speak out and to let our representatives know what we think of a policy that will destroy whatever elements of world fellowship still remain in a very sick world. Especially should we back our President and his Secretary of State in their decision and urge them to continue to stand fast against the mad militarists who have too long dominated our global policies—in China and elsewhere.

SOMEHOW the Church lacks flexibility in its invitation to those without. Some attribute this to the fact that common men cannot accept this or that doctrine, but would come into the Church if the bars were let down in doctrinal requirements. Others think that the Church should come out more openly for law enforcement and civic interests. I do not think so. What is needed is to acquire more graciousness and less stiffness of manners; more fellowship and less of the exclusive caste; more human touch and less ecclesiastical manners; more kindliness and less self consciousness.

And so we urge our readers to write or telegraph the President and the Secretary of State, urging the immediate recognition of the Peoples Republic of China. If each of our readers will do this, there will be such an avalanche of letters and telegrams that cannot fail to help materially in turning the scales at this critical time toward peace.

"Whom the gods will destroy they first make mad." The gods have clearly made our militarists and interventionists mad, but they may require considerable help in destroying quickly their malign influence and power. It is up to us to give such help and to give it now.

As an appendix to this editorial, we suggest to those of our readers whose knowledge of China, past and present, may be confined to what they have read in the daily press and in American magazines, that they get hold of and read at once the recent book by Jack Belden: "China Shakes the World." There is nothing in print that gives such complete and authentic information about the Chinese people, the Kuomintang and the twenty years of revolution. And, if you care for background material furnished by one of the outstanding authorities on the Far East—himself an economic and social conservative—read Owen Lattimore's "Situation in Asia."

Suggested Method of Intinction

By BENJAMIN MINIFIE
Witness Editor and Rector of Grace Church, Orange, N. J.

INTINCTION is a growing custom in the Episcopal Church. Although General Convention did not officially recognize it until last year, it has been an accepted mode of administering the holy communion for a long time in some parishes. We know of one church where intinction was originally an emergency method introduced during the flu epidemic thirty years ago, but once the congregation became accustomed to the new way they insisted on continuing it—and have ever since.

Intinction seems to have arisen out of a generally-felt reservation concerning the common cup. Whatever the sacred meaning and association of the wine, its meaning to us as the sacrament of the outpoured blood of Christ, the fact remains that the common cup raises legitimate questions pertaining to the health of people. It is contrary to the law of most states. And arguments pro and con on the antiseptic properties of silver and alcohol do not convince many listeners. Furthermore to call it the "uncommon chalice" is simply a dodging of the problem. One is not necessarily a hypochrondriac or excessively worried about germs if he happens to question a practice, however hallowed, which finds scores and even hundreds of people putting their lips to the same chalice of a Sunday morning.

Many of us were glad over the action of General Convention, and wholeheartedly agree with the proviso that the chalice should not be withheld from any who do not approve of intinction. We believe that intinction is here to stay, but I for one am a little concerned about the utter lack of agreement on the score of "how" the elements are to be administered in this manner. There is nothing even resembling uniformity of custom at present. In preparing a confirmation class you scarcely know what to tell the candidates to expect when they worship in churches other than their own. They must be alerted to variety, although I suppose that is nothing new in this diverse fellowship.

Bad Methods

AGAIN I believe in intinction, but I submit that most of the present ways of doing it leave much to be desired. I remember a summer conference service where the young celebrant dogmatically announced that since the sacrament would be administered by intinction we should all receive on the tongue. Apparently this is being enforced in several places. It smacks of priestcraft to an evangelical mind, and suggests both superstition and a lack of trust. I have always liked the Anglican way, so like the original way, of taking the elements in your hand. I find it distasteful both from the standpoint of one who distributes the bread and wine as well as the communicant to stick out my tongue when I kneel at the Lord's table. Why must we imitate Rome's rejected methods in our Church?

I have also gone to churches where the priest, carrying both paten and chalice at the altar rail, dipped the bread generously in the wine and deposited a saturated wafer in the palm of my hand. Aesthetically this is messy. Devotionally it is distracting and disturbing. Theologically it is an abuse. I cannot believe that people receiving the holy communion in this way can escape from being very conscious of the awkward mechanics of the administration. It cannot make for a very reverent reception. Of course, many clergy using this very method of intinction also use restraint and common sense. They barely touch the wafer to the wine and the communicant does not receive the sacrament in soggy form.

Probably the most common method of intinction is where the communicant retains the bread in his hand until the chalice is presented, and then dips the bread into the wine himself. This method avoids the objections raised above, but even this is not altogether satisfactory. The majority of clergy will confess that there is an all too-frequent tendency to put fingers and all into the wine. People are nervous or some don't see well with results that are not very happy. Some clergy try to get around this by carrying two chalices, a large one for those who receive in the olden way, a small one with but little wine for those who receive by intinction. But having both hands occupied with chalices means that a purificator cannot be used, and this makes for further questions.

Recommended Method

I MUST confess that I find none of these methods of intinction altogether satisfactory, and believe that the clergy as a whole are troubled on the score. And certainly there is confusion if a layman goes from one parish to another. At the risk of further complicating the picture I want to offer still another possibility, one which seems to escape the objections hitherto raised. I can suggest this because it is certainly not original with me, and probably several parishes are already using it although I don't happen to know of any. It was introduced into the parish where I minister by my friend and predecessor, now Bishop Barton of Eastern Oregon. We use an oblong wafer twice as long as it is wide, or 1½ inches by ¾ inch. The people have been instructed to hold their hands in the traditional way, one palm resting on the other, and to take the wafer, one end of which has been gently dipped into the wine by the minister, between their index finger and thumb. The shape of the wafer makes it simple and convenient for the minister to give the communicant the dry end. In this way, the person receives the sacrament in two kinds simultaneously. There is no wet sop in the hand. There are no fingers in the wine. It is reverently and expediently done.

When the moment comes for the people to receive the holy communion the priest faces them holding up the paten. The large majority then comes forward pew by pew to receive by intinction. When all have so communicated then the priest holds up the chalice indicating that those who wish to receive directly from both paten and chalice will come to the altar rail. Thereby an opportunity is given to both groups which we find in the Episcopal Church, and to my best knowledge there is no conscious division in the congregation between those who receive in different ways. The law of charity seems to prevail because we make no issue about how people will receive except for a brief explanatory paragraph occasionally in the Sunday morning printed order of service.

It may seem lopsided for me to take all this space to comment on the pros and cons of varieties of intinction. Obviously there are more important subjects for these decisive days. But it would seem likely that eventually the Church will have to make up its mind on this lesser subject as well as the other more vital ones. At the moment we are all going our separate ways, and the present situation is a chaotic one. I for one would like to see more commonness in this Church of Common Prayer.

A Word With You

By HUGH D. McCANDLESS
Rector of the Epiphany, New York

Inscape

THIS is a word used by Gerard Manley Hopkins. In fact, he invented it. I find it much argued about by my literary betters, but it seems to me that it means the revelation of a big thing in a tiny individual thing.

It means that there is more of the mystery of life, of the complexity of vegetation, of the secrets of nature in one tiny bit of weed in a neglected flower pot than there is in all the seed catalogues and garden books in the world.

Thus one may ask which is more truly the Church militant — a much-arranged-for nation-wide holy communion, or a scrubbed young Willie Jones coming to the church and to the altar and to God. It all seems to me to depend on what your emphasis is. There is a great difference between desiring vast crowds in church and in desiring that as many people as possible may have as deep as possible an experience in church of coming to God. Some may say that those are just two ways of saying the same thing—they are not. The purposes are different; and the results are different, although outwardly they may seem the same.

The Church is souls and not statistics. It is myriads of individuals not just myriads.

If this is true, we must ask ourselves what is the idea of the Church to which we must be most loyal? Is it that which is represented by the General Convention? Or that which is symbolized and summed up in our diocesan bishop? Or that which is represented by our own parish church, or by the individual's own religious experience?

There is some division about this, and some tension, represented by a struggle between bureaucracy in the national Church, and the "states rights" bishop (in this case "states rights" is merely a polite way of expressing monarchial tendencies). At the parish level it is exemplified by parochialism or "prima donna rectors." At the individual level it shows itself in sentimental religion; in prayers that are all petition; in churches that are merely clubs of mutually acceptable people, who regard the rector as their private chaplain.

True Church loyalty must not consist of a blind, unbalanced devotion to the Church at any one of these levels.

Our Strength Lies in Children

By GRETCHEN LITTELL

Churchwoman of New York; daughter of the late Rev. John S. Littell, Church historian

IT is generally agreed that the Sunday school is no longer an adequate means of meeting the religious needs of our children. It was never meant to be more than a supplement to home instruction. But this problem will not be met by pleas from our pulpits for more consciousness on the part of parents concerning the religious welfare of their children. If we are to bridge the ever-widening gap between Church and home, the Church must not shift the responsibility that has always been hers—the training of the young—to parents who lack spiritual values of their own and therefore are not aware of the spiritual needs of their children. We have the right to expect decisive action on the part of our Church leaders to institute an effective program to bring Church and home into a close and permanent relationship. Daily contact between these two is the most vital need we have today; and this can come about only through action on the part of the Church to combine secular and religious education. This means the establishment of the free parochial school.

In the early years of our country, education was entirely under the control of the Churches, and religion played a most important part in all education. But as time went on, it was found to be inconvenient and impractical for the various religious sects to retain control over their individual schools, and thus we have the growth of the public school system. Public schools met a vital need and, in the decades that followed, served a most useful purpose. However, time has been the test of their eventual worth, and today we face a serious problem in the system which calls for a challenge from the Church. We find that the public schools, in the name of democracy, have moved steadily away from democracy by banning religious worship and Bible study in the classroom and substituting mere morality and ethics. It must be realized that religion taught or practiced on this merely ethical basis cannot endure in any system, and what is more important, cannot sustain the growing child or equip him for his uncertain adolescent years. Religion in action, or the love of God applied in everyday situations, is the saving grace every child needs for his emotional life. Children in our public schools have not actually been taught that religion is outworn and unnecessary; but, in its very absence, they have come to think of it as something not quite proper for the school—something to be hushed up. When these children approach adolescence, with their stored-up spiritual energies undeveloped, what is to keep them from embracing pseudo-religious ideologies such as communism, fascism, and fanaticism in its various forms?

One of the strongest bulwarks against these "isms" that lead toward disintegration of the country would be free—or practically free—everyday Church schools wherein would be undertaken the training of the whole child—physically, mentally, and spiritually. This is an absolute necessity in our time if our democratic principles are to survive. It is important that not only the development of the whole child be undertaken, but also that the Church recognize her responsibility in this matter — especially towards her underprivileged children. This can come about, of course, only when our clergy and our Church people recognize the necessity of establishing such schools where they are most needed: first, where the needs of families are the greatest and second, where public schools are weakest.

An Example

WE have a real need for such a school in New York. The crowded district of Chelsea is a vivid example. Public schools there are overcrowded to the point where often there are as many as forty children in a classroom. Parents cannot possibly find in these schools anything approximating the ideal situation for their children. A friend of mine who had her small boy in a paid Episcopal day school for a time, found it difficult and finally impossible to meet the cost of the child's tuition. A faithful and regular Church member, she was broken-hearted to have to take her boy from the school which had at least been giving him progressive education. To avoid the conditions of the public school in her locality, she decided to place him in a Roman Catholic day school where he would receive a certain amount of individual attention and would have at least some sort of religious instruction each day. But after one year of this, she realized that he had become very much confused on the points of religion. And so she decided on the public school for him as the lesser of the two evils.

This is but one example of what the parents of Chelsea are up against. There are many other families—some of them large—who live in small, unattractive flats. Just the bare necessities of life are theirs; and often to have these, means that both parents have to go to work. In such cases, children are left to shift for themselves when they return home after their few hours a day spent in crowded classrooms. They learn a certain kind of independence from this way of life—but obviously at too high a cost. Love and devotion and personal interest enter but little into their lives as they observe this hand-to-mouth existence around them.

Also in this same area there are any number of Puerto Ricans—many of whom are Episcopalians but who have not been assimilated by any church in Chelsea. I do not know what definite attempts—if any—have been made to give them a home church anywhere, but I do know that the proposed sort of school could not fail to do this. This would be a bit of good local missionary work, and definitely a start towards filling the churches we already have.

A free parochial school for these children would have many advantages over the paid parochial boarding or day school—which by its very nature cannot touch on the Church's greatest problem—her underprivileged children. It would mean the difference between living and existing for these children. Life could be so full of meaning for them if only the Church would give them the hope and joy they need so desperately. If the Church could only bring herself to feel this great need, and to recognize the great privilege that is hers she could—and would—find the way to meet this problem.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

PITTSBURGH CLERGY REJECT POPE'S APPEAL

A large group of Pittsburgh clergymen issued a statement rejecting the Christmas appeal of the Pope for "Protestants to enter the Roman Catholic Church." They declared that Protestants "love unity but they love truth and freedom more." Also that they "want freedom of worship, freedom for both Church and state." Among those on a committee that drafted the statement were Bishop Austin Pardue, Methodist Bishop Lloyd C. Wicke and the Rev. Hugh Thomson Kerr, former moderator of the Presbyterian Church.

CHURCH WAKES UP THE SLEEPERS

Pastor W. L. McEver of the Westwood Christian Church, Kansas City, is up with a new one: anyone who wants to attend services can leave a request with the church office for a wake-up telephone call anytime between 7 and 9 a. m. on Sunday.

IMMUNITY FOR RELIGIOUS GROUPS DENIED

In a precedent-setting decision the supreme court of Vermont has ruled that a religious organization can be held liable for a personal injury. The ruling was on a suit filed for $7,000 against a Rutland church for injuries a woman claimed were the result of a fall which resulted from faulty drainage methods.

METHODIST BISHOPS STUDY COMMUNIST STRATEGY

Bishops of the Methodist Church spent four days in New York recently familiarizing themselves with Marxian theory, strategy and tactics. Msgr. Fulton J. Sheen was invited to be one of the speakers but was unable to be present. He, along with Walter Reuther and David Dubinsky, CIO leaders, have been asked to address a latter session. Speakers at this session were Arnold Wolfers of the National War College; Sydney Hook of N. Y. University; Louis Fischer, writer; Sherwood Eddy, evangelist; John C. Bennett of Union; Paul Anderson of the international YMCA; Matthew Spinka of Hartford Theological Seminary; Reinhold Niebuhr of Union; Norman Thomas, Socialist; Prof. P. A. Sorokin of Harvard; Max Lerner, journalist.

GREATER INTEREST IN RELIGION

There is greater interest in organized religion in St. Joseph, Mo., expressed through increased church attendance and more active participation in religious activities. The Rev. A. J. Moncrief, president of the Council of Churches, attributes it to a go-to-church campaign; an advertising campaign; increased efficiency of the Council as a result of the employment of a full time secretary; an awakened interest in religion as a result of the needs of people.

PRESBYTERIAN UNITY URGED BY LAYMEN

A renewed effort to bring together all branches of the Presbyterian Church was urged at a convention of men of that Church, meeting in Atlanta and attended by about 5,000 Southern laymen from 16 states.

LUTHERANS TO PRESENT UNITY PROPOSALS

A committee representing eight Lutheran denominations agreed to present to their national conventions this year two proposals furthering Lutheran unity. Under one proposal, the Church bodies will be asked whether they are willing at this time "to approve in principle" complete organic union of the eight member bodies of the National Lutheran Council. The groups will also be asked if they favor creating a joint ways and means committee "to formulate a plan and draw up a constitution for such a union."

The second proposal will ask if the Church bodies are agreeable to changing the National Lutheran Council from a common agency into a federation. Under this plan, the proposed federation would comprise the eight Church bodies now participating in the Council's cooperative activities and any other Lutheran Churches that may desire to become members.

ASKS CATHOLIC JUDGES TO STATE VIEWS

The Rev. Glenn L. Archer, secretary of the organization of Protestants working to maintain separation of Church and state, has advised judges who are Roman Catholics to resign their posts unless they can affirm they adhere to their oath of office in deciding cases, rather than obey the instructions of the Pope. The remark was prompted by a recent statement by the Pope in which he said that Roman Catholic judges throughout the world should beware of granting divorces which would break up marriages that were "valid before God and the Church."

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

CHINA COUNCIL ASKS AID FOR NEW ERA

The Church in China "must meet the demands and seize the opportunities" in this new era in the history of the country, according to a message of the National Christian Council to all Christians in China. It states that churches "must put themselves positively behind the movement for increased production; the raising of the people's standard of living, taking a deeper interest in the farmer, the laborer and those in society in special need—demonstrating within their own fellowship the spirit of Christian equality, love and mutual aid. As Christians we should give praise and glory to God for the awakening social conscience which we see spreading day-by-day under the New Democracy."

An office is about to be opened in Peking to serve the interests of Christian churches and organizations and to act as liaison agency between them and the new government. The government has already created a commission on religious affairs which is headed by a graduate of St. John's University, Episcopal institution in Shanghai.

FOOTBALL POOLS ARE BANNED

Pools on the scores of football games to raise funds for Roman Catholic schools and churches have been banned by the police of Lancashiere, Yorkshire and Cheshire, England, following protests by other churches against this form of gambling. In two cases police have taken legal action with priests and lay organizers fined for sponsoring such pools.

VIRGIN MARY STATUE IS REMOVED

Authorities of Budapest have ordered the removal of a statue of the Virgin Mary which stands on a 45 foot column in one of the city's busiest thoroughfares. They disclaim that it is the start of plans to remove all religious monuments, but merely that it was necessary to remedy a traffic bottleneck.

CRIPPS PREACHES AT ST. PAUL'S

Sir Stafford Cripps, chancellor of the exchequer, is the first layman ever to preach at St. Paul's Cathedral, London. There were 3,600 at the service, about three times the usual attendance at an evening service. He said that if national and world affairs could be conducted "in accordance with the teachings of Christ" it would be possible to build "a corporate Christian conscience which will give it the spiritual power to control the material forces that are at the surface."

SPENCER ERVIN
Layman of Philadelphia

Canon Theodore Wedel was recently correctly quoted in The Witness as having said on the floor of Convention:

" . . . the American Church is more conservative than the Church in England which has 73 women sitting in its Convocation."

But Dr. Wedel's statement is incorrect, and both this and the true facts were pointed out at Convention a few moments later by another speaker. Your reporter must have failed to catch, or else to credit, the statement in contradiction. Women do not sit in either the Convocation of Canterbury or the Convocation of York. Where they sit is in the House of Laity of the Church Assembly. The Assembly deals solely with business matters and never with doctrine, discipline or worship, if I am correctly informed.

In General Convention of 1946 the Deputies' committee on amendments to the constitution was requested "to prepare and present for the consideration of this House an amendment to the constitution which shall clarify the term 'layman' as it appears in the constitution and canons of the Church." The committee said, in reporting:

"We assume that this direction has particular reference to the use of that word in Sec. 4 of article I of the constitution concerning representation of the respective dioceses in this House. The meaning of the word 'laymen' as used in that section is quite clear to your committee. In our opinion, it means what it says. From time immemorial it has been construed to mean male communicants of the Church as distinguished from those under holy orders. So far as we have been able to discover not only has this construction never been questioned but has always been accepted by the Church."

The remainder of the report adduces provisions of other canons in support of its argument as to the meaning of section 4 of article I.

The election of women as deputies by some dioceses inevitably challenged the interpretation of the canon theretofore prevailing. If the point of eligibility had not been raised by a reference to the hitherto prevailing interpretation, a new interpretation would have been accomplished by indirection. It does not seem to me that this would be wise procedure.

When we come to the question of amending section 4 of article I to read "lay persons" instead of "laymen" a different question is presented: whether women should sit in an ecclesiastical synod or council. If General Convention were a secular legislative assembly no argument today against admission of women have much force, in view of the prevailing rule in the Parliament of Great Britain and in the Congress of the United States. But Convention is not a secular legislative assembly. It is a provincial synod or council, sitting for the government of the Church.

The Church inherits a Jewish tradition under which government of ecclesiastical affairs was confined to men. This tradition has only the weight which any tradition has: it may operate as a notice to consider whether any valid considerations underlie the tradition before we change it, but not further.

An argument can be made that our Lord intended to restrict the government of the Church to men. If this argument can be supported, it would seem conclusive. Certainly it is true that our Lord selected only men to be among the Apostles, although many devoted women were among his following.

I have endeavored to suggest above the considerations, or some of them, which should be before us on the question of the admission of women as deputies. It seems to me that nothing is gained by putting the debate on the plane evidenced by some utterances on the subject.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Christian Leaders of China Write Mission Boards

Foreign Missions Spokesman Describes It As Most Significant Statement

By Religious News Service

★ Nineteen Chinese Christian leaders have sent a 2,000-word letter to Protestant mission boards abroad urging the necessity of revamping policies in China to meet "the challenges and difficulties lying ahead." Among those to sign the statement is Lin Pu Chi of the central office of the General synod of the Episcopal Church in China.

The letter called primarily for turning all administrative responsibilities over to Chinese leadership and limiting the work of the mission boards "to special services." Financial support from abroad, the letter said, should be regarded as purely temporary, and the Chinese Church must build up its own support "as soon as circumstances permit."

Signers of the letter included two college presidents, and executives and officers of the YMCA, the YWCA, the National Christian Council, the Church of Christ in China, and other national organizations and institutions.

(A spokesman for the Foreign Missions Conference of North America said the letter was received at the organization's headquarters in New York and that copies had been sent to mission boards throughout the United States. The spokesman described the letter as "one of the most significant statements ever to come from the Chinese Church.")

The letter declared that "there is nothing in principle which makes the future position of the missionary untenable, or renders his service unnecessary." On the contrary, it asserted, "there is a definite challenge to work and serve under adverse circumstances, and to bear witness to the ecumenical fellowship."

However, the letter stressed, missionaries must make difficult adjustments, both physical and mental, to meet the new situation. It said that missionaries must have an open mind toward the political and social trends now operating in China and must be prepared to share in the general economic struggles of the people in an environment where austerity will be the rule rather than the exception for some time to come.

In regard to the Church itself, the letter noted that at present "there do exist scattered conditions where religious activities have apparently been interfered with." However, it stated that this has been due to lack of understanding on the part of the lower ranking political workers in regard to the government's policy toward religion. "We have the hope," the letter said, "that this wave of abnormalcy will soon pass, and proper conditions will be established in due time."

Recognizing that "there does exist some deep-rooted feeling on the part of the Communists that the Chinese Church has been intimately related to foreign imperialism and capitalism," the letter said the time has come for the establishment of "truly indigenous churches, controlled and administered by Chinese Christians."

"It is a fact," the letter stated, "that the Christian Church in China in the past has been entangled with the unequal treaties imposed upon China under duress, and did enjoy certain special privileges accruing from them. It is also a fact that the Churches in China have had close connections with the Churches in Britain and America in personnel and financial support . . . and, that church life and organization here in China has been modeled after the pattern in Britain and America." However, the letter said, although much of the Church administration is still in the hands of missionaries and in many instances policies are determined by mission boards abroad, "missionary work in China never had any direct relationship with governmental policies, and mission funds have always been contributed by the rank and file of the common ordinary Christians and church members."

The letter added that "many of our missionary friends and many of the leading members of mission boards have been aware of the unfortunate political involvements in the past and done what they could under the circumstances toward their correction."

The letter suggested that new methods and new channels of Christian work be developed. "If we have allowed our petty differences to divide us," it stated, "if we have been jealous of our own prerogatives, if we have clung too hard to our time-worn traditions, then let us take up the challenge to forget our differences, our spheres of influence, and to unite in truly creative work."

Declaring that the Chinese Church has been keeping aloof from "the political torrents that surged around it," the letter asserted that "the new philosophy considers that all phases of life must necessarily come under the influence of politics, in contradistinction to the traditional Protestant view of the separation between Church and state."

"In a world where political influences play such an important part, and affect our lives and work so extensively," the letter continued, "it is a challenge how the Church as an institution and Christians as citizens in society can perform their Christian functions and discharge their duties to society at the same time. In areas of social service and education, we shall have to accept the leadership of the government and conform with the general pattern of service, organization and administration. Just how these new adjustments are to be made is for the Chinese Churches to determine. We have our privileges as Christian believers. We also have our duties to perform as Chinese citizens and Chinese social organizations."

Regarding future financial support from abroad, the letter stated: "There is nothing in principle that prevents its continuance. It is understood that mission funds are still welcome provided no strings are attached. It is to be stressed, however, that such financial support should be regarded as temporary in nature, and it is the duty of the Chinese Church to build up its own support, as soon as circumstances permit. An understanding needs to be reached between the Chinese Church and the mission boards concerned, based upon the principle of self-support on the one hand, and a realistic evaluation of the problem on the other."

The letter concluded by declaring that "the Christian movement will have its due place in the future Chinese society and will have a genuine contribution to make," although "its future road will not be a bed of roses. To build a new nation on the ruins of the old will not be easy, neither will it be easy to build a genuinely Chinese Christian movement. Difficult as it is, the task will be easier if we can clear away some of the unnecessary obstacles in the way which we ourselves can remove. The Chinese Church will not emerge through this historical change unaffected. It will suffer a purge, and many of the withered branches will be amputated. But we believe it will emerge stronger and purer in quality, a more fitting witness to the gospel of Christ."

Signers of the letter were: Dr. Y. G. Chen, president, Nanking University; Dr. Tsu-Ying Hu, general secretary, Christian Literature Society; Z. T. Kiang, Methodist Bishop for North China; Lin Pu Chi, Central Office, General Synod of the Episcopal Church; Dr. J. EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

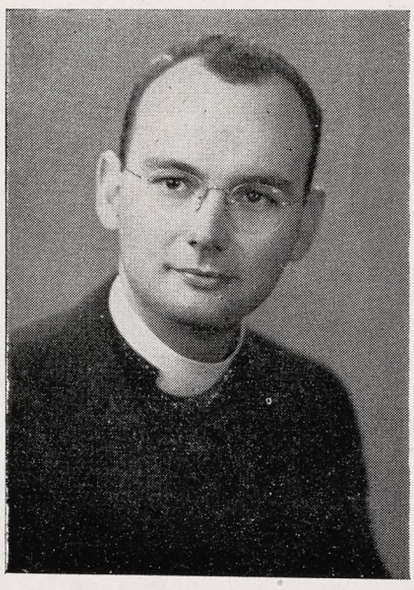
TAKING GOSPEL TO WORKERS

★ Two clergymen of Massachusetts, the Rev. Warren McKenna and the Rev. Robert M. Muir, have established the "Workers of the Common Life" at St. John's, Roxbury Crossing, Boston, in an effort to bring the gospel to the less privileged.

Roxbury is a large area which borders the city proper and extends several miles outward. It includes a Negro section at one end, and a predominantly Jewish area at the other. In between is one of the most depressed and blighted areas of urban America. The area surrounding St. John's contains both Negro and white, Roman Catholic and Protestant. The rate of juvenile delinquency is among the highest in the city, and housing conditions are among the worst.

"After several years in the ministry as parish priests, we now see our vocation as a cooperative venture," the two clergymen said. "Working alone and isolated we have realized two things: the extent to which the Church had failed to make an impact upon the community; and our need to 'lean on each other' in depressed areas."

The Christian Church is not effectively meeting human needs in industrial areas, the clergymen said, adding: "It has lost its appeal, its functional role." They are working toward "the total penetration of our total culture by the total gospel."



Mr. Muir resigned his parish at Somerville, Mass., to join Mr. McKenna in the project. It is hoped to recruit two other clergymen to work full-time in the movement. Only Mr. McKenna, as rector, receives a salary. The McKenna and Muir families share St. John's rectory.

Proposed steps in furthering the movement are the taking over of a building next to St. John's church to be used as a community center where recreational, discussion and study activities for all age groups can be carried on. The work will be interdenominational and activities at the center will be open to all Roxbury residents. An unusual feature will be a "Worry and Trouble Clinic."

A 152-acre farm in southern New Hampshire, 55 miles from Boston, will be used for work and recreational projects, and for summer camp and conference programs.

As part of a training and research program to aid students, a number of Harvard undergraduates have already indicated their desire to do volunteer work with the "Workers." Girls at Radcliffe, Simmons and Sargent have also shown interest.

The project will be supported entirely by voluntary contributions. "Pence cans" are being sent out in which those interested can deposit change for the benefit of the "Workers." Both clergymen are young, married, and have children.

ROBERT H. MANNING is chaplain to college students in the area of New Orleans.

BISHOP McKINSTRY BACKS JONES

★ The attempt of students of a fundamentalist seminary in Wilmington, Del., to bar the Rev. E. Stanley Jones, missionary, from speaking at high schools failed when many leading ministers went to bat for Jones. The students accused the missionary of Communist sympathies and affiliation with leftist organizations. Their protest went to the school authorities, which withheld comment, and Jones delivered his talks as scheduled.

With but few exceptions, all Protestant churches and clergymen of the city rallied to the support of Jones, with Bishop McKinstry about putting the clincher on the matter by declaring publicly that it was "a great honor for Wilmington to be host to this Godly man."

CITY CHURCH PROBLEMS DISCUSSED

★ Dean Sidney E. Sweet of Christ Church Cathedral, St. Louis, delivered the keynote address at a conference on city churches, meeting at Columbus, O., Jan. 23-24. Others on the program were the Rev. H. Paul Douglass, director of the committee for cooperative field research of the Federal Council, and Prof. Samuel C. Kinchelow of the Chicago Seminary.

First national and interdenominational Protestant gathering of its kind in 12 years, the meeting was sponsored by the International Council of Religious Education, the Home Missions Council and the Federal Council of Churches. Purpose of the convocation was to assist city church leaders to develop "a unified, dynamic strategy to deal with the complexities of modern city life."

tions considered such problems as juvenile delinquency, crime and race relations in big cities. They also sought to define ways in which Protestantism may interest city and slum dwellers in religion.

Ten seminars featured the convocation. These covered such topics as the church's relation to social welfare institutions, urban church planning and group relations, the church's role in large-scale housing developments, urban neighborhoods, good residential areas, and in changing racial and population districts.

SERVICE LEAGUE MEETS

★ Bishop Hall of New Hampshire, the Rev. Frederick B. Kellogg, in charge of student work at Harvard, and the Rev. Alfred B. Starratt, rector of St. Paul's, Stockbridge, Mass., were the headliners at the annual meeting of the Service League of the diocese of Massachusetts, held at St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, January 18.

NEW PARISH IN ROANOKE

★ A new parish is in the process of being established in the Williamson Road area of Roanoke, Va. An enthusiastic meeting was held on January 9th, with Bishop Henry D. Phillips presiding, at which a committee was appointed to conduct the affairs of the congregation pending formal organization. The Rev. Frederick Griffith of St. Paul's, Salem; the Rev. Richard R. Beasley of St. John's, and the Rev. Van Francis Garrett of Christ Church, Roanoke, have endorsed the project, and are to hold services each Sunday evening since it is unlikely that a clergyman can be secured before June. The first service was held January 22 in the educational building of the Methodist Church which is in that area of the city. The name for the new Episcopal Church has not yet been selected.

CHURCH OPPOSES SOCIAL ACTION

★ The Episcopal Church is today antagonistic to social action, declared the Rev. Andrew M. Van Dyke, executive secretary of the Episcopal League for Social Action, in preaching January 15th at Holy Trinity, Brooklyn. The trend, he said, is for people to insist that the clergy "go back to their altars" and steer clear of controversial issues. He paid tribute to the tradition of the parish as keeping in the forefront of the battle for justice.

Signatures are now being sought by a committee headed by the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, for a brief that will be presented, amici curia, to the court. It states that the pastoral relationship should be maintained with Dr. Melish and his son, and that the court injunction which forbids either of them to take services at Holy Trinity should be lifted. The appeal of the parish and the rector and assistant is expected to be heard in court within a few weeks.

PRESIDING BISHOP IN FLORIDA

★ Presiding Bishop and Mrs. Sherrill are in Florida where the Bishop expects to complete his convalescence from his recent operation. He plans to return to his office in New York early in February.

BRITISHERS TO LEAD OHIO MISSIONS

★ As a part of the diamond jubilee celebration of the diocese of Southern Ohio, missions will be held in Columbus, Cincinnati and Dayton. The first will be in Christ Church, Dayton, January 25-29, and will be conducted by the Rev. Bryan Green of Birmingham, England, who recently concluded missions in New York and Washington. He will also be the missioner for the Columbus mission, held January 29-February 5, at Trinity Church. The final mission will be at the Taft Auditorium in Cincinnati, March 12-17, conducted by the Rev. Michael Coleman, formerly of England and more recently of British Columbia.

QUINCY PARISH HAS CHIMES

★ The Rev. Chester A. Porteus dedicated new chimes at Christ Church, Quincy, Mass., on January 15th. They are a memorial to William H. Sampson, for many years a member of the choir.

CHRISTMAS ORATORIO AT TRINITY

★ Bach's Christmas Oratorio was presented at Trinity Church, Boston, January 18th by the Cecilia Society, a chorus of 75 voices, assisted by well known soloists and an orchestra under the direction of Alfred Nash Patterson.

NEW WINDOW IS DEDICATED

★ A new stained glass window was dedicated recently at St. Bartholomew's, New York, by the rector, the Rev. Geo. Paull T. Sargent. He, with the vestry, have formulated a plan for a unified theme for the clerestory windows, which will symbolize man's aspiration as expressed in the canticles. The one just dedicated is the Gloria in Excelsis Deo window. Prof. Albert M. Friend Jr., an expert on Byzantine art, is the adviser; Hildreth Meiere designed the window, and it was executed by the Rambusch Decorating Company.

ENTHRONEMENT OF BISHOP BARRY

★ Bishop Barry was enthroned as bishop of Albany yesterday, January 25th, at the Cathedral of All Saints. Bishops attending were Scaife of Western New York; Peabody and Higley of Central New York;

THOSE who attended the General Convention in Cincinnati in 1937 will recall how the late Bishop Charles Fiske delighted the assembly by "proving" that Bishop Manning was a "communist." He used the method then being widely employed by reactionaries, known as the spider-web chart: brand some organization as "communist," then any person who is in any way associated with any person whose name appears on the letterhead of this "communist" outfit is also a "communist." At that time the Church League for Industrial Democracy was the one singled out for branding. Bishop Gilbert was then a vice-president, and since his name appeared, along with Bishop Manning's, on the letterhead of the diocese of New York, Bishop Fiske pointed out, "proved" that Bishop Manning was a "communist."

Mr. Verne P. Kaub, recently retired from the public relations staff of the Wisconsin Power and Light Co., is now devoting his leisure to saving us from the "communist" Federal Council of Churches. He lists forty-six organizations as "red." Since "hundreds of present and past officers, leaders and prominent members of the Federal Council have aided and abetted God-hating, un-American organizations" is his "proof" that the Council is a "communist" organization. This of course makes Mr. John Foster Dulles, recently the candidate of New York Republicans for the United States Senate, a "communist" since he has long held high office in the Federal Council.

Mr. Kaub is going to take care of this situation by persuading Christian Americans to "act vigorously and promptly" through the American Council of Christian Laymen. Of course he needs a few dollars for the cause, but apparently he has got off to a good start financially, judging by the two-color printing jobs that he is sending out widely. His advisors should suggest to him, however, that he would be wise to show greater discrimination in those he selects to "prove" his case.

Here are a few of his evil-doers: Henry A. Atkinson, director of the Church Peace Union; Prof. John Bennett of Union Seminary; George A. Buttrick, Presbyterian minister; Mark A. Dawber, head of the Home Missions Council; Harold E. Fey, associate editor of the Christian Century; Harry Emerson Fosdick (which, by his reasoning, makes those connected with Harpers, Macmillans, and other publishers of his books, also "communists"); Methodist Bishops, G. Bromley Oxnam, L. O. Hartman and Ivan Lee Holt; Edward DeWitt Jones, minister of Detroit; E. Stanley Jones, missionary; Henry Smith Leiper of the World Council of Churches; Prof. Halford E. Luccock of Yale; Henry Pitt Van Dusen, president of Union Seminary; Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist minister; Edward McNeill Poteat, president of Colgate-Rochester Divinity School; Robert W. Searle of the N. Y. Federation of Churches; Prof. Eduard C. Lindeman of Columbia, and naturally, Prof. Reinhold Niebuhr of Union, who is listed as being a member of fourteen "communist" outfits, which we imagine will come as something of a surprise to the State Department which he has represented in Europe on various occasions.

Singled out for special treatment through a separate press release are four men whose wickedness seems to know no bounds. Francis J. McConnell, retired Methodist Bishop, and Harry F. Ward, retired Union professor, are the 400 hitters in this League, each belonging to twenty-seven "communist" outfits; Jerome Davis, formerly a professor at Yale, is third with a good batting average of twenty-two, and we confess to a bit of pride in finding our managing editor fourth in such noble company, his average being just one under Davis—enough, we think, to justify him in asking the manager for a raise, come spring.

There are, of course, other Episcopalians on Mr. Kaub's list; Bishop Parsons, a member of

"QUOTES"

THE only power that can resist the power of fear is the power of love. It's a weak thing and a tender thing; men despise and deride it. But I look for the day when in South Africa we shall realize that the only lasting and worth-while solution of our grave and profound problems lies not in the use of power, but in that understanding and compassion without which human life is an intolerable bondage, condemning us all to an existence of violence and misery and fear.

eighteen; W. Russell Bowie, with fifteen; Guy Emery Shipler, twelve; J. Howard Melish, eight. Bishop Gilbert of New York and Bishop Scarlett of Missouri bring up the rear with five each, which means they will have to sharpen up their batting eye or be dropped down to the minors. Though at that they might stay up there ahead of Spofford, since we notice that he is listed as "retired," something we very much doubt.

Anyhow, you can take Mr. Kaub's word for it, if you are a "Christian American," believe in "Free Enterprise" and want to preserve "the faith of our fathers," you will "not give one dollar" to the Federal Council of Churches or allow your church to do so. "The Federal Council," Mr. Kaub says, just so you won't expect too much, "receives large sums from various Jewish and other non-Christian and anti-Christian groups, so while withdrawal of your church's support won't put them out of business, it will hurt them."

Then of course, if you follow Mr. Kaub's advice, you should join the American Council of Christian Laymen and thus "help remedy the situation."

Rev. Samuel Entwhistle's Adventures

By THOMAS V. BARRETT
Chaplain at Kenyon College

GREEN PASTURES

THE Rev. Mr. Entwhistle asked the world. "What will they think of next?" as he stared at the large neon-sign, which read, The Green Pasture Funeral Home . . . Stapleton and DeKalb, Directors. Mr. Entwhistle breathed deeply five times of the fresh winter air before entering the new building. A large glass-brick door swung noiselessly open as he approached. He braced his shoulders and entered into darkness.

After a few seconds, he found he could make out the shapes of people, sitting in a long dim parlor. Heavy curtains covered the windows prohibiting the garish light of day. For a moment Samuel had a grim premonition. Then his reason came to the rescue. "Nonsense," he told himself. "They don't sit up when they're dead."

At that moment a bulky figure loomed beside him. "Good day, Mr. Entwhistle. So good to see you. I'm Calvin Stapleton. Right this way please."

"Yes . . . yes. I should have recognized you. My eyes are not used to this . . . it's not very . . ." Samuel was startled at the roughness of his voice. He wondered how Stapleton got his voice to sound like maple syrup coming out of a gallon can.

Probably, he thought, there is a special speech course for undertakers . . . or rather funeral directors; or perhaps Isabel was right. She always claimed underta . . . sorry, funeral directors . . . were people who inherited black suits, gold watch chains and no hard palate.

"This is the first time you've been with us in our new home, isn't it?" Mr. Stapleton purred, ushering Samuel into a small room papered in old rose.

"Yes it is," Samuel hollered. He wondered what questions to ask. Discarding "Do you find this more efficient?" and "Business picking up?" as being too macabre, he finally yelled, "It seems like . . . quite a large . . . place."

"I'd be glad to show you around after the service," Mr. Stapleton murmured. "We find it much more convenient and suitable. He flicked a knob on the wall and immediately the room was saturated with throbbing tone. It sounded to Mr. Entwhistle as if some small boys blowing sweet potatoes were being smothered under sofa cushions. "Our new glamortone-electric," murmured Stapleton pushing another button. An anemic young man appeared in the doorway.

"Have you the vital statistics for Mr. Entwhistle? Thank you." The boy disappeared and Stapleton handed Samuel a spotless envelope embossed with flower garlands. Inside was a folder that said "In deep appreciation." Below that was the cheerful statement "They are not dead, they are just away." On the back was a poem about larks and forget-me-nots. Samuel stuffed it in his pocket.

"Would you like to see the family before the service?" intoned Mr. Stapleton.

"Why yes," agreed Samuel struggling into his cassock. "I gather they were not church members."

"No . . . I think not. But we try to give people in such circumstances a church-like atmosphere. This way please."

Samuel wondered what church Mr. Stapleton had visited for atmosphere. The corridors of the Green Pasture Funeral Home as well as several parlors were carpeted in dark green with a two inch nap. The walls were also in green . . . slightly lighter in shade. Rosy light emanated with three candle-power intensity from undisclosed sources.

Another figure emerged from the gloom ahead which turned out to be Mr. DeKalb. "We have exactly three minutes," he announced in a voice only a shade less velvety than his partner's. Mr. Entwhistle surmised that as head embalmer he didn't really need the nuance that was required of the senior partner.

In exactly three minutes the glamor tone-electric sounded a far off chime to the tune of Beulah Land and Mr. Entwhistle was ushered into the "chapel." He was almost overpowered by the sweetness of the floral display that rose rank on rank in back of the casket to the top of a Roman arch which was covered with figures of fat little cherubs holding garlands of rose-sized violets. Mr. Stapleton bowed toward what he termed the pulpit and what Samuel would have called a lectern . . . if that. Mr. Stapleton opened his lips for a last word of cheer.

"DeKalb did a good job on the body," he whispered with a quick nod toward the casket. Samuel frowned and marched into the gloom as triumphantly as possible. He stood as far from the flower garden as possible, raised his nose in distaste at the off-mauve color of the inside of the casket lid and facing the shadowy figures before him scraped his throat to get the harshness out of his voice. The glamor tone was dying down to a whisper on "O for the wings of a dove."

"It seems quite inappropriate," Mr. Entwhistle confided to his bolder self, "seeing that the deceased passed away of acute alcoholism." He squared his shoulders and began the service.

In the midst of it, Mr. Stapleton rolled obsequiously down the aisle to seat a late comer, and as soon as Mr. Entwhistle finished the blessing, the Director appeared magically from behind a palm and stepped in front of the pulpit. His voice soothed the mourners visibly.

"This concludes this portion of the service. Cars outside will be waiting for those desiring to go to Forest Park for the interment. Those wishing to view Mr. Donegal step this way please."

Mr. Entwhistle withdrew to the shades of the clerical rose-room. In the car outside he was unable to accustom his eyes to the glare of light on the cloudy February afternoon. He kept squinting all the way to Forest Park while Mr. Stapleton in dark glasses, kept the conversation at fever pitch. He had abandoned his Green Pasture voice for what Samuel would have called the voice of the windy hill top.

"This is the fourth one today," he shrieked driving the Cadillac at a stuttering pace of twelve miles an hour. Samuel calculated it would be forty minutes before they reached Forest Park.

"Two tomorrow. Our new home makes a lot of difference. People like the atmosphere. No extra charge either for all our services, including music, flower urns, condolence cards . . . and of course DeKalb is tops. Makes 'em look so natural. They just look like they're sleeping."

"That's what you think," Samuel yearned to say and didn't. The light of day refreshed him however, and stimulated his spirits like fine sherry. He let his self-confidence rise up from the bed of the River Styx.

"Stapleton," he interrupted. "Would you please tell me why you undert . . . ah . . . funeral directors drive so slow to cemeteries?"

Mr. Stapleton was taken completely off guard. "Why . . . slow? We consider this a dignified pace . . . our clients . . ."

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"It was dignified for a horse," said Samuel, pressing a momentary advantage. "But this is not a horse. You could drive thirty or forty without losing dignity. If you like a horse pace . . . why don't you buy a horse?"

He was astounded at his own peevishness. Mr. Stapleton urged the Cadillac to sixteen miles an hour, shut his jaw on a cigar and drove silently. Samuel stole a side glance at him and scolded himself for shaking an orthodox faith with words of heresy.

Stapleton recovered his surface composure and his Green Pasture voice by the time they reached Forest Park.

He handed Mr. Entwhistle a package of crushed carnation leaves.

"Do you prefer these or evergreen sprigs?" he asked.

"Earth," said Samuel trying to sound undemanding.

Mr. Stapleton's eyebrows reached for his receding hair line and got as far as the rim of his hat.

"Earth?" He made it sound like a new philosophical concept.

"Just a little . . ."

"It's hard this time of year . . . I don't know. Our customers seem to prefer flower petals. Most of the ministers . . ."

"If possible, I prefer earth."

"We used to carry a small flask of sea sand from Atlantic City . . . but since the ministers all seem to prefer flowers . . ."

"Maybe I can find some," Samuel comforted him.

"Do you wish me to . . . scatter . . ."

"No, I'll do it myself."

Stapleton marshaled the pallbearers and marched prominently with Entwhistle to the grave. "It's a wonder they don't serve Kleenex to the congregation," Samuel said bitterly to the dull sky.

On the way home Stapleton tried to tear off the gummed label on the windshield. Only half of it responded.

"Why don't you use flags?" asked Samuel, still moody.

"We find this more convenient and economical," Stapleton said.

"A friend of mine,"* Mr. Entwhistle taunted, "suggests neon lights placed over the windshield. They could be made to blink . . . "Funeral . . . funeral . . . funeral . . ." and on the way home . . . "All over . . . all over . . . all over."

Stapleton looked very confused. They reentered the Green Pastures and Samuel disrobed quickly in the rose room, holding his breath. The place smelled to him like a refrigerator defrosting after a vain effort to preserve some cauliflower and a corsage of gardenias. He hurried through the hushed gloom into the open air . . .

"Was it a nice funeral?" Isabel asked, after the manner of woman.

"Incredible," retorted Samuel shaking his overcoat out. "But I gained a new insight into the lesson from Corinthians."

"What was that?" asked Mrs. Entwhistle pouring a hot cup of coffee.

"You know where it says 'O death where is thy sting . . . O grave where is thy victory?' I found out where it is."

"Where what is?"

"The Sting of Death."

"Where is it?"

"At Stapleton and DeKalb," said Samuel throwing his best hat at the floor lamp.

One Foundation

By PHILIP H. STEINMETZ
Rector of the Ashfield Churches

EACH of the many Churches of Christ recognizes him as founder and foundation. It is not true that Robert Brown founded the Congregational Churches or Martin Luther the Lutheran Church or Henry VIII the Church of England or John Calvin the Presbyterian Church. Each of these men and many others have been used by God in the reformation and restoration of the Church, the body of Christ, to healthier life more fully under the direction of his will.

One of the facts of Christian life which we have been learning in Ashfield is that two Churches, widely different in faith and practice, do rest upon the same foundation and are moved by the same will. We find that we can trust, love and serve each other, maintaining a common pastor, one Sunday school, a united youth group, a single bulletin because we have a common foundation. We do not need to have agreement on all points of doctrine, discipline and worship in order to share one communion and fellowship.

It is a wonderfully joyful matter to live and serve God in the place to which he has called you. It is especially wonderful to see in daily practice his spirit at work in varied ways in our two congregations, each truly representing and serving him, each recognizing the validity of the other's witness. I know that beneath our differences and seeming contradiction there is a unity in truth which binds us and toward a full understanding of which we look with confidence.

BI-RACIAL COMMITTEE HAS MEETING

★ The bi-racial committee of the division of domestic missions met at Seabury House, Greenwich, Conn., January 4-5, with the first afternoon devoted to a discussion of laymen's work among Negroes. Bishop Moore of Atlanta, chairman, presented a report which told of sporadic efforts, varying in degree according to the area. Mr. Lawrence Oxley, who is on the staff of the labor department of the federal government, confined his talk to objectives and intimated that Negro laymen had not been given a fair chance to participate in the program of the national committee on laymen's work. The Rev. Arnold M. Lewis, director of the committee, in reply said that his work was geared to the diocesan and parish levels, and told of a number of meetings where Negroes participated along with white laymen. Whenever called upon to participate in a particular program among Negro laymen he had accepted.

A report on the progress of the Church's work among Negroes and the activities of the secretary for Negro work was given by the Rev. Tollie L. Caution. Recent grants for building projects were enumerated. Over a million dollars worth of Church property comprising about 40 new Church buildings, rectories and parish halls have been acquired, primed largely through $200,000 from the Reconstruction and Advance Fund and approximately $100,000 from the Negro work item. Surveys were listed. Within the year there have been 27 Negro students scattered in six of our Church seminaries.

The Rev. John M. Burgess, chaplain at Howard University, asked that a memorandum be addressed to the overseas department to explore the work of the Church of England in the West Indies and West Africa with a view toward giving some kind of assistance to our sister communion in the present economic crisis.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Prayer Works. By Austin Pardue. Morehouse-Gorham. $2.00.

Very simple, straight-forward, utterly sincere radio addresses, which come straight from the living experience of the speaker. There isn't much theology or Biblical exposition, but the most direct and earnest kind of personal testimony. The book will be of great help to many persons.

Peace Is Possible. By Sydney Temple, Editor. The Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship. $1.50.

This little book is a rare tribute to a rare spirit. Thirteen members of the Protestant Episcopal Church have contributed essays dedicated to the memory of Adelaide T. Case, dealing with many facets of the problems of world peace. This was one of Dr. Case's deepest concerns and the editor has included one of her own articles on education for peace.

The first section of the book deals with the peacemaking responsibility of the Church, in studies beginning with the Old Testament and concluding with the ecumenical Church. A second section considers the possibilities and problems of peacemaking, as sincere individuals search for answers in practical situations.

The contributors include some of the ablest leaders of the Church, whose varied approaches are here brought together to provide a volume of unusual breadth and adequacy of treatment, combined with high quality in each of its parts.—Frank W. Herriott.

In the Beginning. By Solomon Goldman. Harper. $5.00.

This volume, the second of an ambitious work on the whole Bible, deals specifically with the book of Genesis. It contains selections of the most important passages rendered in a free translation, together with a discussion of the historical background, authorship, style, ideas (pp. 1-115), and a set of exegetical notes (pp. 731-828). Most of the book is devoted to a wealth of "echoes and allusions" (pp. 116-730) which will prove of help for those readers interested in literary illustrations. Dr. Goldman holds conservative views on the problems of composition and of the patriarchs' historicity. While the arguments he puts forth against the validity of the documentary hypothesis do not in themselves constitute a demonstration of Mosaic origin, his remarks should be taken seriously by biblical critics.

Canon Charles Kingsley. By Una Pope-Hennesy. Macmillan. $3.00.

A modern life of a romantic but efficient Socialist who after years of writing to meet his expenses died of pneumonia in the rectory he had struggled to remodel. It is appalling to discover that not one soul in his parish could read or write, and that Dr. Pusey prevented his receiving an LL.D. at Oxford on the nomination of the Prince of Wales because of the so-called immorality of "Hypatia!"

—HELEN M. GRANT

The Word was Made Flesh. By John S. Marshall. University Press, University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn. $3.50.

DuBose. DuBose is still very much worth reading, and Dr. Marshall's outline of his theology will provide the present generation with a first-rate introduction. Those of us who were in seminary forty years ago recall the excitement in theological circles whenever a new book by Dr. DuBose was announced. In some courses in New Testament, every student was expected to read each of his books—to his very great and permanent profit. It is to be hoped that the new generation will benefit equally from the study of this great theologian and religious thinker.

How to Study and Use the Bible. By Park Hays Miller. Wilde Co. $1.75.

This small volume offers to the unexperienced readers valuable suggestions on the practical use of tools for Bible study (such as versions, concordances, commentaries, etc.) and an illustrative analysis of Amos and Philippians. Unfortunately, the chapter entitled "The Story The Bible Tells" merely sums up the contents of the biblical books without attempting to place Hebrew religion and primitive Christianity in their historical milieu. Is it possible in our time to hear "the Word of God" and to grasp the full impact of "the story of God's sovereign purpose in the world" without facing squarely the realities of ancient history?

—SAMUEL L. TERRIEN

Memoirs of Childhood and Youth. By Albert Schweitzer. Macmillan. $1.75.

Brief but fascinating sketches, including an account of his first bicycle, his music lessons, and the terrifying sacristan. Enthusiasts for Schweitzer must not miss this book.

English Prayer Books. By Stanley Morison. Cambridge University Press. $3.50.

This is the new third edition of a book published in 1943, greatly enlarged in size and replete with many fascinating illustrations. It is a book by a bookman, rather than by a liturgical or theological expert. Incidentally, moreover, the author is a Roman Catholic. He has given us a perfectly fascinating account of the Prayer Book through the centuries, beginning with Apostolic times and coming down through the Middle Ages and Reformation. The author even describes the "free church" adaptations of the English rite, and also deals with special services, e.g. for sailors and airmen. There are some mistakes here and there—as is inevitable in a book of this magnitude; but there is a vast amount of reliable information contained in it.

The Ministry. Ed. by J. Richard Spann. Abingdon-Cokesbury. $2.

Most books which are made up of the contributions of many authors are disappointing because of their unevenness. This is not. With the exception of the final chapter on the minister's compensations, which is unpleasantly egocentric in its style, the chapters maintain an extraordinarily high level of excellence. Five of them deal with "The Minister's Prerequisites," six of them with "The Minister's Work," and six with "The Minister's Personal Life." Men like Henry Sloane Coffin, Ralph W. Sockman, and D. Elton Trueblood are among the contributors. Altogether, it is a book which can be a help to all ministers, and of particular inspiration and enlightenment to young men who may be considering the ministry.

—W. R. BOWIE

The Gospel and Our World. By Georgia Harkness. Abingdon-Cokesbury. $1.50.

Miss Harkness, with her usual clarity of thought and style, develops the thesis that the ineffectiveness of the Church can largely be overcome by establishing a much closer connection between theology and evangelism. In fact, she deals chiefly with theology.

After a cursory diagnosis of the present "sickly state" of the Church, the author reaffirms man's need for those dependable sources of inner satisfaction found in the Gospel. She declares that "our preaching and all that goes with it ought at the same time to be more doctrinal, more Biblical, and more functional" and then has the remarkable courage to attempt in brief space to say what that doctrine should be as related to the problems of evil, sin, and death.

It is in the fifth chapter, "The Layman and the Gospel," that this reviewer found his chief delight. Taking over the really impossible task of telling ministers in a few thousand words just what they should preach about evil, sin, and death, Prof. Harkness indulges in a brilliant and sardonic analysis of "Mr. Brown," the average layman and his minister, "a man caught in a situation so different from the minister's that only by the most unusual discernment can he possibly look at the social scene from the minister's point of view," and who really doesn't know nor care what the minister is talking about. She concludes: "The way out lies along the channels of fellowship, study, action, prayer, and personal witness." The sixth and last chapter attempts to implement this through a renovated social gospel based on "three great doctrines of the Christian faith—creation, judgment, and redemption." And these also are expounded with a brevity which makes a seeming dogmatism inescapable. The book is both challenging and timely.

—ARTHUR L. SWIFT JR.

Giving a Reason for our Hope. By Carl F. H. Henry. Wilde. $1.50.

Jesus Christ is Alive. By Laurence W. Miller. Wilde. $1.50.

Both these books are by fundamentalists, who label all who are not fundamentalists as "modernists."

LELAND STARK
Rector of the Epiphany, Washington

I commend you most earnestly for the editorial "Make Christmas Christian" (Witness, Dec. 15). I should also like to suggest that it be considered for reprinting as a leaflet for parish-wide distribution for Christmas 1950. In our low moments, I suppose we all feel "Canute-like" against the rising tide of Christmas secularization, but stand we must and I for one would like to see this editorial reprinted and distributed widely.

ANSWER: The editorial "Make Christmas Christian" is now available as a leaflet, so printed that it may be inserted in ordinary envelopes, as well as otherwise distributed. The leaflet also contains the Sequel to the editorial in which Bishop Hines of Texas relates the accomplishments of one woman's gift. The leaflet is 5c for a single copy; $1 for 25; $1.50 for 50; $2 for 100. Cash with order please. We will pay postage.

LOUISE McC. PAULSON
Churchwoman of Los Angeles

It is 3:30 in the morning and I cannot sleep. Disturbing thoughts, otherwise put into the subconscious by daily chores, become alive and challenging in the middle of the night. Now all the emotions of fear, hate and anger meet in fiery head-on collision with faith, hope and love. I cannot but at this moment think of Dante's purgatory where swirling, seething allegorical figures struggle to gain the beauty and everlasting goodness of Paradise.

To put one's feelings into one simple sentence is a difficult thing to do. But, frankly, I am concerned for the Church. And, being an Episcopalian, I am concerned for the Episcopal Church. Ever since the General Convention, when women were refused seats, this thought has struck home. These are our leaders, chosen by parishes to represent them. Yet our deputies showed such immature, petty judgment in the matter. We fail to be realistic. Life is no more centered in the home as in the last century. Our living is becoming more and more a part of the community. The establishment of nursery and pre-schools, both public and private, often by mothers themselves, is a good example. The attitude nowadays points to the fact that women must be in outside activities to insure that satisfying feeling that they are accomplishing something in life. In local, state, national and world government, we have only to see the extent to which women are participating in activities outside the home. And yet the Church still refuses to recognize them in her legislative bodies. This not only shows lack of a realistic outlook, but it is also undemocratic, uncooperative and unsocial.

I am concerned too for courageous leadership among our laity and clergy. Political hob-knobbing, indecisive minds on important questions regarding race and other social questions, disturb me and many others I know. The world is swaying in the balance, its people poised to plunge into another catastrophic war or to grasp Christ's eternally outstretched hand. We must be unafraid and courageous in this situation. We must, each of us, take Christ's hand in all areas of living and follow his way.

The Witness is the most courageous periodical I read. The courage you show is especially needed when minds are perturbed and unsure as to what path to follow.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Reports Protestant Membership Grows in the Cities

Dean Sidney Sweet of Saint Louis Says Church Must Squarely Face Social Issues

★ Membership in 4,621 Protestant churches in 19 representative cities increased an overall of about 15 per cent over a 15-year period, the national convocation of City Churches meeting in Columbus, O., was informed. Releasing statistics of a study by his agency, H. Paul Douglass of New York, director of the committee for cooperative field research, reported that some 60.8 per cent of the 4,621 churches showed membership increases; 23.4 had a membership decline, and the remaining 15.8 had either less than a 10 per cent gain or loss.

He told the opening session of the two-day convocation that 14 of the 19 cities surveyed reported membership increases, four cities had no gain and one — Jersey City, N. J. — had a membership loss of 45 per cent. San Diego, Cal., reported the largest gain, an increase of 64 per cent.

An overall loss of 18 per cent in Sunday school enrollment was reported for 18 cities which provided figures in this phase of the survey. Only four of the 18 cities showed an increase. Less than one-third of the individual churches in the 18 cities reported a growing Sunday school enrollment, while more than six out of 10 showed a declining membership.

Elaborating further on the church survey, Douglass reported that the typical city church has a congregation of about 40 per cent of its membership each Sunday and that the average Sunday congregation is 150.

A survey of 2,000 city ministers, he said, revealed that 90 per cent devote full-time to their pastoral duties; 25 per cent have been with their church 10 years or more; one-third of the 2,000 have been in their pastorate less than 2 years, and 45 per cent from two to 10 years.

To increase the effectiveness of city church work, Douglass recommended comprehensive church planning; development of adequately-sized churches; adjustment of church programs to special community situations, and intelligent churching of newly urbanized communities.

Dean Sweet Speaks

The Very Rev. Sidney E. Sweet, dean of Christ Episcopal Cathedral, St. Louis, keynote speaker, said the Church's responsibility in national injustices and prejudices is definite.

"No one should join a Christian church who is not willing to live beside people of other nations and races in the spirit of Christian brotherhood," he declared. Fundamental Christian principles must be upheld, Dean Sweet said, "even if it costs us popularity and income, and we have no right to dismiss these principles lightly with such a phrase as 'business is business'."

To better qualify future ministers, seminaries should give student city ministers an understanding of the problems of industry, he urged, and city clergymen should have a general knowledge of city government, political organizations, court procedure, social agencies and related organizations.

Dean Sweet said the largest missionary field in the United States is in the cities and suggested an examination of the methods of locating and relocating churches in urban areas.

He stressed the importance of Christian training to reduce juvenile delinquency and condemned as "wasteful of both funds and energy" the existence of "too many subsidized small churches with inadequate equipment and inefficient leadership."

The Rev. James W. Parrish, Negro minister of the Shiloh Baptist church, Columbus, addressing a seminar on group relations, said Protestants must face frankly the question of racial segregation in their churches and racial restrictions in church-supported schools.

He proposed that predominantly white denominations integrate their Negro constituents on a basis of equal consideration "into all levels of denominational life, but particularly as regards the policy-making bodies and denominational staff." He also suggested that interdenominational agencies follow suit.

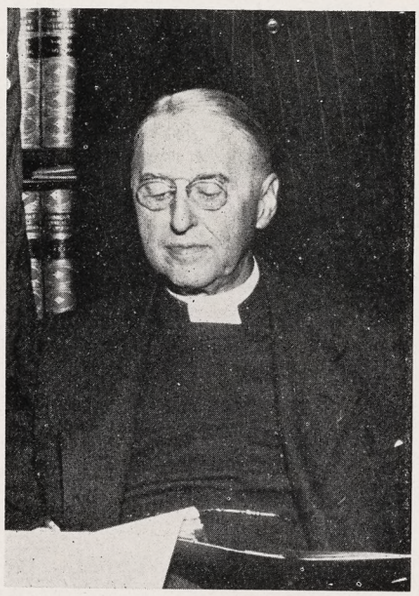
Mr. Parrish said the segregated church was reflected in the segregated community and urged that churches also should actively encourage non-segregated residential living, schools and recreation and fair employment practices.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

CONVENTION OF LOS ANGELES

★ The convention of Los Angeles was held at St. Paul's Cathedral, January 25-27, with the national church budget as well as the increased diocesan budget the chief matters considered. The diocese is seeking to raise $113,126 for the national budget this year, as against about half that sum in 1949. The diocese also will campaign for a capital fund of at least $750,000 to be used for a diocese house, to increase the facilities of our diocesan institutions, and to provide money for missionary expansion within the diocese.

TEACHER INSTITUTE IN MISSOURI



★ The diocese of Missouri and the Evangelical and Reformed Churches are jointly sponsoring a leadership training institute, meeting on Tuesdays, January 10-February 14. There is a different speaker at each meeting, all experts in youth work: the Rev. George Widdifield, in charge of education at St. Michael and St. George; Dr. George Saslow of the dept. of neuropsychiatry at Washington University; Leonard Haertter, director of the John Burroughs School; Mrs. Paul Rutledge of Kirkwood, a parent; Charles Brink, head of the family service society of St. Louis County, and the Rev. Kenneth Murphy, Congregationalist.

ANNUAL COUNCIL OF FLORIDA

★ The annual council of the diocese of Florida was held at St. John's, Tallahassee, January 25 — a streamlined affair that opened at 10:30 and closed at 3 the next afternoon. A feature was a dinner when the speaker was the Rev. Arnold Lewis of the staff at national headquarters, who spoke on the part laymen are playing in raising the 1950 budget.

PAULL SARGENT RESIGNS

★ The Rev. G. Paull T. Sargent announced his resignation as rector of St. Bartholomew's, New York, on January 22, effective November 1st, or at a subsequent date convenient to the vestry. He told the congregation, in an unexpected statement, that he believed the congregation's future should be entrusted to "new, strong, inspiring leadership." He has been the rector of the Park Avenue parish for seventeen years.

Judge Edward R. Finch, senior warden, read to the congregation a statement on behalf of the vestry, stating that the resignation has been accepted reluctantly and with regret after a week of deliberation.

Dr. Sargent's resignation is the second in January of rectors of mid-town churches, the resignation of the Rev. Henry Darlington from the Church of the Heavenly Rest having been previously announced.

BERKELEY HAS REUNION

★ The midwinter reunion of the alumni of the Berkeley Divinity School was held January 24, with a discussion of plans for a new chapel with the architect, Douglas W. Dorr, taking place in the morning. In the afternoon the speaker was W. Ted Gannaway who spoke on organizing laymen in a parish, and in the evening the speaker was Raymond E. Baldwin, former Senator from Conn., and a trustee of Berkeley.

FURNITURE EXCHANGE IN PENNSYLVANIA

★ A free furniture exchange is being operated by the diocese of Pennsylvania, and has resulted in a lively trade among the 204 parishes and missions. Items cleared out as excess or unusable by some parishes are quickly claimed by others. Among merchandise that has been taken are choir vestments, chairs, kneeling cushions, altar rails, Bibles, candelabra, fonts, hymn boards and books, organs, pianos, pulpit, sedalias, litany desks, and one 10-burner gas range.

VIRGINIA ALREADY OVER THE TOP

★ "Virginia accepts $60,700 expectation to be paid out of funds now pledged through fall campaign. All March 12 offering over and above this expectation."

So Bishop F. D. Goodwin of Virginia notified the National Council by wire that Virginia has not only accepted the increased 1950 budget, but has already completed raising it through the Every Member Canvass.

In addition, Virginia will go ahead with the educational campaign, One World in Christ, terminating with the Presiding

Bishop's radio address to congregations in Church on March 12, and the offering received from Virginia parishes that day will be added to the new expectation.

Virginia's payment to the national Church program totaled $53,298.70 in 1949.

SCHOOL OF RELIGION IN WILMINGTON

★ A school of religion for New Castle County, Delaware, is being held on successive Tuesdays at Trinity, Wilmington, January 17-February 7. There are two sessions each week, with the Rev. James A. Pike, chaplain at Columbia University, the lecturer at the first. Four courses are offered at the session period: the Church school by Mrs. Harold Kelleran of Washington; the home by the Rev. John E. Large, rector of St. Andrew's, Wilmington; marriage by the Rev. William C. Munds of Christ Church, Christiana Hundred, and social questions by Dean Brooks Mosley of the cathedral, Wilmington.

BISHOP HUANG SAYS ALL IS WELL

★ A Chinese student at Yale recently received a letter from Mrs. Quentin K. Y. Huang, wife of the Bishop of Yunnan-Kweichow, stating that she had heard from the bishop and that he reported Yunkwei "safe and sound." The bishop said further that there is no direct connection between Hongkong and Kunming, but that there may be a good chance to reopen the airway after the recognition of the Communist government by the government of Britain.

AUXILIARY MEETS IN BUFFALO

BISHOP GILBERT URGES UNITY

★ Bishop Gilbert of New York, preaching January 22 at the Church of St. Matthew and St. Timothy, declared that "the very peace of the world depends on the willingness of the followers of Christ to stand together and work with those others who call themselves Christians." The Christian world, he said, is faced with tremendous competition for the faith of the people, with the world confronted with so many different issues that "we don't know what tomorrow will bring."

CANTERBURY CLUBS MEET IN DENVER

★ The Canterbury Clubs of Colorado are to hold their winter meeting this Saturday, February 4, with representatives of all the colleges in the state present. Plans were made for promoting the Evergreen conference and a program developed for reaching high school seniors who are to enter colleges in the fall.

LOUISIANA HAS CONVENTION

★ President Clark G. Kuebler of Ripon College was the speaker at the dinner held in connection with the convention of Louisiana, held in New Orleans, January 25. He spoke on the program of the national Church and the budget which must be raised to cover it.

BISHOP NASH SPEAKS AT EEF MEETING

★ Bishop Norman Nash of Massachusetts was the headliner at a supper meeting of the Episcopal Evangelical Fellowship, held January 31st in Boston.

ADMIRAL BELKNAP RETIRES

★ Rear Admiral Reginald R. Belknap, who has been treasurer, bursar and registrar of the General Seminary for twenty years, has retired. The trustees have accepted the resignation with great regret and with warm appreciation for his services.

Admiral Belknap lived at the seminary and added to his routine duties many others of great value. He drafted the succession of plans for Seabury Hall, the new building, which plans were passed on by the standing committee of the seminary before being given to the architect. Seabury Hall is one of the most useful buildings in Chelsea Square, and one most admired by visitors.

The seminary has a valuable collection of portraits of distinguished Churchmen. Admiral Belknap had these examined and restored. He had the electric system, the water system, the lighting system, and the heating system renovated.

In quite a different field, Admiral Belknap did a signal service to the Seminary: publicity. He edited the Bulletin of the seminary, transforming it into a publication of great interest not only to alumni but also to Church people in general. Beginning at the General Convention of 1934, he has arranged seminary exhibits at every subsequent General Convention, except the two during the war and just after the war, which allowed no exhibits at all: 1943 and 1946. These exhibits won friends and contributors.

Besides his seminary position, Admiral Belknap, since his retirement from the navy, has held other important Church positions in New York. He has been a member of the vestry of Trinity since 1933 and junior warden since 1945. He was general manager of the General Convention of 1934, and a lay deputy from New York to the General Conventions since 1937. He is a member of the board of managers of the Seamen's Church Institute of New York.

DELAWARE GIVING INCREASED

★ A report from the diocese of Delaware notifies the National Council that the giving of the diocese for 1950 will be increased by 50%, congregation after congregation having completed their every member canvass, with complete acceptance of the increased 1950 budget. Many of the congregations wired the Presiding Bishop telling of acceptance of the quota and assuring him of their loyalty.

The Missionary District of Haiti sent greetings and announced "Enthusiastic acceptance of the quota for 1950."

WELLESLEY CONFERENCE REUNION

★ A Wellesley Conference reunion will be held in the crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral, Boston, on March 7th. The speaker will be the Rev. James A. Pike, chaplain at Columbia University.

ROLE OF CHURCH IN ECONOMICS

★ The roll of the Church in economic life was the subject of a panel discussion held at St. Paul's, Paterson, N. J. on January 23rd, under the auspices of the federation of churches. Charles T. Doubs, director of the national labor relations board in the New York area, gave the history of the labor movement, and stated that Churches should be interested in developing leaders for it. Most present leaders, he declared, are either Catholic or Jewish, even though the largest number of members are Protestant. He also said that Churches should send prospective ministers into the labor movement for a time in order to prepare them better for their jobs as ministers.

The Rev. Andrew Van Dyke, executive secretary of the Episcopal League for Social Action, said that the Church must give the moral undergirding to economic life, seeking justice and freedom for all concerned. He declared that the Soviet Union gives security but no political freedom, whereas the U. S. does just the opposite.

There were a number of speakers from the audience, among them the Rev. Harold Letts of the Lutheran social action commission who said that Churches should be concerned about economic problems.

The Rev. William L. Griffin Jr., rector of St. Paul's, presided at the meeting.

CONVENTION OF MICHIGAN

★ The convention of the diocese of Michigan is meeting this week, February 1-2, in Detroit, opening with the address by Bishop Emrich, immediately followed by one by Bishop Hubbard. One of the interesting matters to come before the convention is a recommended change in the canons to allow women to serve on vestries. The matter of an increased budget is, of course, the most important matter to be considered, with a total of $977,000 for national and diocesan work being requested. Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio was the speaker at the dinner last evening when the campaign for funds was launched.

NATIONAL YOUTH COMMISSION

★ The national youth commission will hold its annual meeting at Racine, Wis., Feb. 4-9 to assist in planning the program and strategy of the United Movement of the Church's Youth. The commission is made up of three young people and one adult advisor from each province, and four members at large elected by the youth convention and the National Council's division of youth. The presiding officer will be John Booty of Detroit and the conference will be attended by Dean Richard S. Watson of Seattle.

CATHEDRAL CANONS APPOINTED

★ Bishop Barry of Albany, enthroned as the 4th bishop of Albany on January 25, has appointed a large number of honorary canons of the Cathedral of All Saints. They are the Rev. Messrs. E B. Mayard and L. N. Gavitt of Albany; P. A. Paris of Little Falls; G. E. DeMille of Ticonderoga; Irving Rouillard of Saratoga Springs; C. V. Kling of Troy; R. C. Joudry of Gouverneur; G. A. Palmer of Ogdensburg; N. B. Godfrey of Massena; F. D. Evenson of Gilbertsville. In addition the Rev. Charles E. Hill of Williamstown, Mass., who was appointed in 1945, remains an honorary canon. There are two resident canons, the Rev. G. H. Barrow and the Rev. M. R. Becker. The appointments were confirmed by the chapter of the cathedral.

MORE CONFERENCES ARE PLANNED

★ As a result of the discussion on summer conferences and institutes called by the Rev. Tollie L. Caution, secretary for Negro work, at Seabury House, Greenwich, Conn., January 3-4, a committee is to be appointed to evaluate the present work of the conference and institute program; to estimate the Christian education needs in the country and to set up standards and objectives for programs for all conferences. Besides setting up this committee it was considered advisable to recommend the setting up of two new conferences, one for young people at Voorhees School and Junior College, Denmark, S. C., and a general conference (clergy and lay people) at Okolona College, Okolona, Miss.

These results came into being after the presentations of the locations and age groupings of the present conferences. After a statement of what a conference does and might do by Mrs. Ethel L. Cooper of Philadelphia, reports of the conferences held at St. Paul's School and St. Augustine's College were given by the Rev. Cedric E. Mills and the Rev. John C. Davis respectively and Miss Ellen Gammack, personnel secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, reported on the two types of life and work conferences held.

The need for new conferences were then presented. The Rev. J. W. Nicholson told of the need for a clergy conference in the Mid-West and West. Prof. Harold Taylor offered the use of Voorhees School and Junior College for a youth conference. The president of Okolona College, Mr. W. Milan Davis, offered the use of his college for a conference for clergy and lay people. Both of these reports and requests were warmly accepted.

A note of encouragement and appreciation was given by the Rev. John Heuss, director of the department of Christian education, on the thinking of this group on conference work and procedures. Mr. Heuss spoke of the hope of forming a committee on camps and conferences as part of the new Christian education program. This body's findings and that of the committee would be of great value to the thinking of this new committee, he said.

JOHN G. MARTIN RETIRES

★ The Rev. John G. Martin has resigned, effective March 1, as the administrator of the Hospital of Saint Barnabas and for Women and Children, Newark. He became the superintendent of St. Barnabas in 1923, and has held numerous positions with distinction, both within and outside the Church. When he received an honorary doctorate from General in 1944 the citation was as follows, which we quote as expressing the sentiments of The Witness;

"Most honored Dean, I present to you the Reverend John Goodridge Martin, an honored alumnus of this Seminary, Master of the Hospital of Saint Barnabas, in the City of Newark, a priest who has now been laboring in the Church of God for thirty years; an assiduous man, faithful and efficient, his good fame is witnessed to by fellow citizens within as without the Church.

"How splendid it is to be eminent among famous men; to succor the afflicted; to give health to the sick; to set men free from peril! This is the way of highest virtue; this the road that leads to Heaven.

"You see, Most Worthy Dean, the crown this splendid alumnus wears. I ask therefore that you, by the authority which this Seminary has committed to you, should here publicly decorate him with the degree of Doctor in Sacred Theology, honoris causa."

LIBERIA HAS NEW COLLEGE

★ The catalog of the newly-opened Cuttington College, Suakoko, Liberia, shows pictures of Principal S. C. Edwards, and of the new buildings, and outlines courses being taught, both academic and theological.

"The new Cuttington," the catalog says, "is an attempt on the part of the Church in the missionary district of Liberia, under the leadership of the bishop, the Rt. Rev. Bravid W. Harris, to provide a basically Christian education and to play its part in the preparation of Liberian youth for the new age. Cuttington will exist primarily to promote and foster under the highest Christian ideals, the educational and spiritual development of the youth of Liberia and of any other youths who may be attracted to its program."

In the new Cuttington organization Bishop Harris is president; Mr. Edwards, vice-president; the Hon. H. Lafayette Harmon, secretary; and other trustees include the Hon. C. L. Simpson, vice-president of Liberia, Bishop Willis J. King of the Methodist Church in Liberia, the Hon. J. W. Person, secretary of public instruction, Republic of Liberia, Senator J. A. H. Jones, Mr. J. E. Cess Pelham and the Ven. S. B. Yudusie.

DOM GREGORY DIX TO VISIT

★ Dom Gregory Dix, prior of Nashfom Abbey, Anglican Benedictines, is to conduct a mission next Fall at St. Ignatius', New York. It will open October 8th and run through the following Sunday. The missioner is the author of "The Shape of the Liturgy."

DEDICATES CHAPEL IN HONOLULU

★ Bishop Kennedy of Honolulu recently dedicated a chapel at the conference center at Mokuleia, with 175 persons present. He commended the diocesan laymen for the work that had gone into the making of the chapel, which was a project of their organization.

ARCHDEACON FOR MINNESOTA

★ The Rev. Vernon E. Johnson, rector of St. Paul's, Winona, Minn., has been appointed archdeacon for the diocese of Minnesota. In announcing the appointment on January 21 Bishop Keeler stated that he has decided that an archdeacon will give him the needed assistance in the missionary work of the diocese. Last September the Rev. James P. Clements of Tyler, Texas, was elected suffragan bishop but declined.

The appointment gives the diocese two archdeacons, the other being the Ven. George H. Goodreid of Park Rapids, in charge of Indian work, who was on the Witness Honor Roll for 1949.

SOUTHERN OHIO REPORTS

★ Southern Ohio has notified the National Council that its every member canvass is now complete, and that missionary giving in the diocese for 1950 will be 26% more than 1949. The diocese decided immediately after General Convention that it would present the increased 1950 budget in the regular fall Canvass, rather than divide it, principally because they have underway a large campaign for a college building fund.

The bishop and chapter has voted to set the diocesan expectation for the missionary budget of 1950 at $112,000, which is $25,089 more than the So. Ohio mathematical quota for 1950.

"This is pretty clear evidence that the new budget is not beyond reach of the Church, and that what one diocese did in a single campaign certainly ought to be accomplished by other dioceses in two campaigns," commented Bishop Henry W. Hobson, adding a warm commendation of the fine loyalty of the people of his diocese.

EDITORIALS

Christmas in Lent

IN our issue of December 15 we had an editorial which told the story of one woman's Christmas gift. She handed a check to her bishop as a thank offering for her friends and then wrote them notes informing them of her "gift to the Church as a thank offering for your friendship that the real meaning of Christmas, the coming of God's peace to a troubled world, may be more widely proclaimed."

Later we received a letter from Bishop Hines of Texas informing us that this gift had helped educate the children of a clergyman; pay the hospital bill of a deserving layman; give a girl from Mexico and a West Indian an opportunity for education in the United States.

Many letters have been received requesting that we reprint this editorial, several of which have appeared in Backfire. One of them was from the Rev. Leland Stark, rector of the Epiphany, Washington, in which he says: "I suppose we all feel 'Canute-like' against the rising tide of Christmas secularization, but stand we must and I for one would like to see this editorial reprinted and distributed widely."

It is therefore now available as a six-page leaflet of ordinary envelope size. The clergy do several mailings to their people during Lent. It is our belief that people will respond to the idea it contains—a gift to the Church, through the rector, to use at his discretion. Even the gift of one person will be significant. The letter from Bishop Hines setting forth the significant accomplishment of one woman's gift, also reprinted in the leaflet, testifies to that.

We all complain about the secularization of Christmas. Here is a chance to do something about it, not in the early days of December when it is too late, but now—a campaign in Lent to prepare for Christmas, 1950.

Single copies of the leaflet "Make Christmas Christian" are five cents; but of course if anything is to be accomplished it must be widely distributed. We will therefore send 25 copies for $1; 50 for $1.50; 100 for $2. Orders should be sent to The Witness, Tunkhannock, Penna., and we will appreciate payment with the order so that we may continue to keep the price at a minimum.

"QUOTES"

WE are a quantitative people. We love to have the biggest church, or theater, or population, or bank deposits of any city in the world. That completes our happiness. But I fancy God isn't interested in our bigness. It is not the bigness of the mountain but the purity of the gem which the mountain conceals that delights the Creator. Mere obesity isn't a virtue. Mere quantity of things cannot make a mean man anything but a mean man. If you really want to change the fraction, don't fuss about the numerator. That will remain about as it is. Seek a smaller denominator and you will have a much larger fraction. Better be numbered with the qualitative few than with the quantitative multitude.

—IRVING P. JOHNSON
Founder of The Witness

Stop This Now

THE tocsin should be sounded immediately now that our Secretary of State has announced that we—the U. S.—are prepared to do away with the three year old United Nations' diplomatic boycott of Franco's Spain. No one can doubt that this is the beginning of worse things to come—the camel's nose in the tent again. If this goes through, our whole-hearted government support, diplomatically, militarily and financially will be gradually thrown to a regime that has only brought fear, slavery and poverty to the Spanish nation. The reasons the Secretary gives are puerile. "First; there is no sign of an alternative government." We see what we want to see; he blandly ignores the reports of many visitors to Spain (such as Del Vayo) who tell us of a growing revolt that is not to be discounted. "Second; the internal position is strong." Page Dictator Peron of Argentina who is now demanding cash on the barrel from his former friend. "Third; Spain is a part of western Europe which should not be isolated from normal relations with that area."

So? Would he have said the same thing about Hitler, Franco's dearest pal? Of Hitler Franco has said again and again—and never retracted—that he was in complete sympathy with Der Fuerher's ideas and ideals. Lewis Carroll help us—we are about to become buddies (well, not right now—give us time) with the avowed Fascist government that sided during the war with our enemies; always. And was responsible, however indirectly, for the slaughter of countless numbers of our youth.

What is behind this should be obvious to the casual reader. A sop to the hounds who are baying about our commendable refusal to be involved, after backings and fillings, in the Chinese fracas. Another sop to the Roman Church which has been constantly pleading for this. Did not Archbishop Spellman come back from Spain enchanted with meeting the bloody-handed Franco and call him "that great Christian gentleman"? A sop to those whose God is profit—and let the floods come.

Secretary Acheson unctuously stated that this decision "would in no sense signify approval of the Spanish regime." If that is so what, in his devious mind, did the UN disapproval signify? Was it just dishonest, double-tongued diplomacy? We doubt it. We hope our readers will write to the Secretary of State immediately and let him know—what he apparently is jauntily ignorant of—that the American public is not so easily fooled.

MANY people are playing a game of picking their own candidates for man of the half century. One of the more popular news commentators said the other night that he was convinced that the greatest spiritual leaders, and hence the men of the half century, were the present Pope and Gandhi, in that order. He brushed aside the suggestion that the late Archbishop Temple might rate in there even ahead of the Pope, because of his spiritual fathering of the ecumenical movement, Christian unity and his social vision generally, by saying "never heard of him."

It was something like that nineteen hundred years ago. The great historian of the age, Josephus, mentions Jesus once, or, maybe, twice. Outside of the Christian literature, with the possible exception of a reference to him in the Talmud, Jesus is not found in the written remnants that we have of the first half century. Something of the Christian movement had come to the ears of the Roman Governor Pliny about 112 A.D., and secular letters do have definite mention of Jesus then. Pliny must have set up a kind of un-Roman activities committee, and sent an anonymous agent to spy on the Christians. The unknown investigator's report, which was transmitted to the emperor is extant, and it tells about this group which sings a hymn "to Christ, a God." The pundits never heard of Jesus, probably not until after even a century.

Our knowledge is too meager, even with the great development of communications, for us to go out on a limb and say who has been top man in the last fifty years. We'll leave it to other periodicals and persons to be shown fools by the years.

Needed: A New Approach to Education

By EMMA LOUISE BENIGNUS
Professor of Religion, Randolph-Macon Woman's College

WERE the question asked "What is the state of adult religious education in the Episcopal church?," the answer would be terse—"almost non-existent." Yet constantly we lament the condition of our children's Christian nurture. Funds are spent on more literature, more visual aids, more equipment; research is done on the minutiae of child psychology, ad infinitum. But the primary source of any child's education, the adults in his environment, receives the barest attention.

In the summary report of the plans by the national Christian education department, adult education is last on the list of "four new directions." According to the report "at present it (adult education) remains a division in little more than name. No money is provided for it in the budget, and it has no personnel." But it is the intention of the department to "ask the National Council to consider where funds can be found now if possible to make a real adult education program possible." Such request deserves to be accepted as an imperative appeal and merits the hearty cooperation not only of the National Council but of the entire Church.

A public health nurse, who sponsored dental hygiene among school children in a city neighborhood populated with foreign-born, reported that "we quickly saw how futile it was to tell children about the importance of brushing their teeth so long as the parents remained indifferent to this health measure. We took the hygiene program into the homes, taught the mothers, and got results at once." The lesson here is so simple, it would be presented with apologies were it not apparent that in the Church's educational program adequate attention is not paid to the taut interrelation between child and adult education. Experience in both secondary schools and colleges affords ample testimony that success in education hinges on personnel rather than on equipment. If funds are scarce and a choice must be made, it will pay dividends in the long run to invest in parents rather than in added pamphlets, in teachers rather than in more technical supplies. Religiously literate adults can manage to cope with second-rate textbooks, or no books at all, but the potential value of the best of lesson plans is squandered in the hands of indifferent and ignorant "faculty."

In recent years there has been available for Church school use and adult consumption more attractive and informative religious literature, from a variety of sources, than usually is realized, yet religious literacy has not increased proportionately. It is time now to ask the reason for this lag, and to ask, also, if the problem of Christian nurture is going to be answered simply by the purification and improvement of the methods heretofore pursued, or if perhaps a radical change of approach is necessary. If neglected Point Four, adult education, of the national program, received the attention and appropriations it deserves, some unknown success in child nurture conceivably might result. Surely the wisdom of the Church can equal the perspicacity of the health nurse who discerned that Mama commanding a toothbrush has more effect on sonny's dental hygiene than the most clever movie of a corroding molar!

Want to Teach

COUPLED with the question of should adults and parents become more prominent objects of the Christian nurture program, there is the further question of what they shall be taught. Most of the laity is uninformed about everything that really matters religiously. The nature of Christ, God as creator and redeemer, the nature of man, how to pray, what Christian living and love are, the meaning of the eucharist, Old and New Testament theology and history, Church history, doctrine,polity—all contributory to a rich and intelligent Christian life — are unexplored fields to the vast majority of churchmen. What little adult education is promoted in the Church today is an important, but nonetheless, on peripheral rather than pivotal subjects. Certainly the Lenten study programs of the Woman's Auxiliary have been among the best concerted efforts within the Church to teach adults, and are deserving of commendation, especially such series as that of last year on the prophets. On the other hand, one cannot but question the wisdom of concentrating, as intended for this Lent, on a study of Japan, when so much that is basic to a Christian relationship with not only the Japanese but with any people remains untaught. A course in Christian anthropology would make us simultaneously more understandingly sympathetic of the Japanese, the Africans, and the Mexicans as well! One of the great flaws of both secular and religious education is that we tend to ride on the rim of the wheel rather than at the hub.

Leadership Needed

A THIRD matter for consideration is the kind of teaching necessary in the Church. There is need for the most skilled teaching leadership possible, by persons for whom pedagogy is an art and a passion, who have the Christian commitment, the religious knowledge, and the personal sensitivity to make Christian learning the thrilling and exciting experience which it can be. Those who formulate the adult program ought to be persons of reputation in college and adult education. No university would summon a secondary school teacher without experience in adult instruction and commission him to formulate a curriculum for older students. The Church for the most part has not expended such practical care and the price has been failure to do justice to the spiritual and intellectual potential within its ranks. In the first place it is an educational fallacy to suppose that one nation-wide study program for adults can be of significant value for all. The recent Christian marriage pamphlets proved provocative for some persons with whom the author used them, but for a second group accustomed to reading meaty books the pamphlets were disappointingly superficial. We err seriously when we lump either our children or our adult public into one intellectual bracket and attempt to produce one book, one series of pamphlets, one set of lesson plans universally applicable. It would be impractical for the Church to try to provide a sufficient variety of suitable study materials, but that fact simply substantiates the need for trained teachers who have enough breadth and depth of religious education to overcome the deficiencies in the materials which are bound to exist. It is not printed matter we lack so much as teaching personnel—clergy, parents, teachers, religious education directors, and just plain teachers at work in the Church, who are devoted and sufficiently informed, flexible, imaginative, and penetrating in their understanding of God and man and their interrelationship to make Christianity a vital factor for parents in the Church. The kind of teaching we need is as yet almost unknown among Episcopalians, but in the isolated instances where it does exist, the results are conspicuous and convincing. An example of the fruitfulness of carefully and adequately prepared teaching, coupled with serious study by the members of the group, can be seen in Washington, D. C., where the Rev. Albert Mollegen of the Virginia Episcopal Seminary is rousing an ever-increasing group of laymen with his bold and daring and demanding weekly instruction of the basic Christian questions.

A Suggested Plan

THIS raises the fourth point. It is not likely that national headquarters will have the appropriations in the near future needed to finance the type of adult education program called for. But neither would it be necessary for the National Council to underwrite an extremely expensive program if skill were expended in using the means for adult education already at hand. One top-notch teacher of religion (clergy or lay, man or woman, and good enough to command professorial status in the secular field) serving in each diocese, or shared jointly by the churches of a large community, could promote the following means of adult instruction at minimum cost to the Church:

One, he could lead cell prayer and study groups, or assist clergy, r. e. directors and laymen if qualified, to do this in every parish in the diocese.

Two, offer lecture and discussion courses to the laity, or help the clergy and competent laity to do so. In a southern city a college religion teacher offered a year of Old Testament theology and a year of New Testament theology to women in the community who met twice weekly, paid $15, bought and read the required books, wrote papers or passed exams, and enrolled for more the next year! In another city a clergyman and a layman ran a layman's school of religion for six weeks during the summer, with people attending daily.

Three, the laity can be encouraged to use whatever advantageous study facilities are available in the community. A young mother interested in religion in art took a course at a local college in the history of art, and received help from the instructor in preparing a series of illustrated lectures in religious art for the people of the parish. The college and the national art museums supplied the lantern and the slides. Or again, we know a music teacher who used the city public library record department to supply recordings for a set of illustrated talks in the history of Church music. There is the English professor who keeps Lent every year with his students by reading religious poetry with them at a weekly open house. The evenings inevitably end with a theological discussion of some sort, and with family prayers. He would be amenable to offering the same opportunity to the men of his parish, but his clergyman has never gotten around to fitting him into the parish life.

The contribution of none of these three people is costly to the Church. To be sure, these are not subjects of the most importance but they have far better quality than what is offered in most of our educational programs, and they have the further advantage of incorporating laymen into the Church's teaching enterprise. There is no reason why these need be isolated examples. Almost every community harbors numerous overlooked resources for the instruction of the public which lie fallow in our midst. We have need of leaders, clergy and lay, who have teaching on the brain, educated enough, creative enough, responsible enough to dig out the talent which exists dormant at our feet and put it to work. Specialists at headquarters, writing literature, doing research, field secretaries, all have their contribution to make, but what is needed most and could be had cheapest in the long run is a battery of talented teachers at work among the people.

Four, in cities where there are colleges, good prep schools, night schools and university extension divisions, arrangements often can be made for adults to take courses in the school's religion department and/or in child psychology, ethics, history or in any of the useful cognate fields offering material of advantage to parents and youth leaders, etc. Many colleges give summer school courses in religion now which are worth anyone's while. In adult classes in Old and New Testament taught in recent years at a large university there was a total absence of Episcopalians, yet there were enrolled laymen and women of six other denominations, Sunday school teachers, superintendents, program leaders, and interested parents, who came at their own expense or were financed by their congregation, to gain information for use among those for whom they assumed responsibility. If there were in each diocese or city someone concerned especially with getting the laity to appropriate the community's educational offerings surprisingly much could be gained at minimum cost to the Church. For example, a Baptist church concerned with the ineffectual worship leadership among the ladies' circles, enrolled two women in a local college course on public worship. They, in turn, with the help of the professor and the college library, formulated a shorter series of instructions for their own women.

Summer Conferences

THE long-established summer conferences are deserving of greater support. Some few of the conferences are famous for their commendable work, but the number who do a superior teaching job among either children or adults is all too small. Surprisingly much can be learned in a week's session, and if the experience is of the right sort it can be the introduction to and the springboard for the laity's interest in continued qualified instruction during the winter months. It seems a pity also that so many of our skilled members year after year go unincorporated in the faculties of the summer conferences. Their mere presence in a place of leadership would be a source of encouragement to their fellow parents and citizens.

The author has had occasion recently to visit seminaries and women's training schools of other denominations, and has noted in several instances that some local mothers were auditing courses. One such mother frankly attributed her reconversion to a classroom lecture on agape and eros which, she said, was "the opening door to an entirely new understanding of love and sacrifice." Episcopal seminaries and women's training schools, of course, are few and widely scattered, and currently the seminaries are swamped with students, but in days when there was ample room there was little conception of the seminary as a means for increased lay education, yet there is no reason why it can not and should not, within limits, make such contribution.

It seems extremely necessary that one of the seminaries centrally located become headquarters for a laymen's summer school. This would be staffed by seminary and college professors, and others highly skilled in their fields who also know how to teach adults. Courses should be four to six weeks of concentrated study on topics fundamental to Christian living, and in addition, the parents and adults who attend should be given an opportunity to experience what meaningful prayer, worship, and Christian fellowship really are. If every diocese sent two well-chosen persons to such a summer school per year there would be a steadily growing number of parents and leaders more fit to participate significantly in the Church's life and the nurture of the young.

A program such as herein suggested would be financed and formulated primarily on a diocesan, or even more localized basis, with the expense and responsibility of it dispersed throughout the community as much as possible. The chief expenditure would be for ingenious teachers whose reason d'etre in the community would be the alerting of parents and would-be parents and all who touch the young, to the meaning of Christianity and to the contribution which they can and must make to the nurture of our children. Such, of course, is the function of the clergy and the women workers, but not all clergy are teachers, and unfortunately many of the women who could do better teaching in their jobs labor under much too inadequate learning. Certainly erudition is no guarantee of Christian love and living, but when we rouse our people to belief we have the joint obligation of helping them comprehend what they believe. God, after all, endowed man not only with heart and will but also with mind and they work together with mutual benefit. The Church needs not so much pamphlets and research, (let skilled child psychologists do the research) but teachers, scores of teachers who will constitute a peripatetic school of religion circulating among the people, who will concentrate especially on mothers and fathers to help them teach their young. Teachers—men and women, clergy and lay—who teach because they are full to overflowing and desire to share what they know of the wisdom of the ages about God and man. Such persons are not unknown in our society. Perhaps they could be enlisted if anyone would think to call.

For Men Only

By HAROLD E. SAWYER
The Bishop of Erie

LAST week I made two male converts to the Church, one of whom had no previous contacts whatsoever with a Christian Church. I was reminded of the old French Abbe who at eighty years of age confessed that his ministry of fifty-five years had been most fruitful for he had once converted one man to Christianity. One convert in anyone's life, priest or layman, is a magnificent thing and can label that life "successful" though he may do little else.

For the question is "Where are the men?"

We are told by anthropologists that nature has been amazingly considerate in balancing the proportion of the two sexes. There are slight deviations to be sure, but generally speaking, there is born male and female in equal numbers. In our public schools there are boys and girls in equal proportions. In our theatres, at concerts, at social activities, at lectures, there is quite sure to be men and women in proper ratio.

But in church—how different! The one place on earth where men and women should be side by side in the worship of their Creator and Redeemer, the men simply aren't! Surely men realize their responsibility in sharing with their women in the procreation and nurture of their children. Surely they must realize the church is the one place where their children are being cared for and treated well in the best ways of life. One would expect men to be in church for their children's sake if not for their own, by their wife's side.

Surely men must acknowledge that, despite her numerous faults, the Church is the one stable influence which can preserve the "Good Life" and the benefits of civilization as we know it today.

Yet the first thing a stranger would see upon visiting one of our churches would be the lack of men present. There are heartening exceptions but the preponderance of women over men is evident everywhere. Now I try to make a certain allowance for many years of experience has taught me always to look for allowances. I firmly believe women are created more intensely religious than men. God and nature have given them this great quality—they are mothers—they are to be centers of spiritual life in their families—they have been given a peculiar deep intuition somewhat different from that of men.

Don't misunderstand me—I believe men, all men, are deeply religious but women feel it in a different way and express it differently. So, I make allowance to a certain extent for the feminine majority in our churches. But still, I must ask, "Where are the men?" Moreover, don't misunderstand me or think I am depreciating the presence of women—they are performing the duty of which men are neglectful.

Moreover this is not alone true in church attendance. When I was a parish priest, making parish calls—saved only by sense of humor—I was in nine times out of ten treated as if I had come only to see the distaff side of the family. If perchance I caught a man at the door, he would invariably say, "Come in, you want to see Mrs. Jones and the girls." And if I would let him do it, he would excuse himself at once. Usually I would say "No, I came to see you, Mr. Jones, and the boys." I would never let him feel he was out of place in my parish visitation. Incidentally, matters were never helped by the wife saying, "I am glad you caught my husband at home. I want you to talk to him about going to church, or being confirmed." This is almost fatal in dealing with men.

Effeminate Church

ALL this adds up to far more than the fact that men are absent from the worship of Almighty God. The minister who expects mostly women in his congregation is bound to develop a system of preaching peculiarly feminine. I quote from an English editorial—"The worship and whole ethos of the Church are in danger of becoming intellectually, emotionally and practically lopsided. It is this lack of balance which we are concerned to emphasize." There is a distinct danger of the Church becoming effeminate in its outlook. I do not disparage the need of feminine qualities in religion, but these must be balanced by masculine, virile power—the same as in all other departments of life. Too often, indeed, do men get the false idea that priests are kindly, well-meaning individuals whose job is not of the hard-fisted kind but rather of the soft, pleasing nature associated with women's societies and social trivialities.

The Christian religion was from its founder's time a strong, tough work to do in a stubborn world. It took a pretty hard personality to weather the early years of the Church. It was a man's Church, although there were "of devout women, not a few." The struggle through the ages against overwhelming forces has been violent and severe. Today its job is vigorous and strenuous.

We want doctors in the Church—we want lawyers and carpenters — we want "hard-boiled" swarthy men to work, pray and give of themselves by the side of the devout, understanding, holy women—for the Christian religion can be itself only as it is composed of such.

To the men! Men—this whole business of the Church really does make all the difference in the world to every man born into it. "If you will not recognize Almighty God by public worship; if you will not receive instruction; if you will not be confirmed; if you will not accept our Lord's own invitation to living fellowship with himself, then you must take the eternal consequences." Your profession (doctor, lawyer, merchant or what you are) will not be as fine as it would be, your family-life will not be as virtuous as it could be, your children suffer, your social life will not be what it might and you are stymying the whole progress of the best things in life.

We do not speak of the future. But every man must some time meet his God. What have you got to take with you? What have you to present to him when he calls your name?

That is the hard word of the gospel. It alone is a word worthy of the attention of free men.

Retreat to Advance

By W. ROBERT HAMPSHIRE
Rector of St. Thomas', Farmingdale, N. Y.

IT is probably characteristic of our day that a workable, scriptural, rewarding device for reviving the life of the Church should be looked upon with suspicion by many members of the Episcopal Church. At a recent diocesan conference, in which the bishop was outlining plans for the future, a layman present objected vociferously to the idea of using certain property for retreats. His objection was based on the groundless fear that the retreat movement is part of a plot to introduce benediction of the Blessed Virgin, and Creeping to the Lavabo. While it is true that Anglo-Catholics generally have fostered the growth of the retreat movement in this country it is far from being another party badge.

At a conference held in an Episcopal Franciscan Friary a few months ago there were happily present at least one gray-suited moustached clergyman, and one collar-and-tie bishop. The conference was held under the auspices of the retreat committee of the American Church Union. Most of those present were Anglo-Catholic secular priests, or monks from various orders in their religious habits. There was a unity hard to find in other such mixed groups in the Church. The reason? All were convinced of the validity of the retreat idea. All were interested in propagating the practice of retreat for clergy (including bishops) and laity.

Some of the problems standing in the way of the growth of the retreat movement are the indifference of the clergy, lack of proper retreat houses, lack of skilled retreat conductors, and the failure to think of a retreat as a normal part of gospel Christianity.

It should be necessary only to point out the frequent withdrawals and quiet-times of Jesus to indicate that making a retreat is a spiritual necessity and not a devotional luxury. Going into the silence, the quiet waiting upon God, the listening for the still small voice—these are a part of real religion in any age. Group participation in such exercises over the period of a weekend can make a big difference in our feelings toward one another in the Church. There can be more truth in posters announcing The Church Is One if and when high, low, broad, liberal, and catholic join together in such spiritual work under competent human leadership—but primarily under the direction of God the Holy Ghost.

The Conductor

OFTEN the wrong kind of clergy accept responsibility for giving such retreats as are now held. The pious voice delivering mush to the faithful is not what is called for. On the other hand a series of strong sermons given sitting down is not the answer either. The retreat conductor must be a man of prayer, familiar with the language and customs of the Kingdom of God, not so intent upon being fascinating that he is willing to be fallacious, and he must be a man who believes in retreats and makes at least one a year himself. His place is to draw the retreatants not to himself but to God. He is a guide pointing out important things as he goes with the people into the presence of God. They must look at the pictures he points out. They must do the praying. They must be the ones to promise to conform to Christ's will in particular ways affecting them. Training in what not to do, as well as what to do, should be included in seminary training. But most of all what is needed is good men who are good priests who make retreats themselves.

If there is an awakening desire to resort to this Jesus way of growing in faith and unity retreat houses will be found and purchased or given. At present we need to demonstrate the need by using what we have. There are many religious houses and conference centers to be utilized for this purpose. There are many Church schools, colleges, seminaries and other centers which could be used out of term time. The immediate reaction in certain quarters—"We have no retreat house"—can be met in most dioceses with a possible if not perfect answer among existing physical plants. There is also the wide-spread feeling that there is something unworthy and useless about small beginnings. After all Jesus felt that "two or three" were just the right number.

To attempt to regiment the clergy of a diocese into making an annual retreat would probably prove a tremendous flop. Some clergy would be present because they knew the archdeacon or diocesan was taking attendance. Some would stay away "just because." The ideal seems to be that of many English dioceses where an experienced and gifted retreat conductor is secured; proper arrangements are made for housing the clergy in private rooms or cubicles; an adequate chapel is available; and good food is provided. When all is arranged the clergy are invited to attend, knowing in advance that the bishop will be present. He will be there as a priest among priests, not leading the retreat but leading his own clergy into retreat. With the clergy convinced from actual practice many "insuperable" barriers to the movement will disappear.

Our day is one in which people do not turn naturally to a retreat as a method for re-charging spiritual batteries, or reorienting frustrated lives. The very fact that it has ceased to be a natural part of Christian living makes it all the more necessary. Jesus did not consider his forty day retreat at the beginning of his ministry time wasted. He knew it was essential. He knows what is in man. He still invites us to come apart with him and rest awhile.

After a surfeit of new methods, new campaigns, new slogans, new posters many who are convinced of the necessity for retreats wish to commend the use by the whole Church. The effect will be, in short, to turn the Church over to Christ and let him run it.

A Word With You

By HUGH D. McCANDLESS
Rector of the Epiphany, New York

Instress

THIS is another word of Hopkins'. I have had it explained to me so much and so beautifully that I am now quite bewildered about its meaning, but I still have a hunch that it means an effort to seek reality in small things, in near things.

Such an effort must be made by every bishop, priest, and layman in the Church, but I wonder if the trend today is not all against it. It is true that modern man is too individualistic, but it is also true that our modern political and commercial life show a decided tendency to crush out all personal individuality.

If you go into the vestibule of your parish church you will find beautifully decorated posters telling you when the canvass will be held, when the Presiding Bishop will speak, urging you to go to the children's offering, or the women's offering, or to join the Red Cross, and so on and so forth. Or, you may find a sign crudely printed on wrapping paper indicating at what hour some special services are to be. It would seem to the complete outsider that certain offerings were of much greater importance than services. If you pick up a leaflet, and if it is a beautiful piece of printing, on fine paper, it is very likely to be an appeal for the support of something or other outside the parish. If it is a somewhat mediocre piece of mimeographing, it is more apt to tell you when you can come and say your prayers with the rest of the people.

Some printer or commercial artist who entered a typical church vestibule, would be very likely to assume that where our treasure is there our hearts are also, and that we were much less interested in the individual than we were in the mass effect on the general public of our combined charitable efforts.

EVANGELIST CHARGES FLOGGING

An evangelist told newsmen at Atlanta that a group of masked men dragged him from the pulpit of a church in Cairo, Ga., and flogged him for half an hour. The victim was Michael A. Pacardi of Columbus, Ohio, who identified himself as an ordained minister of the Pentecostal Church. The church where he was preaching is for Negroes. He said the masked men were in street clothes, with their faces covered, and that they were armed with shotguns and pistols. They dragged him, he claims, into an automobile where they asked: "What do you preach to those Negroes, Communism? Why don't you preach in a white man's church? We don't mix with Colored people down here." He was later beaten and flogged, then driven back to Cairo and told to "get out of town in 30 minutes." The evangelist said he drove to Thomasville, Ga., where he reported the incident to the police. He left his car there and came to Atlanta by bus when the police told him it was a case for the FBI. Agents of FBI refused comment on the case.

MISSIONS CONFERENCE HOLD MEETING

Vigorous support of President Truman's program to aid economically backward areas was voted at the annual session of the Foreign Missions Conference, meeting at Buck Hill Falls, Pa. The conference is made up of 108 mission boards and agencies of 58 major Protestant denominations in the U. S. and Canada. The conference also urged that surplus food in this country be made available for overseas relief.

MACKAY URGES RECOGNITION OF COMMUNIST CHINA

President John A. MacKay of Princeton Theological Seminary and president of the International Missionary Council, has urged that the U. S. recognize the Communist government in China. Addressing 200 Church leaders in New York, he warned that failure to do so "might alienate the people of China forever." Having just returned from a nine weeks' tour of East Asia, he gave the following reasons for his opinion: the excellent behavior of the Communist armies in their conquest of the China mainland; the fact that missionary activities has not been disrupted; the widespread view that China's Communism will take a "different expression" than in Russia and Eastern Europe; the overwhelming support of the people for the new regime.

The Friends, through their executive board, likewise have urged recognition. In support of their recommendation the Quakers state that their workers in China note "a marked enthusiasm for the new regime"; that the success of the Communists "cannot be attributed to the Russians," that the Chinese people have turned against America because of "the large-scale American military intervention during 1947 and 1948."

"No Friends workers," the letter to the President continued, "have ever seen any Russian military equipment or Russian military advisors in China" and they deny that Russia has imposed "a puppet regime" on China. About 400 workers of the Quaker relief agency have been at work in various parts of China during the past eight years.

CLERGYMEN DENOUNCE THE VATICAN

Clergymen of the Churches of Christ in Dallas, Texas, recently delivered sermons denouncing Vatican charges that their mission in Italy had disseminated Communist ideas. The charges have been contained in the Vatican newspaper. The Texas protest, which also went to President Truman and the state department, resulted from complaints by a group of Churches of Christ evangelists that they had been subjected to violence in four towns around Rome.

The Tree of Life

By DAVID K. MONTGOMERY
Dean, St. Paul's Cathedral, Springfield, Ill.

"Among the fairest things that grow
Upon the Tree we find
The seven holy Sacraments
God's gift to all mankind."
—Gabriel Gillett

The title of this book was suggested by the above poem from a collection called A Garden of Song. The analogy originates in the Book of Revelation, where the Cross is described as the Tree whose leaves are for the healing of nations. Dean Montgomery believes that until we understand why He gave us the whole sacramental system of the Church, God cannot do much "healing of nations."

His book is an interpretation of the Seven Sacraments in the light of the Seven Words from the Cross. It shows clearly why the sacramental system must be the basis of the Church's life, and what it must mean in our own lives.

For the Lenten season and for the whole of the Christian year, THE TREE OF LIFE has something important to say to every layman, and, in particular, the adult approaching Confirmation.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

FAVORABLE REPORT ON CAMPS

A report which depicted favorably the conditions at three concentration camps in the Russian zone of Germany was defended in Boon by Bishop Otto Dibelius of Berlin, head of the Evangelical Church in Germany. The report said that it would be "intolerably wrong to compare these modern camps with concentration camps run during the Nazi regime." The Bishop declared that churchmen must have the courage to report what they see, regardless of political considerations. "What is being said for the sake of truth and love," he said, "may be disagreeable from political viewpoints." He also declared that Protestants have no reason to complain about the situation of the Church in the Soviet zone since Russian officials were "striving loyally" to stick by agreements reached with the Church concerning religious education in the East zone schools.

Bishop Dibelius also supported Martin Niemoeller who had previously stated that German unity under Communism was preferable to the west-east split. (Witness, Jan. 12).

EXTENSION DEPARTMENT FOR SEMINARY

The Theological College of the diocese of Montreal has established an extension department for the training of the public. It is open to laymen and women of all denominations and now has an enrollment of 321, about a quarter of whom are studying for a diploma or degree. Courses range from theology to audio-visual aids but the most popular are the courses in Old and New Testament. Classes are held each weekday evening.

PEACE CONVENTION IN LONDON

Religious leaders of all faiths, from all parts of the world, are to attend a peace convention in London, August 18-24. One purpose is to bring together representatives of different churches and societies to discuss "all possible means of a combined effort for a friendly reconciliation of the conflicting ideologies of the modern world." It will consider ways and means of organizing constructive peace activities throughout the world and of abolishing all forms of warfare "in order to save civilization from disintegration." Philosophers, scientists, artists, economists and politicians will attend in addition to religious leaders. No official representatives of the Churches of England are among the sponsors but among the messages of support are those from the Dean of Canterbury, Corder Catchpool of the Quakers, and Rabbi A. E. Silverstone, of London.

AFRICAN NATIVES ASK CHURCH SUPPORT

Support of all South African churches in a fight for religious freedom was urged at a convention held in Cape Town of organizations composed of native Africans. They blamed white "extremists" for the deterioration of race relations in South Africa and urged repeal of the recent mixed marriages legislation. G. J. Golding, a former member of the Colored Advisory Council, urged an end to the idea of white guardianship of non-whites in the country, and said that the natives are qualified to take their place along side all civilized men.

ANGLICANS APPROVE FAMILY PRAYERS

Approval was given by the upper house of the convocation of Canterbury, meeting in London, to a proposal that prayers for the family be inserted in the Prayer Book. The proposal was submitted by Bishop Wand of London who recommended that the Archbishop "be respectfully requested to initiate such steps as may be necessary to repair the omission of prayers for the family from the Book of Common Prayer." He also urged the designation of a special Sunday in the year as "home and family Sunday."

PASTORAL LETTER ON CAPITALISM

Henri Brault, Roman Catholic bishop of St. Die, France, recently ordered a pastoral letter read in all churches setting forth the Church's attitude toward materialism, Communism and capitalism. It stated that "capitalism is a fact, a system, not a philosophy or a theory. In addition capitalists have not declared themselves openly anti-Christian. However if the Church has not officially condemned capitalism, she has not waited until today to reprove an economic system which has plunged thousands of human beings into acute poverty and immorality and made virtually impossible the exercise of a real Christian way of life." The pastoral letter stated that the Church has condemned Communism by a papal decree because it is avowedly materialistic and anti-Christian.

CZECH PRIESTS TAKE LOYALTY OATH

The government of Czechoslovakia announced January 23 that a majority of Roman Catholic priests had taken an oath of loyalty. The number was not revealed, though it did list the names of some. Since November 1 clergymen of all denominations have been receiving their salaries from the state, as provided in new laws. The announcement claimed that a number of Catholic priests, including Msgr. Vincenz Stetina, Episcopal vicar in Dubice, has stated that the oath contained nothing to which a priest could not subscribe.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS

Selected by GEORGE MACMURRAY

SPEED ON SUNDAY: Even the Roman Catholics are discovering that loose concepts concerning the Lord's day are harmful to the welfare of their Church. One thousand priests, nuns, and laymen gathered in St. Louis University gymnasium recently to hear Rev. Daniel Cantwell, president of the Chicago Catholic Labor Alliance, declare that Sunday "has become dark and meaningless for thousands of people. Sunday has become a day of restlessness, with quiz programs to keep our minds busy and unnecessary physical labor to keep our bodies on the go." The speaker deplored the "haste of hurried masses where priest and congregation have their eyes cocked upon the clock." This is not peculiar to the Roman Catholic churches. Such indifference to the real character of the Lord's day is so permeating Protestantism that even those who attend services want them so rushed and the sermons so abbreviated that they can speedily get home for an early Sunday dinner in order to go touring the countryside or attend sports or engage in worldly amusements. It should be obvious that Christian churches of any denomination cannot thrive if the Lord's day is lost entirely—Watchman Examiner (Bapt.).

NOT FROM THE GREAT: Most of the great evangelistic and revival movements have started, not from the council of the great leaders of the Church, but from the pressure of the spirit of God on obscure and humble men and women. It is only rarely that such new beginnings have been acclaimed and welcomed by the Church. Much more often the pioneers have been despised, persecuted, and cast out. Only when the verdict of history has declared them to be in the succession of the apostles, only after the success of their work has become unmistakable, has the Church set itself piously to build their sepulchers. There is never a time when this warning is not needed. Only if the Church is prepared in every part to learn a new humility and a new sensitivity to the voice of God, can it be safe from the danger of falling again into this oft-repeated error. —Stephen C. Neill, Anglican Bishop quoted in Christian Evangelist (Disc.).

PERILOUS LIFE: It is perilous to be a Christian today—exceedingly perilous. It is much simpler and vastly easier to crawl into a parochial or denominational, a ritualistic or theological cave and do the accepted thing, but it will not save the world nor save a soul.—Robert W. Searle in Protestant Church Life.

OF PRIMARY IMPORTANCE: Most of us who have had extended experience in the pastorate have come to feel a greater concern over what we were doing with and for the people we had already recruited than in adding to the number of recruits. Denominational promotion or desire to make a statistical showing brings strong pressure to bear upon active Church workers and there is danger of falling into the false notion that recruiting members rather than making disciples in the mission of the Church. Inducing people to profess their faith in Christ is important but it is even more important and difficult to make disciples of them. To overlook the all-important business of making disciples is a tragedy. —United Presbyterian

THERE IS HOPE: The only antidote for the moral pessimism and utter despair into which many are falling as they look out upon the sin and misery of our time lies in the Christian doctrine of hope. Hope begins in God not in sin. It is only from him that one may get it. Almighty God believes human nature can be redeemed and that it is worth redeeming. If not, then the coming of the Lord Jesus was to no avail and his cross the utter foolishness some have declared it to be. The nations, if we be in deadly earnest about it, can be organized for peace even as they have been organized for war, for construction as well as for destruction, for brotherhood as for enmity, for order and unity as for nihilism and chaos. There is hope for human nature. The morning cometh.—Church News (Diocese of W. Virginia)

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

The Son of God Among the Sons of Men. By Everett F. Harrison W. A. Wilde. $2.50.

This book by Professor Harrison of the Fuller Theological Seminary pictures Christ in seventeen different personal relationships as described in St. John's gospel. The author tries to understand Johannine Christology by looking closely at what took place as Christ met one person after another during his earthly life. He states in his introduction that whereas some scholars have sought to understand the fourth gospel by studying its "key-words," e.g. life, light, love, truth, glory, and other scholars have sought the same end by considering chiefly the signs by which Jesus' divinity is disclosed, he is trying a new approach. "Not so much attention has been given," he writes, "to the individuals who crossed his path, men and women whose lives on this account could never be the same again, whether they responded to him or not. The personal dealings of the Lord with individuals, as recorded in this gospel, constitute a worthy study in themselves."

The author then proceeds to narrate the stories of Jesus' meetings with John the Baptist, Andrew, Nicodemus, the woman of Samaria, Mary, Martha, Pilate, Thomas, etc., each chapter describing one such meeting. Some of them are beautifully written, especially the ones on Mary and Martha, and strike the reviewer as being more akin to sermons than to historical discussions. Indeed, the best ones are those that come closest to being sermons.

As historical studies, however, they are comparatively valueless sketches, for the information vouchsafed us in the gospel of John is continually being augmented by the records of the other gospels. The author seems to proceed on the presupposition that the four gospels contain or picture one Christology, not four; therefore to get at this Christology one must glean from all four gospels, augmenting each from all, and so arrive at a complete picture. But you do not get one Christology by combining the four gospels; nor do you have one-fourth of a Christology in the gospel of John. If Professor Harrison had limited himself to the fourth gospel, his book would have been both more interesting and more valuable; for to add to the gospel is to take away from it. —B. H. T. Jr.

When the Doctor Says It's Nerves. By Henry Jerome Simpson. Morehouse-Gorham. $1.25.

This useful booklet is from the pen of an Episcopal clergyman and experienced pastor known for his previous work, "The Pastoral Care of Nervous People."

Its purpose is to give understanding and help to those who suffer from emotional difficulties. Mr. Simpson writes simply and clearly of the origin of psychoneuroses and of the methods and attitudes which can effect cure. The religious and spiritual sources are stressed and the book concludes with suggestions, quotations, and prayers.

No single book can take the place of sound psychotherapy or the effective practice of religion in curing nervous disorders but this little volume should bring understanding, comfort and hope to many who are struggling with emotional inefficiency and conflict. —OTIS R. RICE.

A. RONALD MERRIX
National Council Officer

I am compiling information of types of organization and program now being followed by groups of young adults in parishes throughout the country, and shall be grateful for aid from any readers. For two years I have had the privilege of working with a number of young adult groups in the eighth province. Often I am asked to tell what other groups are doing, how they are organized, and what programs have proved successful.

One group of a dozen young adults from six parishes is acting as an advisory council, to prepare program material for their own use and that of others similarly concerned. For their sake, and for the greater progress of our Church through utilizing to the full the active cooperation of this strategically important age group, may I ask parish priests, lay leaders and any others in contact with such groups, to send me what information they think will be helpful to this advisory council and the work as a whole? It would be of interest to know how many young adult groups are now functioning. All communications sent to me at 83 McAllister Street (Room 418), San Francisco 2, California, will be acknowledged, and a summary report of their content made to the national and provincial departments at their next meetings. I thank each reader for his cooperation.

A CHURCHWOMAN
of New York State

I must discontinue taking The Witness. I have enjoyed it very much and think that it is very up-to-date in Church matters. The reason of my giving it up is that my sister and I are retired teachers from England who came to the U. S. to spend the last part of our lives with our brother and his family. The British government arranged with the British ministry of pensions in Canada to give us our pensions. Now, as you know, the pound sterling has gone down in value so that my sister and I have lost two-fifths of our pensions and we have to be careful. I am sure you will understand.

ANSWER: We hope that some reader will contribute $4 to our Subscription Fund so that this subscriber, and others who often write us similar letters, may be continued. Contributions, sent to The Witness, Tunkhannock, Pa., will be acknowledged in our columns by printing merely the initials of the donors.

I am beginning to understand why Episcopal parsons are such timid critters. They (the crowd) scare them to death at the Christmas and Easter services. I consider myself a fair preacher at the usual Sunday service, I can stomp and move my arms about with the best of them, but let the crowd appear and then I develop a dry mouth and become as meek as a baby seal. I am going to get out my little hammer and beat it upon the church door and proclaim a most solemn holy year of old fashioned church going. I want to get over the fear of that twice a year crowd.

Home Missions Congress Urges Progressive Action

Delegates Deal with Vital Social Issues At Four Day Session at Columbus

By BILL CLEMES

★ A call on the Churches to unite behind a broad program aimed to insure human rights for minority groups, to combat the growing secularization of both the Church and society, and to put an end to competing Church interests and rivalries was sounded by the Home Missions Congress at the final day of its four-day sessions at Columbus, O., Jan. 24-27. Attended by more than 1,000 delegates, representing the bulk of American Protestantism, the Congress set forth in carefully defined terms a blue-print for the application of Christian principles to practically every phase of national life.

Noting the denial of human rights to vast segments of the population, the delegates called on Congress for "speedy" adoption of the Fair Employment Practices Commission Act and urged every member of the home missions gathering to send telegrams to Speaker Sam Rayburn to have the bill brought before the House for a vote.

Other measures recommended by the Church and mission leaders to bring about greater justice in American life included "adequate and unsegregated" housing for all people; greater equalization of educational opportunities and support of government and private measures to provide better health facilities.

Turning to the Churches themselves, the delegates recommended that the segregation and discrimination now practiced by some Churches and Church-supported institutions be brought to an end as rapidly as possible.

They asked Churches to examine their hiring policies and their institutional entrance requirements to make sure of non-discriminatory practices, adding that where such discrimination appeared, Churches should take "immediate and practical" steps to come into line with Christian concepts of human rights.

Detailed recommendations to achieve a better break for such special groups as agricultural migratory workers, American Indians, rural Negro sharecroppers and Jews were also adopted by the congress. Taking particular note of the more than 40 per cent increase in the number of migratory workers since 1940, the delegates asked Church groups to press for prompt enactment of legislative measures to improve the living and working conditions of the nation's estimated two million migrants. These included the passage of child labor laws to protect migrant children against employment which might interfere with their schooling; the extension of social security and old age benefits to agricultural workers and provisions for better housing facilities by state and local authorities.

Because of the present oversupply of agricultural workers, the delegates urged an end to the importation of foreign nationals into this country as agricultural workers. At the same time, they emphasized that this recommendation was not to be interpreted as opposition to the entrance of displaced persons.

Race Relations

For the rural Negro, especially the sharecroppers, the delegates emphasized the need for the Church to take an active hand in helping to raise his living and educational standards, as a vital step in Christianizing rural life.

Noting that the rural Negro was beset by over-crowded living conditions and a life expectancy shorter than the national average, and was excluded from community affairs, the congress recommendations called for both white and Negro ministers to join forces to bring about a wider community acceptance of the Negro and a deeper understanding of his problems.

On the Churches' dealing with the Jews, the congress appealed for action on the recommendations of the World Council's Amsterdam Assembly, which urged better community relations with the Jewish people and a recognition that anti-Semitism "no matter what its origin, is absolutely irreconcilable with the profession of the Christian faith."

Measures to remove the American Indian from his present wardship status, closer cooperation between white and Indian Churches, the establishment of community centers for off-reservation Indians, and the appointment of Indian Church workers in other than exclusively Indian projects, were also recommended.

In a bold attempt to meet the problem, delegates realistically admitted that the racial practices of the Church, coupled with the "irreligion" of both the public schools and Church-related colleges, constituted a stumbling block to the Church's task. While delegates recommended no specific plan to introduce religious instruction into the public schools, they recorded the view that "to keep religion out of the public schools entirely, in accord with the American tradition of separation of Church and state, is to limit the average child's appreciation of the inter-relation of religion with life."

Of equal concern to the delegates was the neglect of religious interests by Church-related colleges. The employment of faculty members with no special religious interests, the drive for larger college enrollments to supplement depleted funds and the failure to orient students to Church life were cited as evidence by the delegates of a growing secularism in these schools.

To offset this trend, the congress suggested increased financial support of Church colleges by Christian groups, the employment of professors who are sincerely Christian as well as competent teachers, the full time services of campus chaplains and the training of skilled youth and student advisors by the theological seminaries.

The most alarming symptoms of secularism as seen by delegates lay in the Church's failure to practice what it preached, especially in the field of race relations. "So long as many Churches display more unbrotherly racial attitudes than many trade unions, the Church can criticize secularism in general only after deep soul-searching and regeneration," the delegates said. "Class and caste, the whole disintegrated structure of society, are set up where they have no right to be, in the Temple of God." Time after time, delegates in the ten seminars of the congress recognized the weakness of the Church in fighting the evils of secularism when its own institutions displayed class and racial distinction. The scores of recommendations dealing with this subject all pointed up the urgent necessity of clearing every aspect of the Church's life of the unChristian practice of discrimination because of race or class.

Competition

Elimination of "hurtful competition" and "denominational rivalries" through increased cooperation at every level of community, state and national life was vigorously urged in several recommendations. Stressing the importance of interdenominational efforts in the home mission field, the delegates requested denominations to set aside a separate part of their budget for interdenominational projects on the local level.

An interdenominational approach by the Churches to residents of new housing developments was also recommended, for "the honor and prestige of Protestantism," with the additional suggestion that Christian work in low-cost housing projects be conducted and financed interdenominationally at first, "with the understanding that if a church is to be developed, it ought ordinarily to seek affiliation with some denomination."

Housing needs should be met for all people, on a non-segregated basis, the delegates noted, stating that if adequate housing for all families in the nation cannot be provided by private resources, it becomes the responsibility of federal, state and local governments to provide such housing.

The importance of a new approach to slum dwellers, industrial workers and low-income groups in America's cities was stressed by the delegates, who urged that denominational support be provided for local, interdenominational missionary work to congested slum areas.

Other recommendations in urban Church work included suggestions that Church members be urged to accept responsibility in community organizations; that Church councils cooperate with other community agencies in meeting critical community needs and that "the Church, as a prophetic institution, make a courageous stand against injustice, wherever it occurs" and "engage in realistic social action, as well as ministering to the victims of urban living conditions."

In the rural field, the dele-

CHURCHMEN IN THE NEWS: Bishop Barton of Eastern Oregon and chairman of The Witness Advisory Board is speaking throughout the Church on behalf of the advance program; The Rev. gates stressed the need for "sub-marginal churches" to band together for the development of community-wide programs such as social service, recreation, pastoral counseling and church education.

They asked every rural church to organize a "land and home" committee to help young families to settle in the community, make farm loans and be alert to opportunities for small business interests.

The delegates also made a strong plea for the consolidation of all appeals for overseas farm relief; asked that both Hawaii and Alaska be admitted to statehood; and urged the appropriation of a special fund by the Congress for a religious census in 1956.

PADDOCK LECTURES AT GENERAL

★ The Rev. Edward Rochie Hardy Jr., professor at Berkeley Divinity School, is delivering the Paddock Lectures at the General Seminary this month, his subjest being "the Patriarchate of Alexandria: A study in National Christianity." The first three lectures are this week; the other three are on the 13th, 15th and 17th.

BISHOP WARNS CHURCH ON COMMUNISM

★ Bishop Carpenter in addressing the convention of Alabama, January 30, warned against under-estimating the power of Marxian Communism. "Christians must show by their lives and words the external value of God's way as opposed to Marxian Communism's exaltation of atheism and emphasis upon material progress."

There were about 200 delegates at the convention, including seven Negroes. No segragation was practiced at any services or meetings.

PAN-ANGLICAN CONGRESS COMMITTEE

★ The following officers have been elected for the joint committee to arrange the Pan-Anglican Congress which will be held in 1953: Bishop Gray of Connecticut, chairman; the Rev. Frederic S. Fleming, vice-chairman; Mr. Robert T. McCracken, secretary. The commission is reviewing possible places for holding the Congress, tentatively scheduled for June, 1953.

★ One of the projects carried on by the students of Bexley Hall, seminary of Kenyon College, is ministering to the people in the surrounding rural areas. They conduct services, run church schools and carry on the various activities of normal parish life. But the equipment is often lacking, as the cover picture indicates. It shows Mrs. Charles Priebe, wife of a Bexley student, teaching her class in the kitchen of a farmhouse.

URGE MISSION TO STALIN

★ The Episcopal clergy of the Denver area have sent the following communication to President Truman:

"Mr. Lilienthal's offer to go to Moscow in case of your inability to go, to seek agreement with Premier Stalin on international control of atomic and hydrogen bombs seems to us to be a great opportunity which should be accepted. We are confident that it would have an influence world-wide in its result. There is first the possibility of success which would perhaps save mankind from the devastating effect of atomic warfare. We would show the world that we are anxious for peace and that is important. We would be taking a position of moral leadership in this confused and tragic age. We would perhaps set in motion a great wave of faith and hope to offset some of the fear and suspicion that are so dominant and so dangerous today.

"We hope that you will take this step to show everyone the good faith and eager desire of America for a peaceful solution of our differences."

FORMER MISSIONARY IN HOSPITAL

★ Mr. M. P. Walker, who was treasurer of the missionary district of Shanghai from 1902 until his retirement in April, 1942, is in a Poughkeepsie, N. Y., hospital, recovering slowly from a serious illness, and is under the care of a heart specialist. His last months in Shanghai were spent as an internee in the Pootung Camp, where lack of proper nourishment had a tendency to undermine health.

GLENN ADKINS, layman of the diocese of Lexington, is one of the hardest working laymen of the Church. He is in charge of the youth and conference center of the diocese and the director of the summer camps help there on the Cathedral Domain

NICHOLSON & GALLOWAY A UNIQUE FIRM

★ A century of service in the restoration and maintenance of church structures, during which it has "doctored" more than 300 churches of all denominations in the New York metropolitan area, was completed recently by the newest member of the Hundred Year Association of New York—the firm of Nicholson & Galloway, Inc.

Reputed to be one of the oldest firms of its kind in the United States, its long history is largely the story of Manhattan's soaring spires and ecclesiastical edifices. Many churches along New York's Fifth Avenue still proudly wear an original N. & G. roof. Nearly every one of them has been shrouded in scaffolding at one time or another, during a Nicholson & Galloway stone preservation job. And downtown, Old Trinity Church overlooking Wall Street still wears the copper roof installed by Founder Nicholson in 1874.

It was in January, 1849, that John Nicholson hung out his shingle over the door of 644 Hudson Street a few weeks after coming here from his native Glasgow, Scotland. There the firm (of which the late Charles T. Galloway was a partner until his death in 1912) did business for eighty-nine years, when it moved to its present location at 426-28 East 110th Street. On its 100th birthday the firm finds itself still in the management hands of the same family, John E. Nicholson, grandson of the founder, now is president and the fourth generation is represented in the business by his sons, John Perry and William Adams Nicholson.

"N. & G." has not confined its "church doctoring," however, to the New York City line. It now has a branch office and plant in Brookville, Long Island, and a subsidiary, the All States Building and Maintenance Corporation in Lexington, Kentucky, to service churches on the island and in the Blue Grass country.

The story of the firm's achievements, not only here but beyond Manhattan, is told in a handsome 100th anniversary brochure being distributed by Mr. Nicholson to friends of the company, among whom many churchmen are numbered. In addition it tells of service to numerous public monuments, including the Statue of Liberty, well known office buildings, famous private estates, hospitals and schools.

One of the early church roofing commissions found in the company's old records refers to the "installation of slate roofing, copper chestings, etc." on Garden City's beautiful Gothic Cathedral. This was donated in memory of Alexander T. Stewart, a close business friend of Founder Nicholson. The roof is still there after seventy-five years of service.

As an example of diversified exterior maintenance, the brochure cites the old First Presbyterian Church, 12th Street and Fifth Avenue. This was roofed with Grandfather Nicholson's Welsh tin, imported by him by shipload from Cardiff, Wales, in the 1850's. To end the cost and nuisance of frequently repainting this large area of tin roofing, it was covered with an insul-mastic preparation overlaid with grey-green slate granules.

The same treatment was given to Trinity, Saint Paul's Chapel, St. Luke's Chapel, Saint Peter's-Chelsea, the Chapel of the Intercession, and Grace Church, all of New York.

First Presbyterian Church, by the way, was given a special stone preservation job a few years ago and periodically is examined and treated. Only recently an extensive program of exterior repairs, involving repointing of the grown sandstone exterior from the top of the spire to grades on all elevations, coating of all roofs with a chemical preparation, gold-leafing the Cross and Clock faces. A few years ago Mr. Nicholson personally supervised the application of a chemical preservative to the walls of St. Patrick's Cathedral.

The Brookville office has supervised work on the roofs and walls of two of the three churches in Roslyn, Long Island, during the past few years. No repairs were found necessary to the third Roslyn church, Saint Mary's Catholic. An old ledger entry, dated 1873, reads: "To installing slate roof, copper work, etc., St. Mary's Catholic Church, as agreed—$500." The first John Nicholson did the original roofing job.

Other church and ecclesiastical edifices serviced by the firm have included St. John's, Staten Island, All Souls, New York, the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian, the General Theological Seminary on 20th Street at Ninth Avenue, Church of St. Mary the Virgin, St. Michael's Church in Litchfield, St. Mary's-in-the-Field, Valhalla, N. Y., St. Bartholomew's, the Holy Trinity Catholic Church in West 82nd Street.

CIVIL LIBERTIES AND PEACE

★ Mr. Clifford J. Durr, churchman of Washington, D. C. and the president of the Lawyers Guild, is the author of articles on "Civil Liberties and World Peace," the first of which will appear in The Witness for February 16th. Mr. Durr is widely known throughout the country as a former member of the Federal Communications Commission. The challenging articles, which were giver originally at a seminar of the Episcopal League for Social Action in San Francisco at the last General Convention, will be in two successive numbers. We think this contribution is an added reason for introducing The Witness in parishes during Lent through the Bundle Plan.

CONFERENCE ON WAR AND THE CHURCH

★ A number of Episcopalians are among the 111 leaders of 16 denominations to issue a call for a conference on the Church and war which will be held in Detroit, May 8-11. The call states that there are "millions outside the Church and inside it who are looking for a clear contemporary statement of what Christian peace action is." It also cites the deep cleavages of official Church opinion evident in the 1937 Oxford Conference and the Amsterdam Conference of 1948, and expresses the hope that conference study papers, now being prepared, will newly explore and define the recognized Christian position of refusal to participate in modern war. It is expected that 500 delegates, members of Church peace groups, will attend and have votes, but the call stresses that "an unrestricted number of observers and visitors" will be welcome.

Episcopalians who signed the call, released January 23, are Bishop Lawrence of Western Mass.; Dean John Day of Topeka; Prof. J. F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School; Laymen George H. Hogle and William R. Huntington of New York; Rev. William H. Marmion of Birmingham, Ala.; Mrs. John F. Moors of Brookline, Mass.; Rev. George L. Paine of Boston; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce of New York; Rev. William K. Russell of Brooklyn; Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman of New York and Rev. C. Lawson Willard Jr. of New Haven.

KING OF SWEDEN MAKES ALTAR CLOTH

★ Old Swedes, Wilmington, Del., was presented with a red altar cloth embroidered by King Gustav of Sweden, at a special service held January 22. The presentation was made by the Swedish ambassador, Erik Bokeman, before a congregation of 600 persons, with an estimated 300 turned away. The gift was received by Bishop McKinstry.

One of the interesting bits about the event was that the president of one of the U. S. airlines had colored movies taken and also had the service wire-recorded. The next day both the movie and the recording were flown to the Swedish king as a gift from Old Swedes.

SCHOOL OF RELIGION AT BURLINGTON

★ A school of religion on four successive Tuesday evenings opened at St. Paul's, Burlington, Vt., January 24. Seminars opened each session led by the Rev. Karl Sayres, assistant at St. Paul's; Prof. J. E. Pooley of the University of Vermont; the Rev. George Smith of St. Albans; the Rev. John Midworth, rector. These were followed by lectures on "Christianity and our frame of mind" by the Rev. Robert Hatch of Waterbury, Conn.; "Christianity and our jobs" by the Rev. H. H. Walsh of McGill University; "Christianity and our social living" by Bishop Hall of New Hampshire; "Christianity and our children" by the Rev. Vincent Bennett of Fitchburg, Mass. The school is sponsored by the men's club of the parish.

MARYLAND HAS CONVENTION

★ Bishop Bentley, vice-president of the National Council, was the speaker at the convention of Maryland, January 24-25, speaking to a joint session on the work of the Church in Japan. The budgets of the national Church and for the work of the diocese was explained by the Rev. Harry Lee Doll, rector of St. Paul's, Baltimore, who was on the budget committee at General Convention.

The convention started action looking toward equal rights for women by directing the committee on canons to outline steps to that end at next year's convention.

WEST TEXAS HAS COUNCIL

★ The annual council of West Texas was held January 22-24 at St. James, Del Rio, with three guest speakers featured; the Rev. John Huess of the National Council, Dr. Mary Cruise, missionary from the Philippines, Dr. Wendell Kline, new vice-president of the University of the South. Bishop Jones in his address stressed growth of the Church in West Texas all along the line.

ST. PAUL'S, BAKERFIELD, California, is proud of its boys' choir. None is more proud than their rector, the Rev. Ralph H. Cox

BISHOP HARRIS BACKS THE PRESIDENT

★ Bishop Harris of Liberia, preaching at Grace Church, New York, said that Liberia and the rest of Africa should not be neglected in President Truman's program for the development of backward areas of the world. He said that "American capital for assisting redevelopment will find a ready welcome in Liberia, which has already enjoyed a traditional friendship with this country."

Bishop Harris returned to Liberia on February 2nd.

TEXAS CONVENTION AT WACO

★ The convention of the diocese of Texas was held January 22-24 at St. Paul's, Waco, with Bishop Quin and Bishop Hines reporting continued growth throughout the diocese. Confirmations reached the all time high of 2,100; there are more candidates and postulants for the ministry; six missions have been established within the year; one mission, St. Peter's, Pasadena, has become a parish; sixteen churches have erected new churches or parish houses in the year. Mrs. H. W. Whinfield of Sheboygan, Wis., a member of the national executive committee of the Auxiliary, addressed about 1,000 women at the meeting of the associated women of the diocese; W. Ted Gannaway of the National Council staff addressed a joint meeting on the forthcoming effort to raise the 1950 budget in March; Bishop Kinsolving of Arizona was the headliner at the banquet, saying among other things that "the fact that the Episcopal Church has been known as a fashionable Church is the greatest curse of all time."

BISHOP MANNING SHRINE AT CATHEDRAL

★ Bishop Gilbert, at a memorial service for Bishop Manning held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on January 29th, announced that a tomb for his ashes would be placed in the cathedral. A rough sketch of the proposed shrine was printed in the program for the service, and Bishop Gilbert announced that several gifts had already been received for the tomb's erection. He added that he was confident people throughout the diocese would want to share in the cost of the undertaking "as an expression of their love for our great bishop and in appreciation of all that his life and service have meant to us."

POLITICAL CANDIDATES ARE RATED

★ Dean Philip H. McNairy of St. Paul, Minn., presented the system for rating political candidates, invented by Dean Higgins of St. Mark's, Grand Rapids, Michigan, to the St. Paul clericus recently. Factors taken into consideration by the system are local residence, economic data, such as occupational record, education, social data, church record, personality factors, special qualifications. The system was given a test at an election in Grand Rapids when the five candidates who had received preferred ratings were elected. None of the candidates who received "no comment" ratings won.

PRESENT ADVANCE PROGRAM

★ St. Mary's, Manhattanville, New York City, where the Rev. Charles B. Ackley is rector, is devoting Wednesday evenings in Lent to presentations of the advance program of the National Council. The speakers are Laymen (Keymen) Walter Potts and Kenneth Knowles; Archdeacon Bratt; the Rev. H. R. Bell of the city missions; the Rev. E. M. Turner of the overseas department and Bishop Gilbert. There is also to be a missionary mass meeting on Feb. 24th with Bishop Stephen Neil of England as the speaker.

WRITES FROM MANILA

★ Writing to friends in Michigan, Miss Bernice K. Jansen told of the many activities at St. Stephen's School, Manila, which now enrolls 1,155 children and has a faculty of fifty-five. "Sunday is an international day for me," Miss Jansen said: "At eight o'clock I go to Chinese Sunday School, at 9:30 to Holy Trinity across town where I teach American, English and Spanish children and then back to Magdalena Street to St. Luke's Chapel for our Filipino Church service and Sunday school."

In closing Miss Jansen called attention to a matter that has been noted previously in the Church papers, but which bears repetition. "One item of expense I have is paying duty on some of your boxes. Please do not send anything by freight or American Express. I have to pay a broker to get packages off the ships when they would have come through free of charge by parcel post. Please do not put a value on secondhand things—just mark it 'old, no value.' Packages valued under

The Distaff Side

IN one of his pithy sentences, G. K. Chesterton once remarked, "Nothing is real until it is local." Certainly that applies to this subject of women deputies to General Convention which made for such embarrassment headlines out of San Francisco last autumn. Until the issue is settled at the grass roots level and women given representation on parish vestries more generally, we cannot hope for much progress in the national body. We shall continue to have the mediaeval situation of men refusing to grant equality to women, and General Convention saying in effect, "Women are excluded from the final governing body of the Protestant Episcopal Church!"

It is right at the local level that we are still very timid and fearful of admitting women to our vestries. And it is largely fear and our native conservatism that keep the average rector and warden from breaking up the all-male exclusiveness of Episcopal vestries. We are afraid lest women will take over the Church, already too feminine; lest the men will lose interest. That is the practical reason often given in defense of our present policy. Actually, this suspicion is a wholly imaginary one! There is no movement on the part of women to usurp the place of men in the Church or anywhere else! And if the men of your parish church so easily lose interest that a woman or two on the Vestry will drive them all away, then it is indeed a sad day for the Church. Men of true conviction and devotion will not quit the Cause because we apply the democratic idea and permit women to have a voice and a vote in the councils of the Church. To fear otherwise is to have underestimated the quality of our lay leadership. It is really to be rationalizing in defense of our prejudices.

It is often maintained that the work of a Vestryman is primarily a man's job because it is so largely of a business and financial nature. Vestries are charged with the money and property matters of a Church, and men know more about such things. This might be difficult to prove, but certainly the province of a Vestry is not narrowly limited to dollars and cents and the repair of buildings. The Vestry is actually the Rector's cabinet, his co-workers in the whole ministry of the Church. A wise Rector will take his Vestry into his confidence, and look to its members for counsel and leadership not only in things financial but also in things pertaining to worship, education, missionary work, etc. And who is to say that a woman's point of view on any of these would not be a healthy and wholesome addition to the average Vestry's deliberations? Why should it be imagined that only men are fit for the work of such an office? Certainly with women in business and government, there is no question of ability.

We expect to see men continuing to serve on our Vestries and in our Diocesan and General Conventions. We need them there, but neither in theory nor in practice should there be any bar to the election of well-qualified women to sit and speak in the councils of this Church in the twentieth century. We need to make a beginning in our parish churches, to put away our fear of anything new and elect a woman or two to our local Vestries. Only thereby shall we finally shake General Convention out of its antique attitude!

"QUOTES"

THE first thing to do is to pray sensibly and deeply, not for material victory over a material foe, but for spiritual victory over a spiritual foe; that this nation and all nations may become worthy of the extended life they crave; that the diabolic spirit of war, whether it manifests itself in the ghastly convulsion of shot and shell, or whether, vampire-like, it slowly drains the life-blood of a nation by its bitter class jealousy, its materialism, its mammon-worship, may be forever banished from our lives.

There Is Still Time

ASH WEDNESDAY is February 22, and, from past experience, there are those responsible for parish programs who think that material can be ordered about the 20th and arrive in time. The Witness series on "Current Movements and Christianity" consists of eight articles, the first of which will appear next week since there are rectors who wish to distribute copies on Sunday the 19th in preparation for group meetings that week. Printing costs being what they are these days prevents us from having too great an overrun. However, anticipating orders that will arrive after we go to press, we are going to run extra copies to take care of late orders. We will put these in the mail, as orders are received, as long as the supply lasts. If your order arrives too late to receive the February 16th number, we will then start your bundle with the issue of the 23rd, and continue through Easter, billing you proportionately Easter week. So if you have not already placed the order please send the form found on page thirteen at once.

The authors are to discuss wherein current movements are allies, competitors or both, of Christianity. Professor Chad Walsh deals with Nationalism; Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce writes on the Peace Movement; Bishop Emrich with Alcoholics Anonymous; Professor George F. Thomas presents Humanism-Secularism; Professor John C. Bennett deals with Communism; the Rev. David R. Hunter writes on the Peace of Mind Cult; Dr. Hiram K. Johnson with Pseudo-Scientific Psychiatry, and Canon Bernard Idding Bell with the Church. It is a series, we believe, that ought to make for interesting and lively discussion.

In addition to this series there will be a series on the Meaning of the Creed by Bishop Hines of Texas. All of which adds up, we hope you agree, to excellent material for Lent.

The Religion of Abraham Lincoln

By GEORGE H. MacMURRAY
Rector of St. Philip's, Brooklyn and a Witness Editor

THERE were all the elements of drama in the life of Abraham Lincoln. He was born in a log cabin, and ascended to the presidency. He led the country through one of its greatest crises, and on the eve of victory was assassinated by a fanatic. He was shot on Good Friday, and on what would have been the glorious Easter of 1865, with Union victory assured and with the Easter message ringing in the hearts of the people, Abraham Lincoln lay dead in the White House. Tragedy stalked his private life; his love for Ann Rutledge, and her untimely death; his marriage, although a moot point, contained an element of tragedy. Two of his children died in their youth, one during the most trying periods of the war.

Tragedy, indeed, stalked the life of this man who wrote the deathless prose of Gettysburg. We are familiar with the words "that this nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom; and that this government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth." We are familiar with his words on democracy: "As I would not be a slave, so I would not be a master. This expresses my idea of democracy. Whatever differs from this, to the extent of the difference, is no democracy."

Lincoln was indeed one of America's great. To us as Christians he is particularly interesting—what was this man's religion? Many denominations have claimed him. The atheists have also claimed him. But Lincoln was not an atheist, nor was he a churchman. The words of Mrs. Lincoln are clear. "He never joined a church; but still, as I believe, he was a religious man by nature. He first seemed to talk about the subject when our boy Willie died, and then more than ever about the time he went to Gettysburg. But it (religion) was a kind of poetry in his nature, and he was never a technical Christian." Lincoln was never a "technical Christian" but he was a man of God, a man of faith, and a man of prayer.

Religious Background

THROUGHOUT his life Lincoln had contacts with the Church and with the clergy. Although there was no service held at the time of the death of his mother a service was held some time later. It was conducted by a Baptist circuit rider, the Rev. David Elkins. No one could possibly say what effect this had on the boy but it is reasonable to assume that it had some effect, for Abraham Lincoln was nine.

Still another contact Lincoln had with the Church was in his days at Pigeon Creek, Indiana. There was a Baptist Church there which Thomas Lincoln helped to build and which Abraham Lincoln attended. It was said of him that he would go to service, listen to the sermon, come home and preach the sermon better than the preacher. This may be an exaggeration but if we consider the type of preaching he heard it must have made a deep impression. One authority, Edgar DeWitt Jones, in "Lincoln and The Preachers" said: "No one can evaluate adequately the influence of these sermons on slavery, temperance, and doctrinal subjects which Lincoln not only heard, but often repeated." It is reasonable to assume that they did make a deep impression for we know his stand on slavery and that he was an abstainer. Another contact he had with the Church was in his New Salem days, where he was a storekeeper with William Berry. Berry's father was a preacher and conducted services at the Concord Church where Lincoln attended. In Springfield, Illinois, Mr. Lincoln had further contacts with the clergy and the Church. He was an intimate friend of the Rev. Josephus Hewett of the Disciples of Christ. It was in Springfield that Mr. Lincoln met the Episcopalians. Mary Todd had been a Presbyterian who became an Episcopalian, and she and Lincoln were married by an Episcopal clergyman in November 1842. The home in which the Lincolns lived in Springfield was purchased from the clergyman who married them, the Rev. Charles Dresser. Mr. Lincoln at least talked business with the Episcopalians.

During the years in Washington he had further contact with the Church and with the clergy. In the course of his life, there were some thirty men of religion whom Lincoln knew. These included Baptists, Congregationalists, Disciples of Christ, Methodists, Presbyterians, one Roman Catholic at least, and of course the Episcopalians. He spent many hours in private consultation with men of religion, but he could not accept any religion formally. He never became a "technical Christian." Nevertheless, Mr. Lincoln was a man of God, a man of faith, and a man of prayer.

As a Man of God

ABRAHAM LINCOLN was a man of God. From childhood he was a constant reader of God's word as contained in the Holy Scriptures. He used scripture in his public addresses and in his private speech. There was always a Bible on his desk in the White House. His secretary, John G. Nicolay, says he was a constant Bible reader. One of Mr. Lincoln's bodyguards makes an interesting observation: "The daily life of Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln usually commenced at eight o'clock, and immediately upon dressing the President would go into the library, where he would sit in his favorite chair in the middle of the room and read a chapter or two of his Bible. I think I am safe in saying that this was President Lincoln's invariable custom, at least it was such during the time I was on duty with him."

In his writings there are 77 references to Holy Scripture. Of the 66 Books in the Bible, Lincoln quoted from 22 of them. In his House Divided Speech Lincoln said: "'A house divided against itself cannot stand'. I believe this government cannot endure permanently half slave and half free. I do not expect the Union to be dissolved—I do not expect the house to fall—but I do expect it will cease to be divided." The reference is to the words of Jesus. Lincoln used them purposely. He said to a friend in discussing the speech: "I want to use some universally known figure expressed in simple language as universally well known, that may strike home to the minds of men in order to raise them up to the perils of the times."

Mr. Lincoln used scripture frequently in conversation. A humorous one occurred during a cabinet meeting. The Union was having financial difficulties. Gold and silver were exhausted and the cabinet was discussing the advisability of printing green backs which would not be backed by gold or silver. Consideration was being given to some appropriate quotation from scripture, similar to "In God We Trust." Mr. Lincoln made the suggestion that the new green backs have the words of Peter to the blind beggar: "Silver and gold have I none; but such as I have I give thee." He knew his scripture, used it in his conversation and in his public addresses. Lincoln through his daily contact with scripture was a man of God, a conscientous and intelligent reader of God's word.

A Man of Faith

ALTHOUGH subject to periods of depression, Abraham Lincoln was a man of faith. He believed in God's purpose in history and in God's purpose for him. A quotation illustrates the point. During the presidential campaign of 1860 the old smear technique was used. Lincoln's opposition tried to smear him as a pagan and a man of no religion. In reply he said: "I do not understand it at all. I know there is a God, and that he hates injustice and slavery. I see the storm coming and I know that his hand is in it. If he has a place and work for me, and I think he has, I believe I am ready. I am nothing, but truth is everything. I know that I am right because I know that liberty is right, for Christ teaches it and Christ is God. I have told them that a house divided against itself cannot stand and Christ and reason say the same, and they will find it so."

The same thought of God's purpose for him and in history is shown again in a letter to a friend: "The purposes of the Almighty are perfect and must prevail, though we erring mortals may fail to accurately perceive them in advance. We hoped for a happy termination of this terrible war long before this. But God knows best and has ruled otherwise. We shall acknowledge his wisdom and our own error therein. Meanwhile, we must work earnestly in the best light he gives us, trusting that so working still conduces to the great ends he ordains. Surely he intends some great good to follow this mighty convulsion, which no mortal could make, and no mortal could stay." Abraham Lincoln was a man of God and a man of faith. He believed in God's purpose for him and in God's purpose in history.

A Man of Prayer

MR. LINCOLN was a man of prayer. There are many evidences of it. On February 11, 1861, he left Springfield to journey to Washington for the inaugural. In the rain he spoke his farewell. He said he did not know whether or not he would return. He likened his task to that of Washington. Then he continued: "Without the assistance of that Divine Being who ever attended him, I cannot succeed. With that assistance, I cannot fail. Trusting in him who can go with me, and remain with you, and be everywhere for good, let us confidently hope that all will yet be well. To his care commending you, as I hope in your prayers, you will commend me, I bid you an affectionate farewell."

Let it be remembered that it was Lincoln who first set aside a national day of Thanksgiving urging the people of the land to give thanks, not only for Union victory, but to give thanks for all God's blessing on the land. Let it be remembered that Lincoln's last public utterance was in part one of thanksgiving. Two days before his death, to a crowd outside the White House he said: "In the midst of this, (victory) however, he from whom all blessings flow must not be forgotten. A call for a national thanksgiving is being prepared, and will be duly promulgated."

Abraham Lincoln was a man of God, he was a man of faith, he was a man of prayer. Although he was never a technical Christian, he was a man in whom religion was a kind of poetry in his soul.

How One Church Educates

By LOUISE S. EDWARDS
Churchwoman of New York

MY husband's decision to enter the ministry was my reason for becoming a teacher of religion. During the time that he served as vicar in a small mission and I taught in the church school, I came to the realization that a church school teacher had to be equipped with more than a love for children and a knowledge of the Bible. I therefore attended Union Theological Seminary and registered for the courses in religious education. These courses were a great help, but I realized that they did not qualify me to become an effective teacher of religion. I felt it necessary to obtain an understanding of secular education in the training of children to meet the needs of religious education.

In attending Teachers College and working toward the bachelor's degree, I attained the fulfillment of my needs. These courses in the field of secular education gave me a clearer understanding of how to help a child find spiritual values in religious education. In one course on literature for children we were required to do research on books suitable for children. I applied the general principles laid down in this course to the selection of a list of books suitable for a church school library. This course aided us in establishing a small but well selected bookshelf for the younger children in our church school. Another course was on understanding the young child in relation to his school environment. In this course, we were asked to make an over-all picture of a specific room for a kindergarten group. Furnishings, equipment and lay-out were thoroughly investigated and a list of books as well as of manufacturers of equipment was compiled. This helped to guide us in the furnishings and equipment, on a limited budget, for the lower hall of the mission. For the social studies course at Teachers College I kept a diary of the events which took place in our "released time" work at the church. The teacher in charge of social studies carefully went over this diary with me and helped in judging the needs of the church school children and in guiding them to proper group relationships. In most of the classes which I attended at Teachers College the instructor asked: "What is your need in this class?" The teachers were developing in the class rooms the same attitudes and the same guidance which we as school teachers were expected to develop within our own class rooms.

Secular education emphasizes the need of first developing an underlying philosophy of childhood development. With deep forethought and much perseverence we thought through a philosophy of education for our church school children. What better philosophy for spiritual education could we find than the words of Jesus: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind . . . and thy neighbor as thyself . ."? To love with all one's heart expresses the theological attitude of religion or the relation of man to God; to love with all one's soul deals with the ethical or the relation of man to man; to love with all one's mind is concerned with the intellectual or the relation of man to himself.

We formed a committee on religious education which included the vicar, myself as director of education, the chairman of both the upper and lower elementary church schools, and teachers who were interested in meeting with us. We hoped in this way to introduce the techniques of secular education in the church school through discussion and by sharing one another's experiences. We recruited three young adults to act as teachers-in-training for the three upper grades. The teachers in the lower elementary grades were not happy with assistants, and we therefore did not press them to conform.

From our teen-agers we recruited leaders for the church school worship service. We set up a system whereby on each Sunday one class in the upper school was responsible for conducting the worship service. This class had charge of reading the lesson, the psalm, collecting the money, and choosing the hymns. The leader, dressed in his cassock, took his place before the prayer desk. One of the teen-agers played the organ. This sharing made the children a part of the worship service. It also required research on their part in finding the day in the church calendar, the color for that day, the season and other pertinent facts which had meaning for them, at the same time teaching them about the church ritual and liturgy.

We recruited our acolytes and choir from the youth group. The day on which these children were to serve at the adult worship service, they were excused from church school and counted as present. If our elementary school girls and boys wished to become members of the choir, they too were excused from church school with the provision that they be present for choir and for "released time." We felt that these provisions were just, since we devoted our Sunday work in church school entirely to worship. Our acolytes and choir members were deriving a sense of growth in worship experience through contact with adults in the grown-ups worship service. This was our man to God relationship.

Beyond Parish Bounds

RELEASED time work was based on the second half of our philosophy "Love thy neighbor as thyself." It was our aim to have the children understand something about their community and its people. We then tried to reach outside the community and finally into the world. Our first lessons were developed through a study of the map of our own hamlet. We discovered how large our community really was and how far away our homes or how close to our homes some of these children lived.

"I never knew our town was so big."

"Gosh, does Jane live so far away?"

We later found our hamlet recognized on a map of Westchester County but here we were just a dot on the map. Within the United States we were not even listed. When we looked at the world we were insignificant. This was a lesson in trying to discover a sense of space and perspective.

Our next lesson introduced the various nationalities of our parents and grandparents. On the map of the world we found the country from which the forebears of each child came. Some of the children spoke the language which their family used at home. We sang folk songs which some of the children knew. We tried to see that all people are essentially much alike in nature.

For our Christmas program we gave the children in the fourth and fifth grades, cards illustrating the celebration of Christmas in different nations. The children looked over the cards and began to choose the nation which they felt suited them best. They read over the statement on the card and rewrote the story in their own words. They also planned their own costumes. Meanwhile the children in the sixth and seventh grades were given an opportunity to think about a Christmas program, but they dismissed the whole idea saying that there was too much work to be done and such a program would interfere with class work. The following week one of these boys was asked to take a message to the teacher downstairs who was preparing her Christmas program. He came upstairs in a hurry and quite excited.

"Mrs. S. is planning a Christmas program, how about us?"

"Didn't you say last week it would interfere with our class work?"

"Yeah, but I didn't know it was going to be so good."

"All right, ask Mrs. S. if she needs any help. If she does perhaps we can join her program, or perhaps we can plan our own which ever way we choose." (Mrs. S. and I had already discussed the possibility of a joint program. It was better to have come through the children than to have forced it).

A few minutes later the boy rushed into the room.

"Come on, all of you, Mrs. S. says she needs a lot more kids for her program."

The pageant, as it turned out to be, was given to a crowded church of parents and friends, everyone happy that each child had a part to play in the program.

This was a child's program, given by children. Each child shared in the preparation of the work without teacher domination. The lines the child spoke were prepared by himself. There was no verbatim learning. The costuming was created by the child himself from the picture or from the teacher or parent help. We learned how much alike people really are. The children also learned that Christmas is not merely a matter of receiving gifts, of tinselled trees, of white Christmases; nor did all countries celebrate Christmas on December 25th. The one thing which every country did, however, was to celebrate the birthday of the King of Kings with a midnight service on the designated Christmas Eve. The pageant is an example of introducing social studies in the work of the church school, while at the same time bringing in ethical values or the man to man relationship.

An Example

RAY had been a member of our church school for a few months before anyone took notice of him. He did not come to released time and he was very shy and backward. Upon inquiry we were told that he was a dull child, that had stayed behind in public school class on two occasions and was therefore older for his grade group than most of the children. He was not permitted to come to released time because the public school used that time for make-up work which he particularly needed. While shopping in the village I met his mother and asked her to let Ray come to released time. After listening to her story, I suggested that he might feel more comfortable and get more out of the hour with a few children than with a large group and that a change in subject matter might be more interesting to him.

Within a few weeks Ray was a member of our released time. He began to speak up in church school classes, and people began to take notice of him. He was always early on Sunday morning just in case he could help with some chores around the church. While the Christmas program was being organized the other children had all chosen a card except Ray. His teacher looked at him and said:

"Ray, what will you do?"

"I'm going to be an American and play Santa Claus."

Not even the teacher had thought of that, with the excitement of other countries around her.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"What will you say?"

"I'll write it out and show it to you."

Here was the first spark of an awakening personality. Ray was beginning to find that he had a place in the work of the church and that the boys and girls around him cared if he made good. When the pageant was given his father and mother came to the church for the first time since they sent Ray to church school. Everyone was astounded at the way he carried out his part and at his self-assurance. His parents were very proud of him.

A few weeks later he came to church school and asked the vicar if he might read a psalm, which he had chosen and rehearsed for the worship service. The leader was informed that there would be an extra psalm read in the service. The announcement was made that Ray would read the psalm and the children accepted it with no question. Here was the man to self relationship. From this experience Ray began to feel that people really cared what he did and how he did it. It made him feel he was an individual. This is an example of self-development through man to man relationship.

Throughout the church school year we were trying to train our children in spiritual education as it related to the church school. This was done through tested methods developed in the field of secular education and founded on the philosophy based on the words of Jesus, in the two great commandments, to develop their spiritual education. It was indeed a big order and rested in the hands of a few intelligent leaders in the parish. In the four years of our work in the mission, we only scratched the surface but we were beginning to see the heart, the soul and the mind of the child.

All Things Are Possible

By PHILIP STEINMETZ

Rector of the Ashfield Parishes

WITH God all things are possible. That is, all things consistent with his nature. Obviously it is impossible for God to hate a sinner, refuse to forgive, or misjudge an event.

Yet though we know his power, we set limits to what we expect of him. We say, "That person is hopeless," or "What do you expect of a Communist?" or "I can't bear the thought of my wife's death," or "It is impossible to forgive such a wrong." Such statements imply that there is a limit to the power of good over evil, to what God can do.

As you look back over the past and think of your attitudes consider where you are setting limits to what you think possible with God. Then notice that it is when you are with God, in line with his working that there is no limit to what may happen. It is not a matter of God working your will but of your giving in to his.

However much we may have missed, we each have at least another day to live with God. Live it remembering that no matter what the evils you face, God has met and overcome them and calls upon you to throw in your lot with him and discover at least in part the possibilities of love.

With God all things are possible. But to what extent are you with God in thought and deed each day you live?

By WILLIAM P. BARNDS

Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln, Nebraska

WE have all noted with what eagerness a child looks forward to his birthday, and what an occasion it is when it comes! For that day he is the center of the stage. He receives gifts from his proud family and perhaps has a party. He has reached a definite milestone in his life, and is happy about it.

Adults do not react to anniversaries in just the same way, but there is something deep-rooted in our nature which makes us prone to keep anniversaries. The very season of the year itself brings to our minds events that happened at the same season in previous years. So a couple happily married in the springtime are reminded each returning spring of those first days of marital bliss and deep joy. So, too, those who have laid to rest the mortal remains of a loved one in the autumn are reminded as that season comes year after year of that solemn occasion.

It is well to keep these things in remembrance, for all too often in our busy life we are apt to forget. For the Christian these anniversaries should be kept in a Christian way. As the Church's year reminds us always of Christ, so that every day, in one way or another, keeps him before our minds, so should every part of the Christian's life be under his influence.

The Prayer Book has various prayers for various anniversaries. We can say these prayers privately on the anniversaries. It is also well to ask the rector to say a prayer publicly in honor of the anniversary. Near the back of the Prayer Book there is a lovely birthday prayer. On the same page there is a prayer for one departed this life. On page 267 there is the marriage collect which may be adapted for use on marriage anniversaries. Other anniversaries which we may well keep are the anniversaries of our baptism, for that event was our spiritual birth into the Church; and of our confirmation. The clergy celebrate the anniversary of their ordinations.

It is a beautiful custom to make a special point of receiving holy communion on the nearest Sunday to an anniversary which you are keeping as an act of special thanksgiving. You may give memorial flowers for the altar as an act of thanksgiving. I once heard of a man who gave several sets of vestments to a church as a thanksgiving for twenty-five years of happy married life.

God is the giver of all good gifts and our times are in his hand. He should be considered on our anniversaries.

A Word With You

By HUGH D. McCANDLESS

Rector of the Epiphany, New York

Liturgical

THE word Liturgical is a useful word when it refers to a type of thing. For example, one of the best Church advertisements in the New York papers offers to the public "Catholic worship—Liturgical music—Gospel preaching." In this case you know very well that if you go to that church you will hear, or participate in a great deal of plain chant.

Recently however, the word "liturgical" has begun to be used as a kind of mock-modest way of saying "correct." Perhaps you know what I mean—"our services are very liturgical here." This is supposed to mean that nothing could be more perfect than whatever it is that is described in this way.

Actually, this is not the case. There is no such thing—in this world—as a perfect service of worship. But people who are sure that their services are perfect are rather like people who are sure their children are perfect—it is almost a guarantee that they are not!

There are still very basic considerations about worship services that are not agreed upon by the most ardent and honest scholars. For example, is the perfect service a dialogue between priest and people, or is it a three-way effort between priest, choir, and congregation? There are very good authorities for either point of view. If the service is a dialogue, then a gallery choir, or one behind the altar is proper. If it is a three-way thing, and the choir are called upon to represent the people and to do some of the singing for them, then the choir before the altar is proper.

One of the most difficult groups of people for any one to deal with are those who know just a little, and who know that little too well. I have known several altar guilds who were convinced that the sacrament was invalid unless the vases on the altar were brass, or unless the altar had a retable on it, or unless certain candles were lit, and so forth and so on.

When we make laws out of our own traditions and prejudices; when we make rules out of what we heard as a child, or out of the latest book we have read, we forget one basic teaching of our Christianity, and that is this: The only perfectly liturgical worship is that which takes place in heaven. Using the word "liturgical" to indicate what we consider correct, merely results in our blinding ourselves to this fact and assists us in our ever-present tendency to become proud of ourselves and uncharitable towards others.

★ The Wellesley Conference will be held June 25-July 1, with the Rev. James A. Pike, chaplain of Columbia, the keynote lecturer on "Christianity and the crisis of our age." There were 325 attending last year, the largest in many years, and it is expected to pass that figure this year. Of last year's enrollment 68 were college students.

CHRISTIAN CHURCH PAYS A TRIBUTE

★ Members of the recently $1,000,000 Central Christian Church, San Antonio, held a reception last week for the members of Temple Beth El, where the Christian congregation has worshipped for 19 months while their church was being built. During the week-long celebration of the opening, there were services at which Christian ministers of various Churches preached, including the Rev. Harold Gosnell, rector of St. Mark's.

RETREAT CENTER FOR DALLAS

★ The diocese of Dallas will take possession of a large estate consisting of 92 acres adjacent to Texarkana, Texas, on February 1. It will be known as the Episcopal Church Center and plans are being made to develop it as a retreat and conference center. It will also provide a site for St. James' Day School of Texarkana which is outgrowing the facilities of the parish house of St. James' Church. The center will be operated and governed by a board of nine trustees to be elected by the diocesan convention.

On the property at present is a two story, colonial manor house; a one story house; a large cabin; a stable and a $30,000 swimming pool. These buildings situated in the center of the estate are surrounded by beautiful landscaping and grounds and also natural growths of native pines and oaks. Plans will be undertaken in the near future under competent architectural advice for the renovation of the present buildings to make them usable for the proposed purposes and also for the erection of further buildings.

The acquisition of this property, valued at $75,000, was made possible by the donation of a large anonymous gift by an interested person in the diocese and by the efforts of St. James' Church, Texarkana, under the leadership of the Rev. Thomas H. Carson. St. James' Church voted to turn over $15,000 which had been set up in a reserve for a new parish house and raised an additional $10,000 in two weeks during December to enable the diocese to acquire this property.

ST. JAMES, NEW YORK CELEBRATES

★ Dean John M. Krumm of St. Paul's Cathedral, Los Angeles, was the preacher on January 29th at St. James', New York, which marked the 140th anniversary of the laying of the cornerstone of the first church. At that time mid-Manhattan was a farm area and the church was a country chapel. Members of Holy Trinity, a chapel of the parish, joined in the service, with Vicar James A. Paul assisting Rector Arthur L. Kinsolving in conducting the service.

Dean Krumm took issue with critics who say that religion is old-fashioned and fails to meet the issues of the day. The Church sticks to the same truths because nothing can happen that will make them out of date. The only change, the dean said, is in man's understanding and application of these truths.

FOREIGN STUDENTS WELCOMED

★ Herbert N. Morford, superintendent of the hospital of the Good Shepherd, Syracuse, N. Y., and superintendent of the Saint Albans Sunday school, recently volunteered to head a community committee to offer hospitality to foreign students at Syracuse University. The several hundred students from overseas were experiencing considerable adjustment troubles when the Episcopal layman decided that friendly homes open to the students during their hour of trial would be a great help.

BISHOP BENTLEY VISITS BRAZIL

★ Bishop John B. Bentley, vice-president of the National Council and director of the overseas department, will visit Brazil in the near future, participating in the consecration of Bishop-elect Egmont Machado Krischke on March 8, at Bage. He will leave New York by air on March 2, and will stop off for 24 hours in San Juan, Puerto Rico, arriving in Rio de Janeiro Sunday morning, March 5. Following the consecration the Bishop will visit the Church's work throughout Southern Brazil, returning to New York late in March or in early April.

BISHOP GILBERT HONORED

★ Bishop Gilbert was the honored guest of the Church Club of New York at its annual dinner on February 6. Also speaking was Layman John Nicholas Brown of Providence, formerly assistant secretary of the navy for the air force.

GRIBBON TO ENGLAND AS EXCHANGE

★ The Rev. Robert B. Gribbon and family are to leave for England on March 11th where he will be in charge of St. Nicholas, Warwick, England, for six months. This is an exchange with the vicar of Warwick, Canon Henry A. Hayden, who will sail from England on March 3rd to take charge of Gribbon's parish, Church of the Holy Cross, North Plainfield, N. J. The whole thing came about as a result of letters appearing in The Witness and other papers advocating such exchanges of parishes.

LOUISIANA BISHOP URGES EXPANSION

★ An expanding home missions program was urged by Bishop Jones in addressing his first convention as Bishop of Louisiana. He said that large congregations must supplement the salaries and some of the expenses of small churches. He also stressed the need of more schools in the diocese and the improvement of existing ones. He likewise said the diocese needs a public relations program.

The convention, attended by about 200 delegates from 81 parishes, approved a full-time director of religious education.

SEABURY HOUSE IS POPULAR

★ Seabury House is an increasingly popular conference center, not only for the Episcopal Church, but for groups from other Churches. To date 36 conferences and meetings of various sorts are scheduled for 1950. In addition to meetings of the National Council, the national executive board of the Woman's Auxiliary, and other Episcopal Church gatherings, the 1950 schedule includes the National Association of Principals of Girls' Schools, Chinese Christian Youth Conference, Foreign Missions Conference, International Missionary Council, Federal Council of the Churches, and other denominational and interdenominational groups. The Seabury House board recently succeeded in clearing up the small indebtedness, so that everything is now entirely paid for, and the board intends to work toward setting up an endowment fund for maintenance.

ECUMENICAL IDEA SPREADING

★ Bishop Karl M. Block of California was reelected president of the Northern California-Western Nevada Council of Churches at a dinner in Oakland which marked the 6th anniversary of the organization. The Rev. J. Quinter Miller of New York, a Federal Council executive, told the 900 attending that "the ecumenical idea is sweeping the nation. The Protestant Churches are becoming united, yet remain true to their distinctive features."

GUILD OF ORGANISTS IN NEW HAMPSHIRE

★ The first service sponsored by the New Hampshire chapter of the American Guild of Organists took place at the Good Shepherd, Nashua, January 30. The Rev. Robert H. Dunn, rector of St. John's, Portsmouth, officiated at the service, the Rev. Elsom Eldridge, rector at Nashua, preached, and there was an organ recital by James A. Wood, organist and choirmaster at the Good Shepherd.

SEWANEE PROFESSOR IN ARKANSAS

★ Prof. Charles T. Harrison of the University of the South was the headliner at the convention of Arkansas, meeting January 24 at St. Luke's, Hot Springs, Arkansas. Besides addressing the convention he was the speaker at the laymen's dinner, speaking on the work of laymen and particularly about the work of Christian education. Bishop Bland Mitchell delivered his convention address at a service the evening of the 25th.

SOUTHERN OHIO AIDS INDIA

RACIAL BIGOTRY IS HIT

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Landmarks in the Story of Christianity. By H. A. Guy. Macmillan. $1.25.

A well-written, beautifully printed outline of church history for use in secondary schools. The personal element is emphasized and the point of view is that of the missionary expansion of the church—the author is much indebted to Professor Latourette's seven volumes. The first two chapters (on Our Lord) are not adequate, but the rest of the book ought to be drawn to the attention of everyone interested in religious education.

Saints are Not Sad. Forty Biographical Portraits. Assembled by F. J. Sheed. Sheed and Ward. $3.75.

This is an anthology of lives of saints, by such writers as G. K. Chesterton, Archbishop Goodier, C. C. Martindale, Father McNabb, Hilaire Belloc, and others. The forty lives stretch across the centuries from St. Paul to St. Teresa of Lisieux.

Religious Teaching for Schools. Cambridge University Press. $1.75.

This is a new and thoroughly revised edition of the 1924 Cambridge Syllabus, and reflects a post-war point of view. The Syllabus begins with children under five, and ends with the Sixth Form. The content is strongly Biblical, though doctrine, church history, and personal religions training all have their place. There are 20 pages of additional notes on the use of the book, on The Language of the Bible, on Making the Bible Familiar to Children, on History, Legend and Myth, on Miracles in the New Testament, and on The Artist and the Christian Faith. These little essays will be extremely suggestive to the teacher. At the end there is a list of books for reference—26 pages of annotated bibliography.

The book is a joint product of fifty Anglican and Free Church scholars and teachers. The quality of the book is superb, and it is to be hoped that it will be widely known in this country, as well as in England. The experts now engaged upon our new curriculum and every rector and teacher throughout the church should be urged to make the acquaintance of this excellent book. Here is a combination of modern thought with positive religious belief that is needed throughout the church.

The Prophetic Faith. By Martin Buber. Translated from the Hebrew by Carlyle Witton Davies. Macmillan. $3.75.

It is no small part of the merit of this new book by Martin Buber that it never loses its grasp of the central reality which dominates the religious faith of the Old Testament. Buber attempts to discern this reality by an examination of the literary traditions before the prophets. He begins with a brief but fascinating account of the Song of Deborah, then proceeds to the Shechem assembly of Josh. 24, and finally focuses upon the covenant event at Sinai. In the Elohistic decalog of Exodus 20, he finds himself on solid historical ground. Here the basic elements are God's "accompanying leadership," Israel's loving devotion, and the zealous demand for decision. But the true beginnings of Israel's life lie deep within the heart of the patriarchal tradition. With this substructure established, Buber studies Hebrew prophecy under such topics as the holy event, the great tensions, and the God of the sufferers. The fresh and vivid emphasis upon events, upon the unique relation between the people and its covenant—God, upon the orientation of prophetic faith towards the future, upon suffering, and upon the reality of revelation make this an exciting and deeply rewarding book.

Everywhere Buber writes as a master of the biblical text. He has made it so much his own and has acquired such an interior insight into its meaning that he is not inhibited by modern critical views. He is probably the most stimulating and profound interpreter of the Old Testament in our generation. Many will deny this because they will feel that his interpretation is insecurely grounded. There is some force in this criticism, but it must not blind us to the greatness of Buber's current contribution to our understanding of the living sources and vitalities of Scripture. We are in a much better position today to view the origins of Israel's life than our predecessors were. Our view of the literary sources is not nearly so dogmatic and fixed. We have a more reliable apprehension of the "primitive" mind. Buber is not a conventional scholar. He is constantly going his own way. If anyone is under the impression that he knows the Old Testament or understands the prophets, let him read Buber. He has much to say that is of central importance to Jews and Christians alike. It would mean something of a revolution if modern students would sit at his feet to learn what he has to say about the Bible.

MINIMUM MARRIAGE AGE FOR ISRAEL

A bill is before the Israeli parliament making it illegal to contract marriage before the age of 17. Ada Maimon, Labor party representative, in the debate said the age should be 18, except in exceptional cases. She is the sister of Rabbi Judah Maimon, minister of religion in the Israeli cabinet.

ATTACKS ON CHURCH IN POLAND

A new wave of attacks on the R. C. Church in Poland indicates a breakdown in the negotiations started six months ago for an agreement between the Church and the government. The featured stories allege abuses by Caritas, the national Catholic welfare agency; newspapers also are playing up the trial of several monks charged with degenerate treatment of children under their care.

For the first time in the history of the Methodist Church in Puerto Rico, a native has been appointed superintendent of the annual conference. He is the Rev. Tomas Rico Soltero, trained in the U. S.

CANADIANS PRAY FOR SNOW

Roman Catholic residents all over the Laurentien skiing area are praying for snow. Hills are green or covered with ice from unseasonal rains. Everyone of the 70 ski tows are at a standstill. So the people, at the request of their priests, flocked to their churches to pray for two feet of snow. The federal tourist director has estimated that ski resort proprietors have already lost $2,000,000 this year.

VATICAN-EGYPT PLANNING ANTI-COMMUNIST PACT

Negotiations are taking place between representatives of the Vatican and the Egyptian government, aiming at a Christian-Moslem front against Communism. The move was denounced by newspapers in Czechoslovakia, with Catholic News, a government sponsored paper, stating that "in this matter the Vatican was not moved by religious tolerance but by hatred of Communists."

PROPOSES REVIVAL OF SANHEDRIN

Revival of the Sanhedrin, supreme judicial body of the ancient Jewish state, was urged by Israeli minister of religion, Judah L. Maimon, at a meeting of rabbis at Tiberias, northern Israel. He said that the new body might be empowered to deal with proposed changes in Jewish law and also exercise other types of authority.

SOUTH INDIA ORDINATIONS ARE RECOGNIZED

Official recognition of the validity of ordinations in the Church of South India was given by the general council of the Church of India, Burma and Ceylon, meeting in January at New Delhi. This conforms with the position of the Lambeth Conference of 1948 which urged that Anglican Churches recognize the bishops, presbyters and deacons of the South India Church as "acceptable throughout the Anglican communion, subject to local provincial regulations."

ITALIAN PROTESTANTS SEEK FREEDOM

Italian Protestant leaders, meeting in Naples, called upon American Protestants to press for enforcement of the religious freedom clause of the Italian peace treaty. They also called upon the Italian people "to see to it that the rights and duties of citizens as provided by the constitution of the Italian Republic" are respected.

MRS. JOHN H. MOORE
Churchwoman of San Antonio, Texas

Now that the Prayer Book year has closed, and we have given thanks for it and rejoiced in the consideration of its history, its beauty, its extended influence in the life of Christians everywhere, perhaps it would be well to consider a neglected phase—the disuse of many of its parts. Are we losing something beautiful from our worship? Are many of the services interesting merely as history? Have they lost their flavor? Are certain prayers no longer helpful?

As I belong to the older generation I grieve that the Te Deum, the Litany, the "Christ our Passover," the exhortation in the Communion Service (Dearly Beloved), and the Prayer for Congress have fallen into disuse. The Te Deum is the greatest loss. Church people used to feel the joy of each festival as this great hymn was sung. White hangings always called for it. Now many of those confirmed in the last fifteen years, including many teachers in the church schools have never heard it. When the "Benedictus es Domine" was inserted in the Prayer Book at the last revision it rang the death knell for the Te Deum. Even at the opening service of the General Convention, when surely the great hymn of praise would have been expected, we find that the short one from the Apocrypha, not the Christian Te Deum was used. The clergy themselves, the younger ones, have never learned to love this hymn—and no wonder. One told me that they never used it in the seminary as time had to be conserved! Only those who have used it often can appreciate it and love it and not begrudge the time used. The only way to restore it to the affection of the congregation is to use it often.

The Litany is now seldom used. Advent and Lent used to call it forth. Now Ash Wednesday will find it in use for some small service because the "important" services now seem to be preaching at noon-day. These noon-day preaching services on Wednesdays of course give opportunity to men to be present but the short half-hour does not seem an adequate substitute for less hurried worship. The Litany in its petitions challenges the thoughts of the worshipper to consider avenues of service to meet the needs of "all sorts and conditions of men."

The beautiful "Christ our Passover" for Easter has vanished almost entirely from use. Of course all the services on Easter Day are those of Holy Communion and rightly so, but once in a while a priest will begin these with the sentences of this anthem, and sometimes it is used for the offertory anthem of the day. There is none more appropriate. Furthermore—why is it not used on Low Sunday? The rubric reads "throughout the Octave." One minister once told me he had never heard it or even read it and he had been many years in the ministry.

Well can I recall as a child the thrill with which all the congregation rose when the minister began the exhortation with the words, "Dearly beloved, on Sunday next I purpose, through God's assistance to administer to all such as shall be religiously and devoutly disposed, the most comfortable sacrament of the body and blood of Christ to be by them received —etc." Now even the notices of services and holy days as required by the rubric have been omitted in the interest of shortness—but time is given to notices of bazaars, luncheons, square dances, etc. These not only absorb time but detract from the spirit of worship.

With all of the criticism of the 80th Congress, and now of the 81st, not once have I heard used the Prayer for Congress from the Prayer Book. It is a fine prayer and makes one wish to do one's utmost for the representatives of our country who are making such important decisions for us. If congregations heard this occasionally they might be moved to use the prayer in their private devotions.

There is a beautiful prayer "for those advanced in years" which appears occasionally in the Forward booklets. I use it daily and I am mindful of the petition, "keep us from narrow pride in outgrown ways, blind eyes that will not see the good of change, impatient judgments of the methods and experiments of others"; and I try to be reconciled to the loss of many beauties in our services but with the hope that the "Prayer Book year" with all its study may restore some of them to us.

Lest any should thing that I am writing from limited experience I would say that I have passed my—three-score-years and ten—that I have been active in Church work more than fifty of those years; that I have lived in three dioceses and in four parishes; that I have done both professional and volunteer work over many areas.

Church Pension Fund Gives Report to the Church

An Increase of Nearly a Million Dollars A Year in Pensions Now Being Paid

★ General Convention in October authorized an increase in pension assessment rate for the purpose of increasing smaller pensions by incorporating new higher minimum pensions. The double step became effective January 1, 1950.

As a result the pensions of 2,508 retired and disabled clergy and widows and orphans have now been increased by 77 per cent, on the average. This large group had been receiving $1,295,992 a year. Now they are receiving $2,283,155 a year, an increase of $987,163 a year. The pensions of nineteen out of every twenty individuals on the full beneficiary roll have, thus, been increased.

The comparison of the old and the new annual pensions of the entire 2,670 beneficiaries, including the 162 individuals whose pensions are not affected by the forward step, is given below.

Those whose pensions as originally granted are above the new minimum figures are not being increased. In addition there are a few pensions which have been below the new minimums that are not increased as a part of this forward step. These are pensions in late ordinations or reception cases which were increased at the time they were originally granted to levels higher than called for by the present step, and a few pensions in cases of unpaid assessments which would be above the new minimums had the assessments been fully paid.

The clergy retirement and disability pensions are now, except in special cases, $1,500 a year or greater and the widows' pensions $750 or greater. Hitherto, the minimum retirement and disability pensions had been $600 a year and the minimum widow's pension $300.

The allowances for minor orphan children are now, except in special cases, $300 a year up to age seven, $400 from age seven to fourteen, and $500 from age fourteen during dependence to twenty-one. These figures are $200 a year higher than the respective figures hitherto in force.

What are the special cases where the full new minimum figures do not apply? These are cases of (1) exceptionally low salaries, (2) late ordination or reception and (3) assessment arrears.

	Number	Total Old Basis	Total New Basis	Average Old Basis	Average New Basis
Age Allowances	832	$ 773,411	$1,162,616	$929	$1,397
Disability Allowances	116	98,565	166,671	849	1,436
Widows' Allowances	1,532	563,737	1,058,302	368	690
Orphans' Allowances	190	42,566	77,852	224	410
	2,670	$1,478,279	$2,465,441

Exceptionally Low Salaries

When the salaries on the basis of which assessments have been payable for a clergyman have averaged less than $1,500 a year, his pension is increased to the equivalent of the average salary, and his widow's pension to one-half of the average salary. A pension of one hundred percent of a man's average salary is a rarely liberal provision among pension systems. Yet for clergy with low stipends in their active ministry it is justified.

Salaries which have averaged under $1,500 a year are in two main groups. The first group includes the native missionaries in the foreign field and in some of our western states. Such salaries have often in the past ranged down as low as $300 or $400 a year. There are many native missionaries now active whose compensation is in the $500-$1,200 a year range.

The second group are clergy who have had shorter or longer periods when they were not engaged in the active ministry in the Church. For such periods a hypothetical salary of $1,200 a year has in the past been used for pension and assessment purposes. Their smaller pensions are therefore accountable to a partly inactive ministry.

Then there are cases of clergy whose main employment over periods has been secular but who have exercised a part-time ministry, naturally at smaller compensations than normal.

The cases of clergy other than native missionaries who have had normal length full time continuous ministry but whose stipends have averaged under $1,500 a year are rare. Salary figures used for years of ministry before the Fund started in 1917 in arriving at the averages, in all cases of normal ministry, are higher than $1,500. Consequently that earlier ministry of this group of clergy has not prevented the full $1,500 pension from applying.

Late Ordination or Reception

The full new minimums do not apply to clergy taking up the ministry in this Church after reaching age forty unless their active ministry, including any period after reaching age sixty-eight, has covered a span of twenty-eight years or more. The adjustment downward in the minimum in such cases is a proportionate one. As an example, if a clergyman is ordained at forty-four he will have had twenty-four years of ministry to age sixty-eight, and the pension then will be 24/28ths of $1,500, namely $1,285.71 a year. If this clergyman continues active to age seventy-two he will have had a ministry of the full twenty-eight years and the full minimum of $1,500 a year applies as the pension.

The same principle determines the widow's pension. Thus if the clergyman referred to above dies at any time up to age sixty-eight the widow's pension will be 24/28ths of $750, namely $642.85 a year. If he remains active to seventy-two the eventual widow's pension will be $750.

Assessment Arrears

Assessment arrears existing at the time a pension is called for has always meant a reduced pension. If the assessment schedule is for example ninety percent paid then the pension is ninety percent of what would be granted had all assessments been paid. This principle is used in adjusting the new minimum pensions. Incomplete assessment schedules have resulted mainly from periods when clergymen are not exercising their ministry and they have chosen not to exercise their right to maintain full standing. The payment of assessments by clergy who are not active is a voluntary matter with them. Assessments left unpaid by parishes have been rare over the years.

Deposition and Reinstatement

There are a half dozen clergy and widows receiving pensions for whom there was a period of deposition, with later reinstatement. This circumstance results in an adjustment in the minimum pension figure for them, taking into account the shorter ministry.

Orphans' Allowances

The allowances for minor orphan children are likewise subject to the same types of adjustment in cases of late ordination or reception and incomplete assessments. The allowances for the children are also adjusted so that the total of the widow's pension figure and the children's allowances in any one family shall not be greater than what the father's average annual salary has been.

Pension Assessments

These increases in pensions now in force and increases according to the same principles in pensions to be granted in the future are supported by the increase in assessment rate from ten percent to fifteen percent of clergy stipends. The continuance of the pension increase will therefore depend on the continued whole-hearted cooperation of the parishes and other units in the payment of the assessments and on there being no material decline in the level of clergy stipends on which the assessments are based.

The whole Church has in the past given virtually unanimous support to its clergy pension system, for the benefit of retired clergy and their surviving widows and minor children. The present increase in pension levels, involving the assumption by the Church of the higher assessment rate, is a step both bold and realistic. The demand from all parts of the Church was insistent and General Convention heeded it by unanimous affirmative action in both Houses. Under these circumstances, the basing of increases in pensions on the continued full support of the assessment paying units is a wise step for the Church to have taken.

EXPECTATIONS ARE OVERPAID

★ Total expectations from dioceses for 1949 totaled $2,667,702. The treasurer of the National Council, Russell E. Dill, reported on January 30 that the sum of $2,701,732 had been received. Five dioceses failed to meet their pledged amount, but there were generous overpayments on the part of some others.

RUSSELL E. DILL

HOLY TRINITY PREACHER

★ The managing editor of The Witness was the preacher at the services at Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, February 12th. In addition to the regular services there was a communion service for the "silent congregation" in the afternoon, with an interpreter signing the service and the brief sermon to the deaf-mutes.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

HYDROGEN BOMB PROTEST

★ Prof. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School is one of thirty religious leaders to protest against the manufacture of the hydrogen bomb. Asserting that the country's moral prestige suffered greatly when the decision was made to launch atomic warfare on Hiroshima and Nagasaki, the group warned against an action which, they said, would mean further loss of moral prestige at this time.

"We are convinced," the statement said, "that the moral standing of our country, especially among the masses of Asia and Africa, will be undermined almost beyond repair if we now proceed by another unilateral decision to launch the terror of hydrogen bombs on the world. At the same time, it is now clear that the idea that defense and security can be gained through atomic armament is a delusion. The atomic bomb did not bring safety. If we now proceed by another unilateral decision to engage in a super-atomic bomb race and then in a race of still deadlier weapons, this can only represent further investment in insecurity.

"For Christians and the Christian Church the issue posed anew by the proposal to manufacture hydrogen bombs is not primarily whether the United States can afford to run the physical risk of being subjected to atomic warfare, but whether it can afford the spiritual risk of slaughtering other peoples in atomic warfare, of losing its soul in the hope—probably vain—of saving its skin. It is not a question of what is expedient but what is right; not a question of what man's wisdom concludes but of what the will of God as seen in Christ reveals."

In releasing the statement the signers declared: "That the President should have made this fateful decision before there could be any adequate discussion of this life and death issue by the people of even by Congress raises the question whether any claim that we still have a responsible and democratic government is not a mockery."

Other signers were Clarence Pickett, retiring secretary of the American Friends Service Committee; Prof. Kenneth S. Latourette of Yale; Prof. Henry J. Cadbury of Harvard; Prof. Arthur L. Swift Jr., Union Theological Seminary; Prof. Purd Dietz, Eden Theological Seminary; Prof. Walter S. Davison, Auburn Theological Seminary.

LAYMAN LEARNS AND GIVES

★ For some months, the Rev. Louis Perkins of St. John's Church, Auburn, N. Y. has been ministering to a family where the head of the house did not come to church or believe in what the Episcopal Church was doing. After visiting the church one Sunday some weeks ago, and after having seen Mr. Perkins ministering to a sick member of his family, the man called in the rector and said, "I am very impressed with what you are doing, and I have never done anything to help this church, so after an inspection, I find that you badly need new hassocks. Here is $1,200, which will help you buy 400 of them." He left the Auburn rector only after swearing him to secrecy regarding his identity.

CONFERENCES ON HEALING

★ Eight clergymen, equally divided between Presbyterians and Episcopalians, have been meeting once a week for several months in Syracuse to discuss spiritual healing. They have been sharing their experiences on personal pastoral problems and case studies.

WOMEN LOSE AGAIN

★ In sessions where the discussion ranged from slapstick comedy to serious consideration, the diocese of Michigan, meeting in convention, rejected for the fourth consecutive time the proposed amendment to the constitution which would permit women to serve on vestries. The delegates adopted resolutions deploring the "softening" of words of hymns in recent editions of the hymnal; condemned the destruction of food in order to create scarcity and thus maintain prices. The convention also set in motion the set-up for a campaign for $977,000 for future work in the diocese and for the national work of the Church.

Bishop Emrich in his address warned against "vague goodwill, easy tolerance and indifference," and said that "the safe days are gone, and that is good for our souls. The future of our world lies with a military group, and a militant cruelty, selfishness and godlessness will always defeat a vague good-will."

There were 700 members of the convention and the convention of women at the dinner when Bishop Hobson of Southern Ohio launched the campaign for funds.

INDUSTRIALISTS HEAD CAMPAIGN

★ Henry Kaiser Jr., son of the automobile manufacturer, and Robert E. Gross, president of an aircraft concern, are to head the drive for a minimum of $750,000 for the diocese of Los Angeles. The fund will be used largely for the expansion of mission work in the diocese.

LEARNING FROM OTHERS

★ The Auxiliary of the diocese of Newark held a symposium at Trinity Cathedral House on February 1 on "how Christian women work." There were four speakers, an Episcopalian, a Baptist, a Presbyterian and a Lutheran.

BISHOP GILBERT FEARS ARMED PEACE

★ Bishop Gilbert of New York, addressing the annual dinner of the Church Club, deplored that men think the peace and security of the world can be maintained by "armed might and the use of newly developed devices which might bring the destruction of the whole race." He said that churchmen are today faced with a challenge such as "the followers of Christ have never been called upon to face before" and then added that while men pray that God's will be done, he has little place in their thinking. In resorting to armed might, he said, we are utterly disregarding the lessons of two world wars.

WESTERN MICHIGAN CONVENTION

★ Bishop Harris of Liberia was the headliner at the convention of Western Michigan, held at St. Mark's Cathedral, Grand Rapids. Bishop Whittemore, in his address at this diamond jubilee affair, stressed religious education and the need for maintaining the building fund if the diocese is to continue progressing. He also proposed a survey to determine possible lines of growth.

BISHOP EVERETT JONES IN HAWAII

★ Bishop Everett H. Jones of West Texas was the headliner at the convention of Honolulu, held February 10-15. He arrived with Mrs. Jones on February 1 for a brief vacation before the convention.

BISHOP COLMORE IS ILL

★ National Council has learned that Bishop Charles B. Colmore, retired Bishop of Puerto Rico, suffered a stroke recently at his home in Winter Park, Fla. The Bishop is reported to be improving slowly, and has regained the ability to speak, and at the time the report was sent, it was expected that he would sit in a chair in the very near future. Full recovery will be slow, but confidence is expressed that it seems certain.

PAROCHIAL SCHOOL CONFERENCE

★ A conference on parochial schools was held at the Good Shepherd, Augusta, Ga., for the province of Sewanee. Clergy, teachers and just interested individuals from several southern dioceses attended.

LAYMEN SPONSOR SERVICES

★ Laymen of Charleston, S. C. are again sponsoring noonday services in Lent at St. Philip's. The preachers also are holding forth each Wednesday evening, the services rotating among the Episcopal churches of the city. The preachers are Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina; Bishop Nash of Mass.; Bishop Keeler of Minnesota; Bishop Juhan of Florida; Bishop Dandridge of Tenn.; the Rev. James W. Kennedy of Lexington, Ky. and the Rev. Ray Holden of Raleigh.

TOWN AND COUNTRY CHURCHES get a lot of attention these days. Attending a recent conference were Bishop Horstick of Eau Claire; Bishop Hubbard of Michigan; Bishop Kirchhoffer of Indianapolis; Bishop Page of Northern Michigan; the Rev. Samuel N. Keys of Waynesville, Ohio, and the Rev. C. D. Braidwood of Lapeer, Michigan, where this particular meeting was held Bishop Walters of San Joaquin was the speaker at a missionary mass meeting, and there were a number of speakers at a dinner which marked the 100th anniversary of the diocese. Another highlight was the sermon of Bishop Parsons, retired, at the opening service in which he reviewed the history of the diocese.

CLERGY CONFERENCE AT SYRACUSE

CHINESE MISSION CONSECRATED

★ The climax of a dramatic program of church development came on January 29th with the consecration of the chapel and the dedication of the vicarage at True Sunshine Chinese Mission in Oakland, Cal. The event is of more than local significance inasmuch as both the National board of the Woman's Auxiliary and the department of home missions of the National Council have contributed large sums of money to the construction of the plant, and the parish hall is named in honor of the former executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, Miss Grace Lindley.

Over 300 persons taxed the capacity of the new chapel as Bishop Block knocked for admission and proceeded to the sanctuary. Bishop Block was attended by the Rev. Daniel G. C. Wu, retired, former vicar of the mission; the Rev. Joseph K. Tsukamoto, vicar of Christ Church, San Francisco; the Rev. Clarence Lee, vicar of True Sunshine, San Francisco; the Rev. Stephen S. H. Ko, vicar of True Sunshine, Oakland; and the Rev. Henry T. Praed, dean of the convocation of Oakland. The worship of the congregation was led by the combined choirs of the two Chinese Missions.

In his address Bishop Block traced the history of the Mission from the time of its founding by Deaconess Drant, who gathered together the nucleus of the congregation and brought a young Chinese, Daniel G. C. Wu, from Honolulu, to assist her in the work. The Bishop then went on to speak of the thirty years of service rendered by the Rev. Mr. Wu, in whose honor the new chapel was dedicated. He spoke feelingly of the appreciation of the diocese to the countless friends of Mr. Wu who had made the buildings possible. The Rev.

Mr. Wu responded to the Bishop's address, speaking in English and in Chinese, and expressing his thankfulness and his happiness at the evidences of the sound foundation and flourishing condition of the work.

At the close of the service, the Bishop announced that, by the desire of the congregation and with the permission of the standing committee of the diocese, the mission would be known henceforth as the Mission Church of Our Saviour.

BISHOP REPORTED ARRESTED

★ A news bulletin broadcast by a New York station stated that Bishop Ronald O. Hall of Hongkong said that he was appealing for the release of Bishop Quentin K. Y. Huang, who, he said, was arrested in Kunming by the Communists for political reasons. The National Council has no information to explain or supplement the radio statement.

LOUIS PITT MARKS ANNIVERSARY

★ The Rev. Louis W. Pitt celebrated the tenth anniversary of his rectorship of Grace Church, New York, on February 5th and told the large congregation that "during the decade I have at no time been fundamentally discouraged. I have not experienced frustration and defeat in this catastrophic era, characterized as it has been by a second world war and by extraordinary social and political readjustments." He said that he hoped to pass on to his successor, when the time comes, "a strong, vigorous, united parish to accomplish in the future the sort of work that has characterized the parish for many years."

He urged wholehearted support of Bishop Donegan who is to succeed Bishop Gilbert at diocesan next January. Bishop Donegan visited Grace Church the following Sunday, February 12th, for a confirmation service.

ECUMENICAL RELATIONS COMMISSION

★ Bishop Angus Dun of Washington was elected chairman of the joint commission on ecumenical relations at a meeting held at Seabury House, February 1-2. The vice-chairman is Dean Lawrence Rose of the General Seminary and the secretary is the Rev. Floyd W. Tomkins. The conference was convened by Bishop Sterrett of Bethlehem.

Since this commission was appointed to take the place of the old faith and order commission it was charged by General Convention with the responsibility of the faith and order movement and for all cooperative action between the World Council of Churches and the Federal Council of Churches. It was charged by General Convention with full responsibility for "all matters of an ecumenical nature, especially to those referred from the first assembly of the World Council of Churches, for which we have joint responsibility," and the commission was further instructed "to see that the Church is kept informed as to progress in this field of ecumenical relations, especially at the grass roots level, and that it be held responsible for maintaining and furthering the close fellowship and cooperation of the Episcopal Church with the World Council of Churches and the Federal Council."

A considerable amount of time was given to the representation of the Episcopal Church on the various committees and commissions on faith and order, the World Council and the Federal Council. A special nominating committee is to nominate 27 representatives for the next biennial meeting of the Federal Council and the representatives from the Episcopal Church to the faith and order conference of 1952 in Lund, Sweden. This commission is to nominate to the Presiding Bishop the names of those who will represent our Church in all official capacities, save where the World Council or Federal Council has elected members to committees or commissions from our official delegates. Mr. Charles P. Taft and Bishop Dun are on the central committee of the World Council.

In setting up a tentative budget for the work of the commission, the meetings to be held during the triennium were considered and sums allocated for delegations, including meetings of the executive committee and central committee, the executive committee of the Federal Council, executive committee on faith and order and the biennial meetings of the Federal Council.

In discussing the whole relationship of our Church to the Federal Council it was discovered that the policy of the Federal Council in effect was made at the biennial meetings, where all Churches were fully represented and that even on the executive committee which handled interim matters the membership was still a proportionate representation from the Communions themselves so at all times matters of policy are under the scrutiny of all participating groups.

Bishop Sterrett, chairman of our delegation to the Federal Council and the member of its executive committee for ten years, declared that it was possible to register a vote in the negative whenever any denomination could not fully subscribe to the matter voted on. He also made it clear that General Convention and its actions guided the Episcopal delegation in its decisions. One of the great problems of the ecumenical movement is the general lack of information of the participating members.

NORTHERN MICHIGAN CONVENTION

★ Northern Michigan has ceased to be an aided diocese by voting at the convention held at Marquette, January 25-26, to relinquish the grant it has been receiving from the Council.

EDITORIALS

The Atoning Life

SOME weeks ago The Witness ventured to express the belief that one of the needs in religious thought and life was a clear and simple definition or interpretation of the common theological words and phrases, so that they might make sense to the average layman and thus become for him really creative and enlightening in his daily life and thought. We gave samples of such phrases and, as evidence of what we meant, tried our hand at a simple interpretation of "The Sacramental Life." We then urged our readers to try their hands at a similar re-interpretation of other common theological terms and to submit them to us. So far, our suggestion has not borne fruit. So, we are going to try again with our own definition of another common theological term.

"Atonement" is a word in the Christian vocabulary not so often heard and seen as it was two generations ago. It remains, however, the expression of one of the most profound and most practical truths of Christian thought and life. It ought to be a light and a stimulus to every Christian wayfarer in a confused and violent world today. Its essential, inner meaning is clear and constitutes a revolutionary challenge to men's present habits of thought and action.

In the history of Christian theology, "Atonement" has had many interpretations, varying in accordance with the cultural level of the age. Underneath them all have been these basic facts: Man has sinned by flouting the will of God. Man is too weak and ignorant to make himself over. God therefore enters into mankind in Christ and gives humanity the power he lacked to transform its character. That these are the basic facts assumed by all interpretations of the doctrine of the Atonement would probably be agreed to by Christian theologians. The perennial problem however, always remains: How shall the renewing power of Christ actually become operative in humanity as a whole or in individual characters?

We believe that the first step toward answering this question is a recognition that the principle of the divine Atonement is a living fact as between man and man; that what our Lord did for sinful humanity we ordinary mortals are, or may be, doing in our relations with one another. Christian theology declares that the divine suffering of Christ brought new life to mankind because he had completely identified himself with humanity. No one who has had intimate experience with gross sin in the persons of stubborn sinners can possibly doubt that the principle of the divine Atonement can effectively work its renewing miracles as between man and man. John Doe and James Roe are intimate friends. They live together and have mutual interests. John falls deeper and deeper into gross sin. His new interests are revolting to James; they threaten to break the long friendship. But James, having in him the spirit of Christ, refuses to let the fellowship lapse. He continues to live with his friend, to go with him into places and atmospheres which nauseate him. He refrains from preaching or expostulation. He simply stands by, day after day and month after month. He suffers acutely through all this sad experience. But he maintains through it all his own ideals. John at last, like the Prodigal in our Lord's parable, comes to his senses and returns to his old interests and to the never-changing fellowship of his friend James. It is James' suffering and steadfastness that works the miracle of renewal. Not a rare instance this. It is duplicated over and over in families, in friendships, in prisons and hospitals. Something like it is taking place on a large scale in the work of "Alcoholics Anonymous." The eternal principle of the redemptive power of suffering, as between man and man, is in action all around us, had we eyes to see and courage to test. And the more clearly we do see it and the oftener we are brave to test it in our own relationships, the sooner will we realize that the divine Atonement of our Lord is being implemented by him in a thousand human fellowships. The Apostle Paul was driving at the same truth when he said, "Ye suffer fools gladly, seeing ye yourselves are wise."

THANKS to Jesus, the Kingdom of God is not up in the clouds. It is as real as politics and trade. In the strength of His life we ask ourselves, Who is my neighbor? And of ourselves, inspired by Him we answer, It is the man and the woman farthest away from us, between whom and ourselves yawns the deepest gulf of prejudice and tradition. We make ourselves morally responsible for our world. With our life's blood we sign an immense bond. We will carry the law of human fellowship into every part of human experience.

We believe that it is also pertinent to point out that in all the international problems of today the only possible solution is in the application of this same principle of the atoning life. Fulminating against the dreadful sins of Russia, of Spain, of Nazism gets us nowhere but onto the horror-go-round of futile recrimination and worse-than-useless threats of military force. Only a willingness to suffer humiliation if need be and to re-create fellowship with sinners at any cost will ever get this poor world off the dead-centre of self-defeating greed and violence. Some nation or people has got to take the initiative and break the vicious circle of competitive self-righteousness and take the glorious risk of surrendering righteous claims and armed menacings for the sake of new fellowship, at any price of suffering for itself. Could any nation be better cast for that role of the atoning life than America?

Current Movements and Christianity

PEACE MOVEMENT: Ally, Competitor or Both?

By KATHARINE C. PIERCE

THE peace movement is not only an ally of Christianity but an integral part of it. It is a well established fact that for the first three centuries of our era Christians were pacifists by definition.* It is not, however, the purpose of this paper to trace the history of pacifism but to approach the subject from a contemporary point of view.

Twenty years ago the Lambeth Conference said "War, as a method of settling international disputes, is incompatible with the teaching and example of our Lord, Jesus Christ. We believe that as Christian conscience has condemned infanticide and slavery and torture, it is now called to condemn war as an outrage on the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of all mankind." The following year General Convention incorporated this statement in a general resolution on world peace and went on to urge that the naturalization laws be modified to admit conscientious objectors to citizenship provided they would be willing to serve as non-combatants. The pastoral letters for years reiterated this condemnation of war. As late as 1939 the Bishops said "War as an instrument of national policy is a hideous denial of God and his condemnation rests upon it. It is rationally unjustifiable, morally indefensible, and religiously irreconcilable with the love of God and our neighbor. And it is wholly incompatible with the teaching and example of our Lord Jesus Christ." Though at that time the war in Europe had started the pastoral goes on to say "We recognize, however, that there are times when peaceful expedients having failed, men are inescapably involved in war, and we sympathize with all those whose conscience then impels them to participate in armed conflict. God does not will war. The vast majority of mankind of every nation do not will it, but man's refusal to accept God's will brings upon the human race this accursed thing. He has shown us the way, and said 'Walk you in it,' but we have refused."

This seems to put the burden of proof on those who participate in armed conflict and not on those who for conscience sake cannot do so. Two years earlier the Oxford Conference had condemned war as "a particular demonstration of the power of sin in this world, and a defiance of the righteousness of God as revealed in Jesus Christ and him crucified." It then stated three positions that Christians hold in regard to war, some take the pacifist position, some would participate only in just wars and some believe that the state is "the agent divinely appointed" to preserve a nation and therefore can require any service of its citizens.

Delaware Statement

THERE were several conferences before the United States entered World War II that anlyzed the situation from the Christian point of view, among them an international one in Geneva in July 1939 said that "War is an evil and non-Christian method." The Federal Council's commission on a just and durable peace was appointed about this time. Its meeting in Delaware, Ohio, in March 1942, put forth certain guiding principles among them the statement that "moral law undergirds the world;" another that "means must be found to effect peaceful change" because "the prestige of Christianity has been gravely impaired by the frequency with which so-called Christian nations have used violence as a method of international change." This commission has now become the Church commission on international affairs with officers and members from nineteen different countries.

The Lambeth Conference had been unable to meet between 1930 and 1948 because of the war. When it did meet two years ago it reaffirmed its resolution of the previous conference. The Assembly of the World Council of Churches followed immediately after Lambeth. It stated that "War as a method of settling disputes is incompatible with the teaching and example of our Lord Jesus Christ. The part which war plays in our present international life is a sin against God and a degradation of man." In carefully chosen words it described the three positions taken by Christians as "1. There are those who hold that, even though entering a war may be a Christian's duty in particular circumstances, modern warfare, with its mass destruction, can never be an act of justice. 2. In the absence of impartial supranational institutions, there are those who hold that military action is the ultimate sanction of the rule of law, and that citizens must be distinctly taught that it is their duty to defend the law by force if necessary. 3. Others, again, refuse military service of all kinds, convinced that an absolute witness against war and for peace is for them the will of God and they desire that the Church should speak to the same effect."

It will be noted that the Amsterdam assembly did not say anything about the state being a "divinely" appointed agent as Oxford had. There was a debate about the first position, some of the leaders, notably the Bishop of Chichester though not himself a pacifist, maintained that with obliteration bombing and atomic weapons no war can be called "just." Lambeth, General Convention, the House of Bishops, the Federal Council and the World Council of Churches are agreed that war is incompatible with the way of Christ. It is therefore evident that the leaders of the Churches think of the peace movement as not only a legitimate activity but a real part of the Churches business.

Episcopal Action

THE attitude of the Episcopal Church toward pacifists has changed since the first World War. There were rectors then who were deprived of their parishes and in one case, Bishop Paul Jones, of his missionary district. He was never fully reinstated and never had another diocese. There is no doubt that the Church has a deep sense of regret if not of shame for this treatment of a great spiritual leader. It may be that this incident had a bearing on the treatment of rectors and bishops during the last war. No rector lost his parish and no bishop lost his diocese. On the other hand seven bishops who are members of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship have been elected and consecrated since the United States went into the war. The largest pacifist organization that is based on religious conviction is the Fellowship of Reconciliation founded at the beginning of World War I. Eleven years ago the E. P. F. was started as an affiliate of it, the first of the denominational fellowships of which there are now nine. We believed that through our churches we could reach many people hitherto unconnected with any peace group. There are two types of membership: regular membership, "In loyalty to the person, spirit and teachings of Jesus Christ, my conscience commits me to his way of redemptive love and compels me to refuse to participate in or give moral support to any war"; associate membership, "I agree that war is monstrous evil and confess the sin, personal and social, which leads to involvement in it; and dedicate myself to the establishment and maintenance of a true peace, advocating such social, economic and international readjustment at whatever cost to class privilege and to nationalistic prestige and self-interest as may be necessary to remove the causes for war and to abolish it as a fact." The growth of the organization is slow but steady. The membership is now about 950. The Fellowship is not officially recognized by the Episcopal Church but it is generally regarded as the peace organization of the Church.

Canon Raven wrote one of the preliminary papers for the Oxford Conference in which he said that just as slavery had been the great evil in the last century so war is the great evil of this and that it is right that all of our energies should be concentrated on ending it. Surely the people most concerned and also most able to do this are those who call their Saviour the "Prince of Peace."

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

2. What is an absolute Pacifist required to do: in peace; in time of war?
3. What is meant by a "just" war? Do you think that any recent wars, international or civil, have been "just"?
4. What position was taken by the Amsterdam Conference on the question of war?
5. Do you think that the state is "the agent divinely appointed" and therefore may require any service of citizens?
6. What alternative does a pacifist have under U. S. law in wartime?
7. What was the record of the Episcopal Church in world war one? in world war two?
8. Discuss the difference between the two types of membership in the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship.

The Meaning of the Creed

The First of a Series for Lent

By JOHN E. HINES
The Bishop Coadjutor of Texas

WHATEVER else one may say of the Christian religion, one is compelled to say that it is rooted in history. It took its rise, as D. W. Forrest reminds us, "not in an abstract conception of what might be, but in recognition of what had been." ("The Christ of History and Experience," p. 5). It revealed itself, from the beginning not as a speculative theory, but as a loyal response to a fact. That is the bond that unites the entire New Testament. That is the nucleus about which Christian doctrine and Christian exhortation revolve.

It was the "Good News" about Jesus that the first Christian preacher proclaimed. As we all can understand, the Jewish Sanhedrin would not have complained that Peter and John had preached about God. They could have spoken to the full of the kingdom and of Messiah. But to escape the wrath of the Sanhedrin, it was the name Jesus that they would have had to omit. Bravely, they replied: "We cannot but speak the things which we have seen and heard."

It was the same with St. Paul. He went storming up the road to Damascus, breathing fire and slaughter, but it was not against a principle that he was to fight, it was against a person. It was Jesus whom he persecuted. And, later, it was this same Jesus for whom he was ready to be bound and to die.

What St. Paul testified to at Corinth was that the Christ was Jesus and not the far-less pointed and less accurate testimony that Jesus was Christ. For, this latter, rather fashionable doctrine of the finite, limited, struggling, crucified God, with whom we cooperate as comrades and fellow-soldiers in the fight against evil, is a travesty on the New Testament. It seems to some of us that it is this that lies at the base of the despair and cynicism that threatens to take our earth. For, anyone who thinks about it more than superficially, can readily understand that the idea of God and ourselves, joined together in a partnership of crusade and good-comradeship, lacks that flame which empowered Christian men in innumerable crises, when they have worshipped the God who is saviour and victor . . . the God who gave his Son to triumph over the forces of evil on his cross; the God through whom—in the greatness of his love and mercy—we are not merely anxious spectators in an undecided warfare, but are already "more than conquerors."

I have used these introductory paragraphs in an attempt to place the emphasis where it belongs in such a treatment as this of the creed. For, frankly, the creed is a battleground between the Church and the men and women to whom the Church would minister. If you should challenge the mythical average business man today, as to what he felt the creed of Christendom to be, he would probably reply that it is a document of "philosophical or theological opinions" which Tom, Dick, and Harry do not understand, but to which the Church asks them to subscribe as the price on their entrance into the kingdom. Yet, this is precisely where this man would be confused about the Christian gospel, and its meaning. For, it is here that there is a remarkable distinguishing element in Christianity, which sets it apart. For the philosophical patterns of the Platonists, the Stoics, the mystical religions of the East, all drew their powers elsewhere than from the actual world of fact and history. To them, the world was something from which to escape, something to transcend, rather than the earthen vessel for God's self-revelation. But, a Christian, when he wishes to feed his faith in the living God, "turns his eye upon history, and upon a history; upon a life and a passion; and upon a life after a passion."

To put it another way, from Canon Wedel's little pamphlet, "Just What Is The Creed?", the creed contains no noun clause. It does not say, "I believe that." A philosophical belief, or a purely theological one, would begin, "I believe that." The creed instead says, "I believe in." And that which is believed in, is not an opinion about God, or an opinion about a man called Jesus. The Creed says, "I believe in God"; "I believe in Jesus Christ." The significance of the little word "in" is profound, for it expresses an act of allegiance. It is an expression of trust in a name, a Father who has made heaven and earth: His Son, our Lord, who was conceived, born and died.

Actually, adds Canon Wedel, if we return to the question, "Just What Is The Creed?", we have the answer in the word, "gospel." For a gospel is "Good News." News is always about action! There it is about the God-man: "was conceived," "born," "suffered," "was crucified," "buried," "descended," "rose again," "ascended." That, if you please, rather startingly describes and identifies the Creed. Not a summary of a law, not a demand, not an ideal, not even a description of a program for the improvement of the human race. But, rather the declaration of what has been done, on the stage of history, and of eternity, by God, for men, his sons.

The Development of the Creed

A QUESTION which we frequently hear is; "When was the Creed written?" It is a reflection of the kind of world in which we live. To us, writing, printing, publishing, is an accepted fact, a necessity. This book was published in 1800, another in 1614, another in 1949. But it was not so in the world of the Apostles. Just as the mission of the Apostles was first to proclaim the faith orally, so the composition of the sacred writings was an after-thought. The creed was, at first, orally, taught to the catechumens (candidates for the faith), and formally professed by them at their baptism. For a long time, the rule of faith was considered to be a secret and was withheld, even from the catechumens, until the last stages of their instruction. This helps to explain the fact that only fragmentary evidences of the creed are found in sub-Apostolic writings. Even as late as St. Augustine (4th century), we find him seemingly articulating a principle: "No one writes down the creed that it may be read."

Historically, creeds may be divided into two broad classes: baptismal and declaratory. A very simple confession, corresponding to the Trinitarian formula, and into which believers were baptized, formed the earliest type of the baptismal creed. G. F. Maclear tells us that a few days before baptism, the creed was delivered to the candidates, accompanied by a sermon explaining it. Thus the Apostolic constitutions describe the catechumen as declaring, at the time of his baptism:

"I believe in the only true God, the Father, the Almighty.
And in His only begotten Son, Jesus Christ, our Lord and Saviour,
And in the Holy Ghost, the Life-giver."

But as early as Tertullian, who lived in Carthage, about 200 A.D., the confession carried more than was mentioned above, and included, besides belief in the three persons in the Trinity, repentance, remission of sins, and the Church.

Now, the declaratory creeds, are those which, instead of being recited at the time of baptism, were repeated in the public offices of worship of the Church, particularly at the time of the celebration of the holy communion. Gradually, the custom spread from the east to the west, especially to the churches of France and Spain. However, there is little written evidence of any formal creed, until we come to the time of Irenaeus who, as Bishop of Lyons, in 177 A.D. left written evidence of a confessional creed which includes the majority of the articles now present in the Apostles creed, meaning:

Belief in:
One God, the Father Almighty
The Maker of all things in heaven and earth,
One Lord, Jesus Christ, the Son of God,
In His incarnation, and his birth of the virgin
His passion
His resurrection of all men at the last day.

At the end of such a confession, Irenaeus says:

"No otherwise have the Churches in Germany believed, and delivered, nor those in Spain, nor the Celts, nor those in the east, nor in Egypt, nor in Libya, nor those established in the central parts of the earth. But as the sun, the creature of God, is one and the same throughout the whole world, so also the preaching of the truth shineth everywhere, and lighteneth all men who wish to come to a perfect knowledge of the truth."

It is unlikely that a reliable writer, such as Irenaeus, could, or would have written thusly, if he had not known that the creed had wide acceptance. Incidentally, such unity, as he describes, was about to be broken, for it was not long before the breath of heresy began to blow such a storm, that even the Council of Nicea could not quiet it.

Creed Is Limited

BEFORE launching into any of the specific statements of the creed, I would like to take this opportunity to offer a warning, this: The creed is limited. The life of the Church, its outreach, its comprehension, its intellectual and spiritual vitality, are not exhausted by the act of confessing its faith. Karl Barth is insistent in saying that even the proper proclamation of the Church's faith has two inevitable frontiers (to paraphrase him):

The first of these is sacrament, through which the Church is reminded that all of its words, even those blessed by God's word and spirit, can do no more than aim at the event itself, in which God has to do with man. While both baptism and holy communion are channels for the increased revelation of the nature of God to man; they are also, and importantly, the revealers of the boundaries of what can be said, and understood, and, to that extent, comprehended of God by man. The reality that is God is always beyond sacrament, however much it is in sacrament.

The second frontier, which the creed faces, in its proclamation, is that of human life itself, its weaknesses, its confusion, its sinfulness, its tenuous quality. When St. Paul says, "For now we see through a glass darkly, but then, face to face," or, "Now I know in part; but then shall I know even as I am known," he is underscoring, for all men, the limitless quality of the coming kingdom, as contrasted with the limitations of this present age. But he is also underscoring for men, whose tendency is to exhalt their own knowledge, their own comprehension, their own perception beyond their proper bounds, the bluntness, the dullness of the implements upon which they are forced to depend for their comprehension of God and truth.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. What does the author mean when he says that the creed is rooted in history?
2. What facts caused the persecution of the Apostles?
3. What is the difference between saying that "Christ was Jesus" and "Jesus was Christ"?
4. Discuss the difference between saying "I believe that" and "I believe in."
5. What creed did catechumens recite at their baptism?
6. What creed was recorded by Irenaeus?
7. What does the author mean when he says that the creed is limited?

Civil Liberties and World Peace

By CLIFFORD J. DURR
Former Member of Federal Communications Commission
President of the Lawyers Guild

FOR several weeks I collected notes for this paper. Most of them were made obsolete by a newspaper headline a little later: "Truman Reports Atomic Blast in Russia." Such is the rate of obsolescence in our modern scientific age.

The issue of our time is life or death for the human race. The scientific genius which split the atom has not yet devised a photo-electric cell for sorting out those to be saved from those to be destroyed by the force it has unleashed, nor will it do so. That force is wholly impersonal and impartial and will continue to be.

If there ever was a time in which all nations and all people are "members one of another," that time is now. We shall be members together in life or in death. We can decide together which it shall be, but some of us cannot make a decision for the others opposite to that which we want for ourselves.

I believe most of us glimpsed this quite clearly in the first flash of the bomb exploded over Hiroshima. But that was four and a half years ago. The flash passed quickly and the radio-active clouds soon floated away and were dissipated high above the earth. The two hundred thousand or more men, women and children who died at Hiroshima, in time, became statistics in our thinking, to be added to the casualty estimates of a pre-modern age world war. Percentage-wise they did not affect the total very much.

In time, also, our glimpse of understanding of our now unseverable ties with mankind was likewise forgotten.

We now seek our safety in a supremacy in atomic weapons and in the planes and missiles necessary to carry them to their appointed targets. We shall not find safety in such a supremacy, however overwhelming it may seem to be.

I do not say this because of official reports of an atomic explosion in Russia. Our ablest scientists have been telling us for a long time that there can be no such thing as a monopoly of scientific knowledge. Einstein warned that nature plays no favorites in the bestowal of her secrets; that what she tells to one, she will, in time, tell to any diligent and persistent enough in asking. We now seem shocked by the demonstration that the men who made the bomb knew what they were talking about. Russia, somehow, seems guilty of exceptionally sinister behavior in appearing to have done in four years what our scientists estimated might require as much as five years. An editorial from one of our Washington newspapers offers consolation that somehow does not console:

Speech before the Episcopal League for Social Action, San Francisco, California.

"The mere fact of the explosion," it says, "does not necessarily mean that the Russians have the capacity to make bombs in quantity." "No one knows for sure," it continues, "but it is unlikely that Russia has yet developed a method similar to our gaseous diffusion process for quantity production of fissionable material."

The lethal efficiency of our present bombs has, of course, made obsolete the very primitive type that was exploded at Hiroshima. Perhaps Russia's bomb, if she has it, is no more efficient than our Hiroshima model. If so, we still have a four year lead in the power to kill. But what does one do with that kind of time?

The Ideal Weapon

WHILE the atom occupies the headlines, we read less conspicuous stories, from time to time, about studies of the mysterious cosmic rays of the sun and of shock waves somehow related to the pulsation of the stars. Now, Dr. Brock Chisholm, director general of the world health organization, tells us that even our most modern atomic weapon is already outmoded as an efficient lethal instrument. A newly developed bacteria, he says, is the "ideal weapon, militarily speaking." It is simple, light in weight, easily prepared and can be produced at a cost that is within the reach of the budget of the smallest nation. Above all, it is efficient. Seven ounces, he estimates, if spread wide enough, can wipe out all mankind. He roughly estimates the casualties of another world war at nine-tenths of the human race.

I do not believe that the way to peace lies in frenzied preparation for death.

I do not believe that men or nations can be frightened by other men or nations into a state of sweet reasonableness. On the contrary, I believe that frightened nations, like frightened men, are likely to be not only unreasonable, but dangerous.

I believe that if the present tensions and the present armament race between east and west are continued much longer, the resulting accumulation of fear and hatred will destroy all that makes human life meaningful, if not all of human life.

I do not believe that personal or national prestige is of much account when weighed on the scales against survival. I think there are occasions when nations, like individuals, must swallow their pride in order to save their deeper self respect.

At this moment of history, I would rather gamble my future on a belief in the basic decency, as well as the desire for life, of men everywhere than upon a preponderance of atomic weapons.

We are alarmed by the report of one atomic blast in Russia. Is it not reasonable to assume that the people living behind the iron curtain are not basically very different from ourselves and that they have been even more alarmed by continuous reports of our growing stockpile of increasingly efficient atomic weapons, and that fear is an important, if not the most important motive, behind their behavior which frightens and angers us?

I would like to see this country launch an all-out world war against fear.

In our international relations, I would like to see us first remove all obstructions from our own eyes, whether they be mote or beam, in order that we may better see to remove similar obstructions from the eye of our neighbor.

I am neither a scientist nor a military expert. I may be entirely mistaken in my fears. It may be that Dr. Chisholm is mistaken in his appraisal of the lethal efficiency of the new biologic agent. It may be that, with the tremendous wealth it has, this country can continue indefinitely such a military ascendancy that no other nation will dare attack us, and that we shall have the self-restraint never to unloose our own destructive power. But shall we then have the peace we want?

Through economic and military assistance to the nations of Western Europe we seek to establish an "equilibrium" in order that time may be afforded for tensions to relax and problems somehow to solve themselves. If such an "equilibrium" is established can it be more than a delicate balance of mutual fears? Will one fear destroy the other or will both continue to grow as they feed on each other? Is an "equilibrium" enough to offer people who have twice known the devastation of war in the space of one quarter of a century? In what direction lie their hopes? What destiny challenges their efforts? Even survival can lose meaning when hope is absent.

Is our best legacy to our children and their children to be military and economic dominance in a world stalked by war?

Suppose war should come while we are strong and ready and that we so completely destroy all rival military power—active and potential—that it is no longer necessary to maintain our own. Can we then live in peace with ourselves as we contemplate the fruits of our victory?

Today we have such power as we never dreamed of before, but it does not reassure us. We are afraid and we are not even certain of the source of our fear. We say it is Soviet Russia and Communism but we suspect that it may lie in our own distrust of ourselves. In our fear, we turn to the worship of power as the god of our salvation. We make to it burnt offering of our most precious possessions—the freedom of our minds and souls—and demand that all others conform with the pattern of our worship, lest the god be offended. But we know in our hearts that the god is false. We know that power is not enough, that essential ingredients are missing from our formula for peace. We must seek those ingredients with all our hearts and minds.

But the god of power is a jealous god who does not readily share his sovereignty. Will he let us pursue our search so long as we worship at his altar?

That freedom of conscience, freedom of speech, discussion and of association, guaranteed to us by the first amendment to our Constitution, are essential to our search. They are our avenues to the future, but notwithstanding such guarantee, our avenues are rapidly being closed before us by barriers of fear and suspicion.

A Loyalty Case

RECENTLY I received an irate letter from a college professor for whom I have a high regard. He was taking exception to a statement I made before a committee of the United States Senate in opposition to the Atlantic Pact. He said my discussion of the issues of international law involved was wholly unsound. He may have been right and I may have been wrong. The professor has the advantage over me. He has taught international law and I have only studied it—years ago as a student in law school.

I studied international law at a time and place when the League of Nations was a vital issue—in England in the immediate aftermath of World War I. I remember the depression and despondency that came over my English friends with the announcement that the United States would not enter the League. They said that the League could not be successful if any major nation stayed out of it. They feared that another world war might soon be in the making, though they could not then foresee the source. I have talked to many scientists, I have seen the ruins of Warsaw and the rubble heap that was the Ghetto. I have even talked to Dr. Chisholm. I feared that the formation of rigid power blocks within the United Nations might destroy it just as the League of Nations was destroyed. Perhaps these things affected my legal judgment. But the professor would have been more helpful in saving me from future mistakes if he had been more specific about the errors of law involved. He made his point by characterizing my argument as typical of the Communists position.

Recently I represented a government employee in a "loyalty" case. The charge against him was disloyalty to his country. There was no accusation of any illegal act, nor of any impropriety or lack of diligence in the performance of his duties. On the contrary, there was no blemish of any kind on an employment record of eleven years. His immediate supervisor and the head of his branch both testified to his ability and reliability as an employee and his loyalty to his job. His military record was outstanding. It included a promotion for valor in combat, a silver star for bravery and two wounds, one resulting in a permanent, though partial disability. But he was a sort of idealist. Before the attack on Pearl Harbor he had been something of a pacifist in his leanings and had opposed peace-time military conscription. He had, prior to the war, held a brief and casual membership in two organizations, "respectable" in the political climate of that time but subsequently declared "subversive" by decree of the Attorney General. Though a Southerner, he did not believe in racial segregation. A few of his associates were listed as subversive in the secret dossiers of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, though he was never able to ascertain the nature of their subversiveness. The loyalty board of his department found that "on all the evidence" reasonable grounds existed for the belief that he was disloyal to his government, but it refused to state which particular evidence led it to its conclusion. The cabinet officer who heads his department sustained the judgment below. On the final appeal to the loyalty review board he was given an opportunity to demonstrate his loyalty affirmatively. He was asked about his views on the Atlantic Pact.

His answer was not the best for winning his case. His first-hand experience with war had not convinced him that force was a desirable means of settling international differences and he said so. But for reasons unstated, he was finally cleared. Perhaps his military record had something to do with it. His ordeal, from the time he was first served with "interrogatories" until his final clearance, lasted about a year.

But can a man ever be completely cleared of the suspicion of disloyalty placed upon him by his own government? Can the toll upon his emotions, taken by a year of worry about joblessness and the support of a wife and two children ever be replaced? Is there a cure for the hurt of being shunned by his fellowmen, lest the taint of his guilt be attached to them by association?

I have read of a somewhat related trial of a beloved officer of the Episcopal League for Social Action. I know nothing of canon law. Perhaps the proceedings and judgment in his case were in strict compliance with established law. But it disturbs me, as a layman, that a Christian minister, should lose his church for seeking peace through promoting friendship, or even for associating with "sinners" and "publicans," if such was in fact the nature of his associates.

Talking It Over

By W. B. SPOFFORD

SENATOR Brian McMahon's proposal that the U. S. spend fifty billion to help the people of the world, instead of spending a comparable sum on H-bombs and rockets has stirred up a lot of favorable comment. Newspapers everywhere gave the speech full coverage and the New York papers, and I presume others, have encouraged discussion of the proposal in their correspondents columns.

One of those to endorse the Senator's ideas is our own Bishop Scarlett of Missouri, who is the chairman of our commission on social reconstruction and is also chairman of the Federal Council's department of international justice and goodwill. So it is nice to report that he, in a telegram to the Senator that was made public by the Council, called the plan a "bold, imaginative and constructive approach to the problems of delivering the people from the nightmare of atomic warfare. To harness the creative energies of men and the God-given energies of nature in the struggle against poverty, ignorance, disease and despair offers our best hope of fellowship, the one sure preventive of war. I am sure that the people of our Churches will respond warmly to the spirit and purpose of your proposals."

Who knows, maybe with a few more fears aroused by the Hell-bomb, and a bit of a rise in the number of unemployed from the present official figure of 4,480,000, we may muster up enough courage to give belated recognition to a fellow Episcopalian, who said nearly three years ago the very things the Senator is now saying. Henry A. Wallace, in an address to the members of the French Chamber of Deputies on April 23, 1947, advocated that fifty billions be made available through UN to help devastated and backward areas. He said also, in that same speech, that it would be cheaper for the world to finance this kind of program than to finance such huge expenditures on instruments of worldwide death.

I am sure we are all delighted that Mr. Wallace's sane proposals have again been brought forward by Senator McMahon. It is gratifying also to learn that Bishop Scarlett supports these proposals, as other churchmen in great numbers undoubtedly will. And in doing so I think it would be nice to give a pat-on-the-back to a Christian statesman who has been taking a considerable kicking around for having the courage to lead the procession.

They Won't Grow in the Sack

By WILLIAM P. BARNDS

Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln, Nebraska

ONETIME in the spring when I was a boy, my venerable grandfather, who had given us some seeds which he himself had raised, asked if I had planted them. Upon my saying that I had not yet done so, he replied "They won't grow in the sack!" I have thought since how applicable this remark is to a good many situations in life. Abilities are of little use unless we put them to work.

Some of the most precious gifts which a confirmed Christian has are the gifts of the Holy Spirit which he received at his confirmation namely; wisdom, understanding, counsel, ghostly strength, knowledge, godliness, and holy fear. These are the gifts for which the bishop prays right before the laying on of hands. They are wonderful gifts, but as Christians we need to stir them up and make use of them. They need to be applied to the situations of life in which we find ourselves. From time to time we ought to remind ourselves that we do have these gifts, and can walk in the strength of them. Too often we act as though we had never heard of such qualities as wisdom or ghostly strength, or other like qualities.

Then we have special abilities which can be used for Christ and his Church. Some people have never taught a church school class but have the ability to do so very creditably, if they would just put the ability to work. Some have a gift for human sympathy and for helping others over the rough places of life. How much this help is needed in the present day! This ability ought to be used, and it will grow with the using.

Most of us have some special traits of personality which may show up just occasionally, but they are there and, if developed by practice would make a great difference in our lives and in the lives of others who know us. Maybe it is a sense of humor, the ability to say a helpful word at the right moment, or an insight into the good potentialities of others. Whatever it may be, put it to work. And it will grow, but it "won't grow in the sack."

NIEMOELLER DEFENDS HIS STATEMENTS

Martin Niemoeller, who recently brought the wrath of fellow-churchmen upon himself for saying that German unity under Communist control was better than east-west division, defended his statements in a sermon preached in the American zone. He said "there are no Germans in Berlin any longer, only Americans and Russians. World War 3 has been under way long since on German soil." Referring to the criticism, he said that "the Church has a duty to serve the cause of peace, and I do not care about the criticism of politically-minded pastors. After all a pastor can give advice to politicians. It would be difficult to find people who have done a worse job than the politicians between the years 1945 to 1949."

Later Niemoeller caused further surprise by saying in a speech that "if Communism should come, the German people will have to put up with it as with Nazism in 1933." He said that the claim that the Church would perish under Communism is "erroneous." "The Church would have to live differently, but live it would." He said that both "western liberty" and "eastern social justice" need to be examined; also that the Evangelical Church, of which he is president, "should take care not to wake up one morning in the Roman Catholic Church's lap." In the original statement which caused wide protest, Niemoeller has stated that the western republic of Germany was "begotten in the Vatican and born in Washington."

RELIGIOUS SECT SPREADS IN CHINA

A sect called "Jesus' Family" is spreading "like wildfire" in China according to Dr. D. V. Rees, British medical missionary, reporting in Hong Kong. He said that the sect, founded in 1921, now has 300 colonies scattered through northern provinces. It flourishes in civil war days since Communists could find no fault with the community, every member of which surrenders all possessions when he joins and thereafter shares everything in common with other members. Dr. Rees described the sect as being "more Communist than the Communists." They grew rapidly at a time when other religious groups were fleeing before the approaching Communist armies. Dr. Rees reported from first hand information since he has been working for two years in one of the hospitals at a "Jesus Family" colony.

PRESBYTERIANS CONTINUE IN CHINA

The Presbyterian board of foreign missions have issued a statement that "it is the earnest desire of the Presbyterian Church, in full cooperation with the Church in China, to continue its Christian service under the Communist regime." The statement says further that missionaries are remaining at their posts and others are preparing for the China field.

PROTESTANTS PROTEST IN ULSTER

A campaign has been launched in Northern Ireland by Protestants against the alleged curtailment of their activities in hospitals. Under the present state set-up, the only Protestant Churches allowed to appoint chaplains are the Presbyterians, Church of Ireland (Anglican) and Methodists.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

UNITY MOVEMENT THREATENED

A source close to the general council of the Congregational Christian Churches has stated that a Brooklyn supreme court decision might constitute a serious threat to the whole Church unity movement.

The decision, rendered by Justice Meier Steinbrink, enjoined the council of the Congregational Christian Churches from acting on a proposed merger with the Evangelical and Reformed Church. Set for next June, the merger would have resulted in the formation of a United Church with nearly 2,000,000 members.

The informant indicated that if the decision remains unchanged when the declaratory judgment is entered, the General Council would appeal "to the limit." This means the case might be taken to the U. S. Supreme Court, if necessary.

"If the judgment blocks the merger," he said, "it will be the first time in the history of the country that a denomination has been restrained by a civil court from getting together with another denomination. Such a ruling would affect the whole Christian world and we would be compelled to appeal to the limits of our ability."

The civil suit which began in November of last year was filed by the Cadman Memorial Congregational Society and the Cadman Memorial Church of Brooklyn which oppose the merger.

SYNAGOGUE MEMBERS TO WORSHIP AT CHURCH

For the first time in the history of Quincy, Mass., members of a Jewish synagogue will attend Sunday morning services at a Protestant church. The Rev. William H. Duvall of the Atlantic Methodist Church has invited the congregation of Beth Israel Synagogue to his church Feb. 26, "Interfaith Sunday" for joint services. Rabbi David Alpert, Jewish hospital chaplain for the Greater Boston area, will be guest speaker. Rabbi Jacob Mann, spiritual leader of the synagogue, accepted the invitation of the Methodist minister and will also participate in the service.

URGE OUTLAWING OF LIQUOR ADS

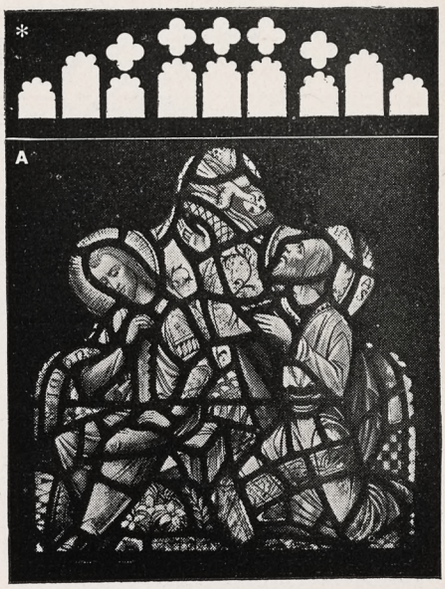
Clergymen appearing before a Senate committee urged Congress to outlaw the interstate transmission of alcoholic beverage advertising by enacting the Langer bill, which would forbid such ads in magazines that cross state lines. One of the speakers was Samuel M. Cavert, head of the Federal Council of Churches, who charged that "The terrific pressure of social custom and publicity has induced young people everywhere to assume that intoxicants, like ice cream and tea, are a matter of course and somehow connected with social distinction." He said that the Council has not committed itself to any specific bill, but added; "It does insist however that the present flood of liquor advertising presents a social problem which legislators ought not to evade."

LUTHERAN CHURCHES REACH AGREEMENT

Agreement on a common confession of faith has been reached by unity committee of the American Lutheran Church and the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod. The document stresses the authority of the Bible as the only source of Christian teaching.

PRESBYTERIANS STUDY DIVORCE RULES

A commission of lay and clerical members are studying rules of the Presbyterian Church on marriage and divorce, looking toward clarification legislation by the General Assembly.



One question to be considered by the commission relates to the assumption that the judgment of the civil court is to be binding on the Church regarding "innocent" and "guilty" parties in a divorce.

Many Presbyterian pastors were said to have objected that the truly innocent party is often the one against whom the civil court has granted the divorce. Still another question is raised as to the acceptance of the canon of another denomination as binding Presbyterian ministers.

Part of the commission's work, it was announced, will be to study the problem of mixed marriages with Roman Catholics. Requests for statements on the Presbyterian position with regard to mixed marriages with Catholics have come "regularly" to the General Council of the denomination in recent years.

DR. SANDER BACKED BY UNITARIANS

Twenty-three Unitarian ministers of New Hampshire praised Dr. Hermann N. Sander's "humanitarian action" in the alleged mercy-killing of a woman cancer patient. They expressed agreement with the action "in view of the fact that Mrs. Borroto was dying from cancer in irremediable pain." The doctor goes on trial Feb. 20 for first degree murder.

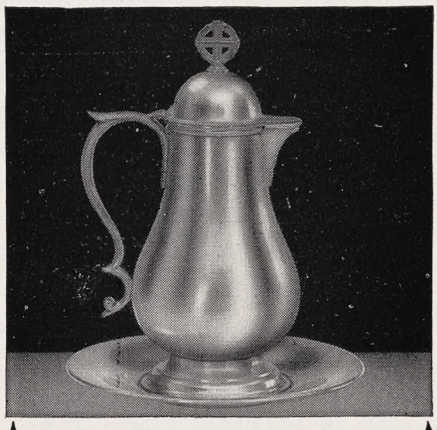
THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

The Ancestry of Our English Bible. By Ira M. Price. New edition, by William A. Irwin and Allen P. Wikgren. Harpers. $3.75.



For over forty years, Dr. Price's book has been one of the leading textbooks in this field, and has been familiar to thousands of students. The new edition brings it up to date, taking account of the most recent discoveries—the new Jerusalem Scroll of Isaiah provides the frontispiece. Everyone who is interested in the story of the Bible, from the beginning down to the latest revision (the last chapter is on the RSV), should make the acquaintance of this book.

The Church's Ministry. By T. W. Manson. Westminster. $2.00.

In these four lucid chapters Dr. Manson seeks to reply to the Catholic view of apostolic succession, as advanced by Dr. Kirk and other scholars in The Apostolic Ministry. Dr. Manson's main point is that the Church herself, and not an order of the ministry, succeeded to whatever is apostolic and at the same time capable of succession. The ministry is a function and an organ of the Church, while the special status of the Twelve was "a personal thing and inalienable" (pp. 55-6, 107-8). What validates a ministry, furthermore, is the call of Christ, the gift of the Spirit, and the "signs of an apostle." It is the part of ecclesiastical authority to recognize and accept this gift of Christ to the Church.

From these premises, Dr. Manson urges the immediate recognition of Free Church ministries. "We must go on insisting," he writes, "that nothing less than full and frank recognition will meet the case" (103).

While there is much in this little book which is learned and incisive (notably its correction, pp. 38ff., of the loose and misleading use of the term shaliach in The Apostolic Ministry), it is to be regretted that Dr. Manson's leading theme advances us no further on the road to reunion. What he states with such clarity is a familiar thesis which assumes that all ministries are in essence identical. Not only is this obviously not the case (are there not basic differences between the "Catholic" priest, the "Protestant" minister, and the "Pentecostal" charismatic?), but it is only by grasping the nature of these differences that we can proceed to some genuine Church unity. Our several ministries may have their roots in the New Testament, but they do not have the same roots. Nothing but confusion can arise from saying we are really all the same, while in actual fact we do different things from different points of view and with different results

A Philosophy of Religion. By Edgar S. Brightman. Prentice-Hall. $5.

This is a new issue of one of the best textbooks in the subject. Dr. Brightman writes out of the great tradition of philosophy—he does not try to write philosophy from the standpoint of a purely scientific view of the world. He is himself a philosopher. A great many persons besides those technically involved in the study or teaching of philosophy or theology will find this book of interest. The great subjects of belief in God and Immortality, and the postulates of ethics (why right is right, and wrong is wrong)—these are questions that concern us all, and here is a book which is clearly and plainly written so that the ordinary person can understand it. It is a book for students—but fortunately, there are lots of students outside of college and seminary these days.

It is not easy to toss off carols—the great carols are the results of generations of Christian singing. One wonders why these carols should be substituted for the traditional ones which have been sifted out over the centuries.

Forgotten Religions. Edited by Vergilius Ferm. Philosophical Library. $7.50.

A fascinating survey of up to date information on various ancient religions. Dr. S.A.B. Mercer has the interesting chapter on The Religion of Ancient Egypt, for example. The Religion of the Canaanites, Prehistoric Greece, The Mystery Religions, Mithraism—and the Religion of the Eskimos, the Navajos and Hopis—all are here. The book contains an enormous amount of information difficult for the ordinary person to get hold of.

GROWTH IN PRAYER

CONSTANCE GARRETT

In this brilliant book prayer is treated as an invaluable part of everyday living which will repay a hundredfold the small amount of time and effort put into it. Throughout the author has included prayers which she has selected from wide sources, choosing those of different religious backgrounds. They range from the formal prayers used in the Book of Common Prayer to informal sentences and phrases that can be repeated throughout daily routines. She has included prayers to be used in worship and adoration; prayers of thanks for unexpected gifts, for times of inexpressible joy; prayers which ask for aid and strength in times of need, for patience in times of stress. The reader is encouraged by the author's tremendous amount of understanding of the value of prayer in regard to making prayer a part and parcel of his very thinking. De WOLF PERRY
Rector, St. Michael's, Charleston, S. C.

We have just been observing "Theological Education Sunday," a day designated by the Presiding Bishop to raise additional funds for the seminaries of the Church and to bring the work of the seminaries before our people at the same time. This was started over a decade ago as an emergency measure, but like so many emergencies it has become a permanent fixture. The seminaries are vital to the Church, they have a splendid record of achievement over nearly a century and a half, and need to be given a central place in our thinking and planning in years to come. Let us be frank about it, however. This is no way to do the job. The seminaries are struggling, they each have their own appeal for funds among their alumni and friends, they have their regular sources of income, which are never sufficient, and this special Sunday offering is just an extra, reaching almost the point of being a nuisance and although it is helpful and perhaps indispensable, yet is still not enough. This is no way to treat our seminaries, and no way for the seminaries to treat the Church. The work is too important to be carried on in such a haphazard manner, and even putting the seminaries in the budgets of the parishes and dioceses would in no way meet the real needs. Incidentally, it is hard to understand why a fifth day should be designated for concern for candidates for the ministry when the Prayer Book already includes four seasons, Ember Days.

What can be done, therefore? One of our seminaries is supported directly by the Church through General Convention, others supported by various dioceses, while the rest are more or less private institutions, seeking their own funds and endowments, which in these days are, to say the least, insufficient. Has not the time come for the Church to consider taking over the seminaries officially as is done with General Seminary, and planning carefully and thoroughly the whole function and support of the seminaries in the life of the Church?

Such a suggestion will not be welcomed by those who look to one seminary or another as a stronghold of partisanship, an aspect of seminary achievement that is no longer considered creditable by a Church that is at last seeking its own unity within itself. But such a suggestion will be welcomed by those who are eager to see seminaries meet in the best possible way the new conditions and problems presented today. Each seminary would of course keep its own identity and individuality, and the special emphasis that belongs to its heritage: missionary, academic, devotional, clinical, or whatever. The ever-present danger of "bureaucracy," "regimentation" and "politics" would be avoided through wise and statesmanlike administration.

Can we not, therefore, have done with this extra appeal which this year especially conflicts sharply with the preparation for the "One World in Christ" campaign this spring? It is time for the Church to face the importance of her seminaries and to undertake full responsibility for their maintenance and support.

THE CATHOLIC MOVEMENT

IN THE AMERICAN EPISCOPAL CHURCH

Beautifully Printed and Bound

$3 the Copy

By GEORGE E. DeMILLE, M.A.

Rector of the Church of the Cross, Ticonderoga, New York, and Author of "A History of the Diocese of Albany, 1704-1923"

A NEW, Revised, and Enlarged Edition of the Standard Work on the Subject. Completely reset in 12-Point Garamond Type, Two Points Leaded.

Chapter X, "Liberal Catholicism," is entirely new. Here you will find penetrating appraisals of such recent intellectual leaders of the Church as Hughell E. W. Fosbroke, Burton Scott Easton, Francis J. Hall, and the contributors to the book, Liberal Catholicism and the Modern World.

The Christian Century, the leading Protestant journal, has this to say about the book:

"A more fair-minded and judicious history of this very controversial question could not be written. The author recognizes that parties exist in his Church, and have existed since its organization in early days of the republic. . . . Mr. DeMille, himself a high churchman, one infers, ascribes high value to the influence of the 'evangelical' element, but judges that the revival of the Church from its low estate after the Revolution and its development in numbers and morale are chiefly due to the Catholic element. He gives lively—and by no means hagiographic—pictures of such leaders as Seabury, Hobart, Doane, Whittingham and John Henry Hopkins. Taking the whole record into account—the growth of ritualism, the stress upon the 'Catholic' concept, the rise of Episcopal monastic institutions, and all the rest—it does not appear to the author, or to this reviewer, that the 'Catholic movement' is a Rome-ward movement or likely to become one."

STORY OF THE WEEK

Balancing of Council Budget Put Over Until April

Hopeful that Full Budget Will Be Raised Through Presiding Bishop's Plea

By ANDREW M. VAN DYKE

★ National Council meeting at Seabury House, Feb. 15-16, found the Presiding Bishop back in the chair, looking fit and in good humor, following his recent operation. He stressed his hope that the Church was going to accomplish the task which was set at General Convention.

The financial reports for 1949 gave reason for being cheerful. The committee on trust funds announced that there had been a net of 4.7% on the book value of securities for the year, and that $45,653 was added to the principal of funds, and two new funds established for a total of $51,071. Treasurer Russell Dill, in a preliminary report of income and expenditures for 1949, showed that there would be an estimated surplus of $69,545. An overpayment by dioceses on their expectations, as reported in last week's Witness, of about $34,000 helped to contribute to this.

Speaking of 1950 expectations, Mr. Dill pointed out that towards the needed $4,932,000, there is about $3,225,000 promised, with over $848,000 more being sought in the campaign on March 12th, and further indefinite amounts hoped for by other dioceses. It was also remarked that what a half dozen dioceses in the second and fifth provinces did would determine whether or not the full budget will be raised. The work was continued under the 1949 budget until the April meeting, when the one passed by General Convention will be reviewed in relation to pledges.

At its December meeting the Council voted that the Presiding Bishop appoint a committee to study methods of coordinating the educational and promotional activities of the departments, and that this be on the agenda for this meeting. Clark Kuebler, mover of the December motion, at this meeting moved that the action be rescinded. No explanation was made, but it was said in some quarters that this was an administrative matter which could be better dealt with by the departments.

Bishop Bland Mitchell reported for the overseas department which consisted largely of the Council acting on a number of resignations and setting retirement allowances. The Council also voted, on the recommendation of the department, to shorten the term of service for missionaries in China and Japan from five to four years. It re-elected as representatives on the St. John's University committee of the united board for Christian colleges in China for a three year term, Bishops Ludlow and Block, the Rev. A. C. Lichtenberger, Mrs. Beverley D. Causey Jr. and Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce. A sum of $650 received as interest and dividends on a loan to the interdenominational mission service in Japan, which Bishop Mitchell described as m a n n a, was designated for building repairs in Japan.

Lay Leadership

The original sixteen laymen trained as keymen under the direction of W. Ted Gannaway in O c t o b e r, instructed and equipped over 1130 other men from 64 dioceses, who in turn have spoken before 35,000 or 40,000 vestrymen. The pressure of time, getting this all done before March, had made for weakness, but even these were said to be instructive for future work.

Bishop Hobson, chairman of the department of promotion, displayed a m o s t privately printed book, compiled just for members of the department, and called "Facts." It is to keep these persons informed about the work of the department. At the last Council meeting it was decided that the laymen's training program would be taken over by promotion, and Bishop Hobson is of the opinion that the continuance of this in the next three years will be the best method of insuring that the giving of the Church for missions will be kept on a high level. "These various campaigns that we have had over the years have only been shots in the arm." If we are to keep the Church really converted, he insisted, it will only be as we have laymen going about telling others. This will be the main focal point of the department of Promotion, and it will endeavor to expand the numbers reached in

DEUTSCH ADDRESSES AUXILIARY

★ "Free and equal in dignity and rights" was the title of an address given members of the Woman's Auxiliary of California, at a session held in conjunction with the 100th convention of the diocese. The title was chosen by Dr. Monroe E. Deutsch, vice president and provost emeritus of the University of California, from the universal declaration of human rights approved and adopted by the General Assembly of the UN. Article I reads, "All human beings are born free and equal in rights and dignity. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards each other in a spirit of brotherhood."

Dr. Deutsch declared that the only thing that matters is "the whiteness of the soul." Those who can see through the external differences among human beings are described as being "blessed" by the speaker, who further urged that we put forth every effort to batter down the discriminations that mankind has created as a result of its blindness.

"Democracy cannot be built upon discrimination. Its very essence is equality of treatment for all, equality of opportunity to all. It will crumble and come to an end unless the barriers of discrimination are destroyed. All too often it is forgotten that our enemies are not merely external, or the Communists within our midst, but the distressing conditions under which so many of our people live. Slums certainly do not breed loyalty. Unemployment is not the soil in which to rear devotion to our nation. Discrimination in housing, employment, education, social relations, inevitably creates resentment and opens the door for the entry of those who would overthrow our form of government," stated the speaker.

"When I think of Dr. Ralph Bunche and his services to our nation and mankind, while doors are closed to him and the members of his family, my admiration for him grows all the greater. But not every Negro or member of other so-called minority groups has the magnificent spirit that he has shown. Listen to his words in World War II: 'There should be no illusions about the nature of this struggle—the fight now is not to save democracy, for that which does not exist cannot be saved. But the fight is to maintain those conditions under which the people may continue to strive for the realization of the democratic ideals. This is the inexorable logic of the nation's position as dictated by the world anti-democratic revolution and Hitler's projected new world order.' How true and how noble those words!" added the university leader.

"Character is a revelation of the human soul—its reliability, its honesty, its intrinsic goodness," continued Dr. Deutsch, citing the example of Socrates, who was an ugly man, but of whom Plato said, "Of all the men of his time whom I have known, he was the wisest and justest and best."

BISHOP HENRY H. DANIELS of Montana recently confirmed his daughter, Anne

The speaker then cited the example of Abraham Lincoln, also described as an ugly man, until one saw the spirit shining through those features of his. When the committee left his house after informing him of his nomination to the presidency, one of its members said, "Well, we might have chosen a handsomer article!" However, he took the sting of his words away by adding, "But I doubt whether a better."

The doctrine of democracy clasps hands with that of Christianity when it emphasizes the dignity of man, according to Deutsch, who reminded his hearers that in the eyes of the deity we worship, there is no black, no white, no yellow. We stand alike and equal before God, all human souls. He further stressed the fact that all mankind is involved — Asia alone, with its dense population, was cited as containing almost exactly half the world's people, and added to them, the inhabitants of Africa and others who are black or brown or yellow, gives as the remainder of the world's population only one-third who are white.

He cautioned his hearers not to become complacent about our own sins of omission and commission, and listed the articles to which we fail to live up in our own country, mentioning such sins as lynchings, our treatment of the Nisei and Japanese here during the war, the continuance of the poll tax, discrimination in the employment of racial minorities, or certain religious groups, the existence of slums in our big cities, our lack of adequate public health and educational facilities for all, and other phases of our failure to apply our highest principles. He quoted a remark of Robert Louis Stevenson, "There is but one person I have to make good —myself." Dr. Deutsch closed his address with an appeal to members of the Auxiliary to apply his words in their own organizations and groups where they circulate.

AUGUSTA CHURCH CELEBRATES

★ St. Paul's Church, Augusta, Ga., began the celebration of its bicentenary in January. In 1750 the English settlers built a church within the fort and sought help from the S. P. G. The next year the first missionary arrived. During these two hundred years many notable meetings have been held in the church. The present building is the fourth on the original site.

The Bishop of Nassau, the Rt. Rev. Spence Burton, S.S.J.E., was the preacher at a service of commemoration and thanksgiving. During Lent former rectors and "sons" of the parish will preach on Wednesday nights. When the convention of Georgia meets in the church April 18th Bishop Hines of Texas will preach. The convention will conclude the anniversary celebration. The Rev. Charles F. Schilling is rector.

ADOPT WITNESS SLOGAN

★ For several years, in circulation promotion, The Witness used the slogan, "An Informed Church is a Live Church." The National Council has the same slogan—or nearly the same—"An Informed Church is a Strong Church."

ROGER BLANCHARD VISITS BOSTON

★ The Rev. Roger W. Blanchard, new director of college work for the National Council, was the preacher at a service held at Trinity, Boston, February 19th, attended by members of Canterbury Clubs and of the Church's youth organization.

SEND BOOKS TO JAPAN

★ The library of the Central Theological College in Ikebukuro, Tokyo, will be the recipient of a gift of $6,000 from the Church Periodical Club, it was announced at the February board meeting. This sum, which will be used to purchase textbooks for the training of young Japanese theological students, was raised by the CPC as its special project for the triennium just past, but final results of the drive, for which the original goal was $5,000, have just been announced by Mr. Harry L. Dietz, treasurer. Mrs. Alexander McKechnie, chairman of the Tokyo project, spoke of the work that is being done to rebuild the Nippon Sei Ko Kwai under the leadership of the Presiding Bishop, the Rt. Rev. Michael Hinsuke Yashiro, and of the importance of replacing the volumes lost when the library of the theological college was destroyed in the war. The fund will be expended as lists of needed books are received.

At the same meeting, the CPC board members were urged to direct their efforts with equal success towards promoting the special project for this triennium. This centers about the books fund, which grants requests of the clergy, mission workers, schools and hospitals, for books necessary in their work and not otherwise available. In the general work of the books fund, such volumes are sent to all countries where the Church is established, as well as to all parts of the U. S. Mrs. William Johnson of Pittsburgh, first vice-president, who presided at the meeting in place of President Carolyn Punderson of St. Paul, who is ill, announced that the books committee hopes to grant a greatly increased number of requests for books during each year of this triennium.

RADIO BROADCASTS IN MISSISSIPPI

★ "Christ for the World" is the subject of radio broadcasts each Sunday in Lent, conducted by the Rev. Charles G. Hamilton of Aberdeen, Miss., which are widely heard in that section of the country. He is speaking on the influence and status of Christianity in China, Japan, Spain, Britain, Russia, the United States and in Mississippi.

CHARLES BROWN, artist, a member of the Church of Our Saviour, Mandarin, Florida, recently exhibited twenty-eight of his paintings in the home of one of the other members of the mission, with proceeds going to the church

BISHOP MALLETT ON MISSIONS

★ Bishop Reginald Mallett of Northern Indiana, preaching at St. Ignatius, New York, told the congregation that the job of the Church was one, whether it is in Siberia, Alaska, Northern Indiana or New York. He congratulated the congregation on its achievements and urged it to continue its work with courage. He reminded them also of their missionary responsibilities.

BISHOP DONEGAN VISITS GRACE CHURCH

★ Bishop Horace W. B. Donegan, coadjutor of New York, visited Grace Church on February 12 and said that he found the visit a "great personal source of joy." He was inspired, he explained, by the manner in which the parish has been meeting the changing problems of the day "with vision and courage"; also he was particularly happy to visit the church of an old friend, Rector Louis W. Pitt.

ERNEST VICTOR KENNAN, 49, rector of Emmanuel Church, Baltimore, died suddenly February 1. He was rector of St. Paul's, Des Moines, before coming to Emmanuel, and was elected Bishop of Iowa but declined.

Bishop Donegan suggested three ways which might help people to progress past a plodding, uninspired acceptance of basic Christian principles and move on to a "personal and intimate" relationship with Jesus Christ.

First, he said, a better understanding of Christ's life can be obtained through continued study of the Gospels. Secondly, the inspired Christian must believe with an unwavering faith.

Finally, said the bishop, the Christian must develop a burning inner compulsion to communicate his faith to others. By strengthening this personal relationship with Christ, he said, "we may live so in harmony with Christ that something of him may live in us, his followers."

GRACE LINDLEY PENSION FUND

★ The newly established pension fund for native women workers of the Church is to be known as the Grace Lindley Pension Fund. This was voted at the meeting of the national board, held at Seabury House, February 10-13. Miss Lindley was on the staff of the Auxiliary from 1908 until her retirement in 1940, and was executive secretary for 25 years. The small beginning of the fund is a $50,000 item in the UTO budget.

Appropriations made at this meeting of the board include aid to the committee on friendly relations among foreign students; aid to four vocational conferences for women; three scholarships for women preparing for Church work; repairs and equipment in mission fields.

The Rev. and Mrs. W. E. Kan of Tokyo spoke on conditions in Japan; Miss Maude Cutler of the Philadelphia Divinity School led a discussion on the training of women for work in the Church; Bishop Sherrill, welomed back after his illness, addressed the group and emphasized the need for world-wide vision.

Dorothy Stabler, secretary of supply work, reported that the value of new goods and money gifts for 1949 was $133,825, about equal to 1948. The slight decrease was accounted for by the fact that several dioceses, Minnesota, Southern Virginia and North Carolina, have assumed responsibility for their own missions, thus releasing more of the national work to meet overseas needs.

FELLOWSHIP SERVICE AT CATHEDRAL

★ Bishop William J. Walls of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church, and a member of the central committee of the World Council of Churches, was the preacher at a fellowship service held February 12th at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Bishop Gilbert, who has invited the Interracial Fellowship to hold this service at the cathedral for the past five years, presided at the service which was attended by about 5,000 persons.

Bishop Walls told the congregation: "The human race is a social solidarity wherein every man is part of all and all are brothers, one of another. The Christian Church was commissioned by its Founder to make a new man. By letting itself become the agent of separation and aloofness, it has failed so far.

"Our corrupted message fails to arrest the heedless, downward rush of nations.

"Democracy emphasizes freedom, and communism emphasizes justice. Both are false promises if not fulfilled by brotherly love. Trapped with barriers of race, class, sectarianism and obstructions, economic the fall Every Member Canvass by appearing before whole parishes. The department estimates that the cost will be about $50,000 a year. One of the requests made by the laymen has been for more effective visual aids, and so the department proposes to produce a short, dramatic, documentary film of some area of the Church's mission. Bishop Hobson said that with the previous films produced beyond the appropriation made for them, there was deficit financing. At the present time, rentals from these films bring revenue of about $550 a month, and the deficit financing now shows a balance of $5000. In connection with the One World for Christ campaign on March 12th, he reported that about 3000 parishes have sent for the material. Over 600 radio stations will carry the broadcast of the Presiding Bishop, and transcriptions will be available.

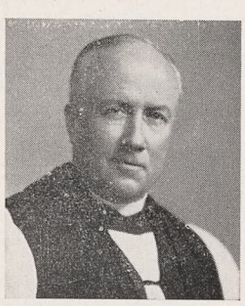
Money for Radio

The Protestant radio committee has asked the Episcopal Church to share in its annual expenditure of $256,000 to the extent of $12,000 a year. It was moved that this be done, and that it be financed from the item for interdenominational agencies in the budget. Bishop Hobson pointed out that someone has to experiment with radio as a means of communicating religious faith and knowledge, and that we can not do it alone, but must do it in cooperation with others.

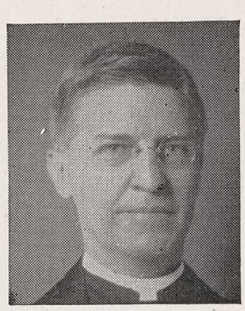
There was considerable discussion about the possibility of raising the complete budget on March 12. Bishop Nash of Mass. said that it had been suggested to him that parishes might raise more if they were given a particular object to stress, like world relief. The Presiding Bishop retorted that it was always easy to dramatize some aspect, but the Church had to be interested in the whole. There are too many people, he said "Who would like to give a memorial stained-glass window, but nobody wants to give a memorial furnace." It was difficult for Bishop Sherrill to divorce world relief needs from such specific missionary projects as Japan, China, Arizona, and others.

Survey Urged



The Rev. George Wieland of the Home Mission Department affirmed that there were two things that he hoped the new budget would accomplish in this field. The first was that domestic missionaries are now in the situation where the district pays only 35% of their travel expenses, and the individuals pay the other 65% out of very small salaries. The second matter was that of making realistic surveys of the work of the Episcopal Church in various dioceses. Up to the present, the Department has pointed out the faults and the opportunities existing in the dioceses of Eau Claire, Georgia, Kentucky and the districts of Montana and Idaho. The most ambitious survey of all is now being conducted in the diocese of Virginia. Other places that have requested these are Louisiana, Maine, Fond Du Lac, Nebraska, and all missionary districts. The need is for the personnel that will set up the already planned unit of research and field survey. It would be best to establish this section immediately, Wieland pointed out, while those who are wanted to man the staff are available. The Council voted that Bishop Sherrill be empowered to allot monies out of the new budget for such projects.

Religious Education



The Rev. John Heuss was enthusiastic about the reception given the book published by the department of Christian education, "The Holy Scriptures." The first printing was sold out in four weeks, the second sold before it could be delivered, and the third printing, which is mostly already sold, will not be ready for another few weeks. He read several letters received commenting on the volume. One woman objected that the statement was made that American history began at Plymouth rock. She said that she had lost confidence in the Presiding Bishop, the National Council and the department because they stated this about the non-conformist Puritans, when real churchmen preceded them in Virginia.

Mr. Heuss said that he had written her that it would be corrected in later editions, which prompted the anonymous comment, "Now we are to have a southern edition." Another letter from outside the Episcopal family expressed such interest that Bishop Sherrill thought it might be from the Pope. Heuss did not think that he should expect that until the next book in the series appears in May "The Church's History." In a more serious vein he reported the effectiveness of the

PROGRAM OUTLINED FOR YOUTH

★ "He in us and we in him." This phrase, from a sentence in the prayer of humble access in the communion service, will be the theme for the program and emphases of the united movement of the Church's youth for 1950-51. John Booty, retiring chairman of the national youth commission announced the theme at DeKoven Foundation, Racine, Wisc., where the commission has just completed its annual planning session. Chosen by young people representing all eight provinces of the Episcopal Church in the United States, the theme will stress both the personal and corporate aspects of participation in the life of the Church, and will serve as the underlying note of the UMCY program for the coming year.

Four points of major emphasis for all youth groups as well as a study program will be based upon the theme. Majors for the coming year are: 1) The observance of youth Sunday in every parish on the third Sunday in October, and the gathering of a united youth offering. The offering will be given to Christ Church Academy, Colon, Panama. 2) The corporate communion of the united movement of the Church's youth on the third Sunday after Easter. 3) "My Bounden Duty," a rule of life for young people. 4) A combination study-action major on the missionary work of the Episcopal Church.

The first three majors remain unchanged over previous years with the exception of the object for the united youth offering. The fourth major will serve to unite the youth of the Episcopal Church with the general Church program of missionary education. Lindley Hartwell of Burlington, Vt., was elected chairman of the commission. He will not only direct the meetings of the commission, but is also a member ex-officio of the division of youth of the National Council, and will be called upon to represent Episcopal youth in many official capacities. Mr. Hartwell is 18 years old and is a junior at the University of Vermont, where he is a pre-theological student. He has served in youth work of the diocese of Vermont and of the first province, as well as in the fellowship of St. Paul's Church, Burlington, his home parish. He has been a member of the commission for the past two years, and attended the national youth convention in Oakland, Calif., in 1949.

Elected to succeed herself as secretary of the commission was Miss Nancy Miller of Dover, N. H. Miss Miller is a freshman at the University of New Hampshire and is preparing to become a medical missionary. She was formerly president of the diocesan youth commission of New Hampshire, and served on the provincial youth commission of the first province. Miss Miller has been a member of the national youth commission for the past three years, and also attended the youth convention in California.

SOUTHERN OHIO HAS YOUTH RALLIES

★ Regional rallies for the youth of the diocese of Southern Ohio are being held in several centers this Lent. World relief will be the chief topic, with stress on aid to Korea.

HEADS CONVENTION COMMITTEE

★ The Rev. Gardiner M. Day, rector of Christ Church, Cambridge, has been appointed chairman of the committee on arrangements for the General Convention which will meet in Boston in 1952.

CLERGY MEET IN ALASKA

★ Bishop William J. Gordon Jr. of Alaska has informed the National Council that for the first time since the missionary district was organized in 1895, the clergy of the District met for a conference in Fairbanks, February 14-16. There have been small gatherings of the clergy at ordinations, but no more than half of the clergy of the district have been together. Most of the men never see a fellow clergyman.

Said Bishop Gordon, "The thirteen men who came to Fairbanks traveled 14,620 miles on the journey from and to their stations. Most of the travel was by plane with the exception of three men located along the Alaska railroad. One feature of the conference was the ordination to the diaconate of Mr. John Martin, who has been serving as a candidate for orders at St. James' Mission, Tanana."

OREGON CITY CHURCH DEDICATED

★ With a capacity congregation present, the new St. Paul's, Oregon City, was dedicated by Bishop Dagwell. A number of clergy assisted in the service, including the rector, the Rev. Hal R. Gross.

SCHOOL OF RELIGION IN CHICAGO

★ A school of religion on Tuesday evenings in Lent starts February 28 at the Redeemer, Chicago. The theme will be "the spiritual life in the 20th century" and the lecturer is Chaplain Alan W. Watts of Northwestern University. The meetings are sponsored jointly by the Episcopal Church council of the University of Chicago, the Canterbury Club of the university and the Church of the Redeemer.

EDITORIALS

You Too Must Act

THERE have been a number of excellent statements deploring the President's order to go ahead with the H-bomb, and there will be many more as it gradually sinks into the minds of people what this horrible instrument actually means. To deplore can be effective providing the statements reach those who can do something about it. We are glad therefore to learn that over a hundred religious leaders and educators on February 9th sent the following letter to President Truman, and especially so since it not only deplores but offers positive proposals to meet the crisis that confronts the entire world:

"The decision to manufacture the hydrogen bomb has thrown a shadow of horror across the homes and minds of all Americans.

"After the revelation that the Soviet Union had produced an atomic explosion, the people expected our nation to move toward an international agreement through the United Nations renouncing the use of atomic weapons of warfare. This hope remained high even after the United Nations General Assembly last fall because the voices of so many of the smaller nations had been lifted in the General Assembly appealing for an international convention against atomic weapons. We have all been disappointed.

"In the full belief that we speak for millions of ordinary men and women throughout our country and the world over whom this horror hangs, we insist that there can and must be an alternative path which leads to peace, rather than the path to certain global catastrophe imminent in an H-bomb race.

"We urge, Mr. President, that you immediately instruct the American delegation to the United Nations to present positive proposals through appropriate channels for an agreement whereby the use of atomic weapons, whether A-bombs, H-bombs, or other machines of mass destruction, will be banned.

"In agreement with the report of the American Friends Service Committee and the statements of other religious groups in our country, we believe that the United States and the Soviet Union can live in peace and that the threat of atomic war can be resolved through the settlement of differences between these two great powers.

"In the light of your expressed anxiety for international atomic control, Mr. President, we further urge that you immediately take steps to initiate direct negotiations to this end between our country and the Soviet Union on the highest level so that the threat of atomic catastrophe can be lifted from the peoples of the world."

To secure signatures quickly for such a letter is no easy task, and the message of course had to be placed before Mr. Truman promptly to have the full effect it deserves. The 133 people whose names are attached to the letter are all men and women of distinction, among them a considerable number of Episcopalians we are glad to say. They claim to "speak for millions of ordinary men and women" and it is our conviction that they do. There is one way for you to help prove them correct in this: write Mr. Truman today.

NOTE: We have since learned that 150 were invited to sign, that 133 responded is phenomenal.

"QUOTES"

LENT is a season in which we break up the hard soil by penitence, and so let the word of God be sown in our hearts that our lives may be fruitful. And the fruits of the Spirit are love, joy, peace. Just now the world is reaping its harvest of selfishness, hate and recklessness, and if experience is worth anything, men should have learned that we cannot have love, joy and peace unless we are willing to undergo the discipline of the Christian life. For there is no harder or more stubborn soil than these hearts of ours, and they will never bring forth good fruit unless we are willing to till the soil.

Good as Well as Bad

THIS has been a revolutionary century in every respect, but in none more decisively than the ordering of our society economically and politically. This has been the major concern of our generation. It is the thing that we talk and read about every day: the rise of labor unions, socialism and communism; the appearance of the so-called welfare state; the struggle between big business and big government.

In this area of human life we have lived through a period of revolution not only in Europe but also here in America. With some truth this has been called the century of the common man. Certainly we have witnessed the rising up of the masses of the people demanding a place in the sun and rebelling against peasant status. They look to the state to guarantee economic justice and security not only in Russia and England, but even here in America, the last bulwark of the idea of as little government as possible and free enterprise.

This is the great struggle and conflict of our time, and the large majority of our Church people look upon it with grave concern. They see danger and catastrophe before us if security is to be valued higher than freedom, if initiative and hard work disappear from our common life, if bureaucracy and tyranny increase from above. Certainly the majority of our friends in the business and financial world tend to regard the economic and political trend of this century with complete misgivings.

But have we tried to see all this, as Christians should try, from the perspective of the moral law and the working out of God's purpose in history? We see violence and war, yes. We see the tyrannies of wicked men. We see the swinging of the pendulum wildly from left to right. But back of this do we not see a great struggle for justice going on even in the most unlikely places? Men throwing off ancient wrongs? Do we not see a vast effort to work out the democratic idea on the level of economics?

We of the Church dare not refuse to grant some merit and sympathy to what is really the working class movement, a new phenomenon peculiar to the twentieth century. We dare not for strategic reasons and for moral reasons! Conservative as our membership is, we must discern in the agony and travail of social change mankind's attempt to work out a truer kind of justice and brotherhood for all the children of God. It has been attended by many evils as are all the works of man. It has often been led by those who scorned the Church as they knew it. It might well go too far in procuring justice at the expense of freedom. But let us be sure that we are not blind to the virtue in this revolutionary epoch in which we live out our days, that we see the good as well as the evil!

Current Movements and Christianity

NATIONALISM: Ally, Competitor or Both?

By CHAD WALSH
Professor at Beloit College

IN post-war Paris, with its violently conflicting intellectual currents, a wise-crack went the rounds of the cafes: "There are three prophets in France today: Karl Marx, Jean-Paul Sartre, and Jesus Christ—and in the order named."

If we look at the world as a whole, the bon mot must undergo a slight modification. At the midpoint of the twentieth century, there are three loyalties that grip the hearts of men in the mass: nationalism, ideology, and religion—and in the order named.

On a superficial level it might be argued that ideology is the most powerful of the three. A certain amount of evidence can be adduced. During World War II there was a Nazi fifth column in every allied country, and we had the spectacle of Russian soldiers deserting to the German colors to fight against their native land; on a smaller scale, there were examples in all the anti-Nazi nations of individuals who gave their first loyalty to the tenets of fascism. In like manner, Germany suffered defections to the cause of democracy or communism. The large number of German troops who joined the "Free German" forces in Russia balanced the Russians who signed up with the German Nazis.

Ideology, therefore, is very powerful indeed, and in many cases can result in individual decisions that go counter to national patriotism. But the brute fact remains that the great mass of people in every warring country remained loyal to their government—or at least went through the motions of loyalty—and that as World War II dragged along in its bloody course, the spell-binders and propagandists of every nation played all the changes on national sentiment and piped down on pure ideology. The ancient czars of Russia were trotted out of the showcase, given a dusting, and glorified as builders of Russian greatness. In America, many of the literary critics began wearing patriotic glasses, and judged modern novelists and poets by their faith in the American Century. Evidently "My country right or wrong" still rings more bells in the average heart than does any ideological slogan.

It should, of course, be added that nationalism usually contains a greater or less flavoring of ideology. German nationalism was strongly spiked with the doctrines of Nazism; Russian nationalism, despite its increasing glorification of such unproletarian apostles as Ivan the Terrible, is still seasoned with a great deal of Marxist sauce. As for America, our own rather hazy but persistent nationalism is usually associated in the minds of Fourth of July speakers with the free-enterprise system. But in every instance, nationalism is the basic ingredient.

Rival Religions

THIS being the case, what is the actual relation, in the year A.D. 1950, between nationalism and Christianity? They are rival religions.

Nationalism offers its followers an object of ultimate loyalty, the nation, which is mystically more than the sum total of its citizens. To this mystical entity the worshiper sacrifices his all—his own life, the lives of his sons, and in extreme cases the powers of his own mind. In return he receives a sense of belonging—salvation by union with the mystical whole.

Nationalism is entirely this-worldly; it has no answer to what the meaning of life will be after the sun has grown cold and all life—even the life of chosen nations and races—has come to an end on the earth. Christianity, as one of its many paradoxes, is stubbornly this-worldly and other-worldly at the same time. It can never forget (or forgets at its peril) that all nations are transient things, and that during their brief existence they stand under the constant judgment of God, who is not concerned with Americanism or other national isms, but with such platitudinous things as justice and love.

It must be emphasized that nationalism has not always existed in its present overdeveloped form. During the so-called Dark Ages and early Middle Ages, the nation as such hardly existed. A man's loyalty was to his religious faith and its Church, and to his local lord. There was the sense, if not the reality, of unity among the people of western Europe. But with the break-up of feudalism and the disruption of Church unity, national patriotism quickly developed as a primary loyalty, and since about the time of Napoleon it has been the main loyalty to most people.

What should be the attitude of the convinced Christian as he faces the challenge of the two religions? In the first place, love of one's country is not an evil per se; it becomes an evil only when it leads to injustice toward other nations, or when it demands primary loyalty of the individual. We are to render unto Caesar what is Caesar's; government is necessary, even if always mixed with evil. Therefore, the Christian is not justified in total repudiation of all national loyalties.

But the problem is much less simple than that. Nationalism, in its modern overdeveloped and cancerous form, is a rival religion. The Churches everywhere are in mortal danger of becoming like the Orthodox Church in Russia—the kept woman and propagandist of the state. In America, if such a situation comes about, it will be in a more muddled fashion, with a smoke screen of sweetness and light. Church people will be gradually led to equate Christianity with the "American Way of Life"; the feeling will be built up that America is so virtuous a nation, and so solidly founded on Christian principles, that any extension of America's power and influence is automatically an extension of Christianity and the Kingdom of God. This danger is especially acute in countries like America and England, where many national attitudes—belief in democracy, regard for civil rights, etc.—are ultimately Christian in their origin. If the siren-singers of nationalism are shrewd enough they may be able to persuade many Christians that the American Way is "Christianity in action," and that to oppose any of America's national policies is to oppose Christ.

Understand the Faith

IT seems to me that the duty of the American Christian is first of all to understand his own Christian faith as fully and deeply as possible, and to reckon with the possibility that an ultimate conflict of loyalties may some day come about. In that case, Christ must come before nation, regardless of the most to the individual. In the second place, the individual and the Churches should constantly try to discriminate: to decide, in the light of Christianity, what features of American life are roughly in accordance with Christianity, and which are opposed. In other words, this is the ancient prophetic function—and it should always begin at home; after America has been subjected to Christian evaluation, it is time to give other nations a going-over. In the third place, the individual Christian and the Churches can support all movements — secular and otherwise—that offer any real hope of moderating the fury of nationalism and providing a new and better loyalty for the world's two billion inhabitants. It seems pretty obvious that the only cure for nationalism, on the political level, is the growth of a world federation or world state. It may be that such an organization cannot be created in one fell stroke; probably it cannot. But any move in that direction should be examined by Christians with the peculiar blend of idealism and psychological realism that is one of the gifts of Christian faith—and where there seems any reasonable hope of progress, the Christians should be in the struggle, pushing for all they are worth.

As I understand the purpose of this series of articles, they are intended to analyze various movements that are "allies, competitors, or both" of Christianity. I have sent my mind through a number of gymnastics and failed to find any way that modern nationalism is a genuine ally of Christianity. All along the line it is a competitor, and a deadly one. But Christianity, with its one foot in the other world, is able to see the present world turmoil in some perspective. To the Christian believer and the Church is given the stupendous task of steering the emotional violence of nationalism into less pagan channels. To some extent this can be done by making world loyalty primary, and national or tribal loyalty secondary, just as the average Georgian or Vermonter, no matter what their state pride may be, still feel that their first obligation is toward the United States as a whole. But the only real cure of nationalism is Christianity itself. The more it grips the minds and hearts of people everywhere, the less need they will have to find an ersatz religion in the worship of such frail, man-created, and passing realities as the nation.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. What is meant by the word "ideology"; have each member briefly present his own.
2. What is meant by the American Century?
3. Discuss, pro and con, the author's statement that Christianity and nationalism are rival religions?
4. Discuss his statement that the nation is mystically more than the sum total of its citizens.
5. What is one of the fundamental differences between Christianity and nationalism?
6. Does the group think that the American way is "Christianity in action"?
7. What is the obligation of Christians in the event of a conflict of loyalties?
8. Should Christians work for world federation or a world state? What recent hearings in Washington have brought discussion on this subject to our attention?
9. Do you agree that world loyalty is primary for a Christian?

The Meaning of the Creed

The Second of a Series for Lent

By JOHN E. HINES
The Bishop Coadjutor of Texas

"I BELIEVE IN GOD THE FATHER ALMIGHTY, MAKER OF HEAVEN AND EARTH"

The man who is willing to admit this has made an irrevocable decision. He has set his feet upon a path from which there is no turning back. All sorts of possibilities flow from this one statement, the implications of which men and women will still be discovering when the mighty drama of human history closes.

One implication of this confession is that it sets a man over against a "No-God" view of the world and history! It sets him in harmony with a world-view to which there is personal responsibility attached. That much, we can say, flows from the confession, "I believe in God." However, the immediate argument does not have to do with the Christian idea of God, but simply with a world-view which admits of a God!

Occasionally, on the college campus, I run into young men who say that they are atheists. In my experience, this is one of the few times in a man's life when he can afford to be an atheist, holding a world-view which is "godless"! For, as this young man progresses, the latitude which he has for a materialistic, spirit-less view of the universe decreases.

He meets the girl of his choice, and the profound experience of love illuminates areas of his philosophy of life about which he has previously thought little. They are married—this pair—and begin to found a home in which countless things occur which are impossible to explain solely by using the thought-pattern of materialism. This young man enters into business and, immediately, he encounters the "problem of values"; standards of honesty, practices of dishonesty, discriminations, "easy or sharp" business practices, the question of "business ethics," successes, failures. Children are born to this couple, who in the twinkling of an eye can ask questions which batter even the best-knit argument for a "no-god" theory of existence. Life moves on—sometimes to moments of unusual joy; other times to moments of perplexity and pain. Mystery after mystery will not yield to the "open sesame" which this young man adopted in his academic years. He may be driven from atheism to agnosticism to the comfortless position of stoical head-shaking, and the baffling, "I do not know"! But his atheism is gone. It was enmity against God and, is not tenable in the world God has made.

Divided Personalities

ONE of the remarkable characteristics of most so-called "atheists" is that, with few exceptions, they behave like "theists." Their general behavior does not reflect a god-less, value-less world. They are divided personalities in that their atheism is largely intellectual, but practically they are people with the heritage of a consciousness of God. In almost every case, their behavior reflects a world in which there is law and judgment, plan and purpose, origin and destiny. If there is any consistency in their make-up they are forced eventually to the conclusion that even in the midst of its chaos (or precisely in the midst of it) this world makes sense only on the basis of belief in God!

It is not impossible but that the next great world conflict, if it comes, will be fought over this differentiation in belief! Apparently, it has been shaping up for a period of years, retarded or accelerated according to the groundswell of material prosperity. This conflict, whether overt or underground, is the result of two radically differing world-views, contradictory in their essence and revolutionary in their energies. What one world view has found good: Man's spiritual antecedents, with their call to repentance, forgiveness and justice—the other thinks is evil! What one deems to be the very essence of evil: deceit, coercion, self-elevation—is exhalted by the other into the highest good. When Nicholas Berdaev recognized the conflict in its incipient stage, he struck this prophetic note:

"The hour has struck when, after terrible struggle, after an unprecedented de-Christianization of the world—and its passage through all the results of that process — Christianity will again be revealed in its pure form. Then it will be clear what Christianity stands for and what it stands against. Christianity will again become the one and final refuge of man. When this purifying process is finished, it will be seen that Christianity stands for Man . . . and for Humanity; for the value and dignity of personality, for freedom, for social justice, for the brotherhood of men and nations, for enlightenment and truth, for the creation of a new and better life. And it will be clear that only Christianity stands for these things."

Now the qualifications of the word God, in the Creed, namely, that he is "father," "almighty," "maker of heaven and earth," are the result of God's self-revelation. It is not enough to say, "I believe in God." That is not Christian and certainly not gospel! It is enough only when the object of that belief is the "one true God," whose light "lighteth every man that cometh into the world."

Not for nothing does the decalogue begin, "Thou shalt have none other gods before me." Following that admonition with another, "Thou shalt not make to thyself any graven image." For, unequivocally, the structure of a man's development is determined by that which he worships. That which he worships—and to which he subordinates every other allegiance—is his God! That is why idolatry, not adultery, not thievery, is the most pernicious sin in the whole range of both the Old and New Testaments. That is why the prophets were so disturbed when their people went "awhoring after false gods." That is why G. K. Chesterton's little verse is such a penetrating observation:

> "He made the sign of the Cross of God
> He knew the Roman prayer.
> But there dwelt unreason in his heart
> Because of the gods that were there!"

That is why Old Testament warfare was usually conducted as much against the gods of an enemy, as against the enemy himself. For, to discredit the object of a man's ultimate allegiance is, in the long run, to defeat the man. It is still so today! Nazi Germany employed this technique effectively. Hence, one cannot in honesty, discount "Creeds." They are basic!

God as Father

IT is true (as Dr. Paul Tillich reminds us) that the Fatherhood of God, which is both the greatest and most incredible concept of the Christian faith, has become one of the most commonplace and insignificant phases of our daily life. Perhaps this is due to the fact that there is no living prototype of fatherhood to which people may repair for definition and reassurance. Perhaps it is due to the fact that fatherhood is the easy victim of a sentimentality which tends to gloss over responsibility and avoid judgment. Whatever the cause, the Creed catches us with its paradoxical interpretation of God as Father, for it is a virtual impossibility for men, honestly, to call God . . . Father! That is against "human nature." Actually, we are not by nature, "children" as much as we are by nature "rebels"—"enemies" of him who has made us! It is only by the "power of the spirit"—a spirit not our own—that we are able to cry, "Abba, Father."

It is in Dr. Tillich's disturbing little book, "The Shaking of the Foundations" that he points out that in family life, the father is the object of the child's unconscious hatred! Why? Because the father is the representative of law, of discipline, of order, which stands against the child's naturally unordered, unrestricted desires. It is a law which the child, in his immaturity and primitive individualism cannot meet. Yet, from it he cannot turn away! Hence, the split which tortures the child's "peace of mind," results in this unconscious hatred, which echoes—on its own level—St. Paul's cry, "Who shall deliver me from this body of death."

However, as the child matures, learning the lessons of life, so too does his understanding of his father mature. And, in that moment which Dr. Tillich calls "a moment of grace," the child suddenly does the good freely—without command and more than is commanded! Bondage and death have no more power over him. Obedience has ceased to be obedience, and has become the response of gratitude. In a very real sense the child is born or, perhaps re-born, of the spirit and is therefore not "under the law."

Such is the situation of man before his Father, God! The "natural" man, the unregenerate man, hates God, looks upon him as an enemy, because he represents a law which man cannot achieve, but from which he cannot escape. It is only in his "moment of grace"—only in penitent self-surrender—that the dilemma is resolved, and men can honestly pray, "Our Father."

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. What brings young people, who say they are atheists, to a belief in God?
2. What is the difference between atheism and agnosticism?
3. What, according to Berdaev, does Christianity stand for?
4. What is the most pernicious sin?
5. What are the qualifications of the word God?
6. Why is a father the object of a child's unconscious hate?
7. What does this teach us about God?
8. What happens in "a moment of grace"?

Civil Liberties and World Peace

By CLIFFORD J. DURR
Former Member of Federal Communications Commission
President of the Lawyers Guild

(Concluded From Last Week)

INDEED the god of power has strong weapons with which to protect his sovereign rule!

Our god of power has confused our symbols and knocked askew our guide posts of the past. Our tongues are confused and our words have lost their meaning.

We boast of the supremacy of our democratic system, but shudder in fear lest it be challenged in the arena of ideas.

We proclaim, as international principles, the basic human rights of all men, and deny these same rights at home.

We are called to a holy crusade in defense of Christianity and given hate as our weapon.

In our cold war against Russia we adopt a scorched earth policy with respect to our own civil liberties and imitate the very practices of the Russian system which we profess to abhor.

"Loyalty" and "Americanism" are the watchwords of the day, and by our actions we give them strange and fearful meanings.

In the name of freedom, conformity is demanded and protest silenced.

To protect our "democratic processes" government employees are officially empowered and directed, by executive order of the President, to sit in secret judgment upon the minds and emotions of their fellow employees, to deny them the right to confront their accusers, to try them on the unsworn testimony of unknown witnesses, and to convict them on speculations as to their state of mind.

In the name of security, the Attorney General of the United States is authorized, by ex parte and unreviewable decree to prescribe what organizations we may join; our secret police are given surveillance over our beliefs and associations; agents and informers are sent forth to take down our words and make note of our comings and goings; neighbors are encouraged to spy upon neighbors and tattlers and gossips are officially raised to a new level of dignity and power.

Without due process of law, men and women are deprived of their jobs and branded as enemies of their country for exercising the very rights which our Constitution guarantees to them. It is denied that they are punished merely because they are not sent to prison or the gallows.

Legislative committees, federal and state, vie with each other in prescribing new standards of Americanism and new methods for enforcing them. Reputations are lynched, with committee reports and newspaper headlines, substituted for the rope or the torch as the tool of the lynchers.

What is this "loyalty" that is being so harshly commanded? Loyalty to what? Is it really loyalty to our form of government and the basic principles upon which it rests, or is loyalty to something quite different?

A Justice of our United States Supreme Court has made an observation of which we might well take note. As I do not have the official report of his opinion before me, I shall have to paraphrase his remarks. Freedom of speech, he said, is to our form of government what the heart is to the human body. If the heart be impaired, the body is debilitated; if it be stilled, the body dies.

A year or more ago the "Americanism" committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce prepared and published a program for thought control on a community basis. No legislative committee on un-American activities charged that this was a "subversive" or "un-American" scheme. The chairman of the committee is now secretary of our navy.

On last May first, the marshal of New York's loyalty day parade made a speech belittling academic freedom—our "much advertised" academic freedom, he called it. He retains his position as Secretary of Labor and has not been called before any loyalty board to account for his views.

On the same day the new president of a university that prides itself on the number of young men it trains for our diplomatic service, made an inaugural address in which he deplored the emphasis placed by our universities on freedom of opinion. "Liberty" (in quotes) he said, "is today's major plague."

"It is not surprising to note," he continued, "that states have found it necessary to control opinion exactly as they found it necessary to control economics. The state's thinking in this matter is much sounder than that of the resentful individual whose opinion is controlled. Despite the dramatic but puerile dictum of Helvetius there is nothing essentially sacred about an opinion. In fact, in the field of religion, where God has been merciful enough to reveal the truth to mankind, opinion can be blasphemous. At best, opinions are blind gropings for the truth; at worst, they are the stubborn vaporings of ignorance. Actually, an opinion is grounded on nothing but the limited experience and personal interests of the individual. It is not supported by a universal, eternal, immutable law as is truth. The state's opinion, then, is just as good, just as sacred, and just as accurate as the individual citizen's opinion or the majority opinion of all the citizens . . . With man's normal aspirations reduced by university training from a thirst for truth to the spawning of opinions, there is every reason to expect that the state for its own preservation will be forced to establish an opinion-control bureau. There are definite forewarnings of such necessity."

No Committee of Congress has called for an investigation. Instead the entire address was placed in the Congressional Record by a United States Senator who referred to it as a "masterful inaugural address" and "worthy of the attention of scholars throughout the world." The Senator is now Attorney General.

The Scribes and Pharisees again sit on Moses' seat. We may safely observe their nobler words, but if we look to their works as the pattern of our behavior, we may be confused, "for they say, and do not."

Fear Dominates

I DO not believe that the danger to our constitutional form of government lies in the threat that seventy or eighty thousand Communists will overthrow it by force and violence. Nor do I believe that many Americans sincerely believe that such is our danger. But many are afraid not to seem to believe it. They fear for their jobs, they fear for their reputations, they fear the loneliness that is the price of non-conformity.

For fifteen years I was an employee or official of our Federal Government, and I say in all sincerity that the level of traditional honesty among government employees and officials is extremely high. There are few incidents of venality. But the corrosion of fear can be far more corrupting than greed. I have seen it at work and the sight is not pretty. I have seen decent men silent, when they wanted to say "This is wrong and I will have no part of it," and I have seen the resulting tortures of their own minds and souls.

Their predicament is not new. An item from the report of a tragic incident of nineteen centuries ago, comes constantly to mind, "Nevertheless even of the rulers many believed in him, but because of the Pharisees they did not confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogues; for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God."

Formula for Peace

THE question of loyalty is not a simple one. Loyalty arises out of man's deepest and finest emotions. It is therefore not to be dealt with lightly. It should not, and cannot be demanded. Those seeking to earn it for themselves or their beliefs or principles should approach their tasks with the deepest sense of responsibility and of humility. I believe the records of history will show that man's misplaced loyalties have been a far greater source of cruelty and wrong than his innate wickedness. The betrayal or prostitution of loyalty is the betrayal of the best that is in man, if not of God himself.

Loyalties can be attached to little things or magnificent things. There may be smaller loyalties supplementing greater loyalties, or petty loyalties in conflict with the greater, but somewhere there must be a greater loyalty over-riding all others or man is lost.

When we ask, "To what is man loyal?", are we not necessarily asking, "What does man worship?"

I believe that this was what our founding fathers had in mind when they set up a form of government which does not and cannot demand the absolute and unconditional loyalty of its citizens. This I believe was the thought behind the first amendment to our Constitution, with its guarantees of religious freedom and freedom of speech, press and assembly. It seems to me that this amendment says: "Here is an area that must be set aside to be governed by a higher power than government, the area of the human mind and spirit."

But to return to the missing ingredients in our formula for peace. I suggest a few. They are obvious, but the obvious things are the most easily overlooked.

As I have said, our formula contains power in abundance. But does it contain faith? Does it contain hope? Does it contain the greatest of these, love?

How strong is our faith in that democracy and freedom which we seek to protect and extend abroad by our economic and military might? Have we faith in our professed belief that men everywhere are equal in the sight of God, or do we believe that this applies only to certain groups determined by the geographical location of their countries, or only to those whose social or economic status or systems, or whose race, religion or ideology conform with a fixed and divinely prescribed standard? What is the measure of our faith that man is truly created in the image of his maker and is not a vile creature, irrevocably doomed to self destruction by his innate and ineradicable evil?

Do we have firm hope of a day in which science and technology shall have been turned entirely away from destructive ends and shall be devoted to promoting the welfare of all people everywhere? Do we hope, with all our being, for a world in which all nations shall have bound themselves together in a pact of friendship with each other, but of eternal warfare against their common enemies, hunger, disease, ignorance, prejudices, insecurity, fear and hate? Do we believe that a kingdom of God on earth is a realizable goal, or do we believe that its promise was a cruel hoax?

What measure of love is contained in our formula for peace? Is love a word we have surrendered to the writers of cosmetic advertisements and sexy stories, or does it still have meaning for us? Have we become ashamed to use the word, or will we make it once more a word of power and challenge, expressing that constructive emotional force in which there is no fear? Do we have that love of our brother, the lack of which makes a lie of the profession of a love of God? In our scale of values, how does our love of mankind weigh against our love of security, or economic or social position, or even our petty claims to respectability?

It has been tragically demonstrated that fear and hate are contagious. If we but use them with confidence and courage, do we not have at our disposal even more contagious forces, capable in time, of sweeping fear and hate from the world?

Liberty and Peace

OUR civil liberties and world peace are inseparably tied together. We cannot keep them indefinitely in the face of impending war, but if we lose them, I do not see how we can find our way to peace.

Freedom of the human mind and spirit is not a luxury today, if it ever was. That freedom is a necessity, not only for man's growth and development, but for his survival.

Man's deepest faith is in constant conflict with his desire for visible and tangible certainty. His instinct for worship is strong, but the concept of an infinite God is a tremendous one. It is therefore natural that throughout history men have sought to whittle down that concept or confine it within the bounds of their own limited understanding. Things seen are real; things unseen require a strong exercise of faith. Men begin to seek the eternal verities in their immediate physical environment and in the temporal institutions and way of life with which they are familiar, and these in time become for them the eternal verities. They tend to attach to them a religious significance and make them the focal point of their worship—the sum total of all truth; and—too often with success—to impose their concept of eternal truth upon their religious institutions. Those who seek to widen man's vision of the physical universe, therefore, become the enemies of religion and are to be resisted; those who inquire into his temporal institutions with the view of adjusting them to the expanding knowledge of the physical universe "would change the customs which Moses delivered unto us" and are to be destroyed.

From the small spot on which he stood, man at one time saw the earth as a flat surface rimmed around by the horizon and roofed by a dome of blue across which the sun moved in its appointed course from east to west. This became for him religious truth and his religion barely survived the theories of Copernicus and the demonstrations of those theories by Gallileo. He found truth in an existing form of government, and the divine right of kings became a religious concept. As a result, the rising spirit of democracy strained his religious faith and split asunder his religious institutions.

In our own country, the institution of slavery, because it existed, was given religious justification. It was abolished only after a bitter civil war in which each side invoked the name of God in support of its cause. Even now, our religious thinking is confused because of the expanding knowledge of the processes of biology. Unable to grasp fully the concept of an infinite God, it is not easy for men to see that the magnificence of God is not diminished nor the dignity of man lessened by scientific evidence that man arrived at his present state through a process of growth and development.

Man's divine curiosity about the universe in which he lives will not be denied. He will continue to probe into its secrets. His discoveries may bless or curse mankind, depending upon the uses made of them. The outcome hinges upon the diligence and the freedom of his inquiry into his social, economic, and political institutions and his willingness to adjust them to his expanded knowledge of the physical universe—upon that and his faithful adherence to the basic religious principle that man, being created in the image of God, are equal in his sight and so must be in the sight of each other.

This, it seems to me, is the challenge of our time. To meet that challenge, the minds of men must be free to explore, to inquire, and to test. They must be subject only to "the perfect law, the law of liberty." Without freedom of mind, there can be no freedom of religion. Unless man is free to develop and adjust his social ideas and institutions to meet the challenge of science, there may in time be no religion at all, because there may be no man.

We Need a Saviour

By WILLIAM P. BARNDS
Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln, Nebraska

WE frequently refer to Jesus Christ as our Saviour. We say that he saves us from sin. But all too often we do not stop to think what is really meant. In fact, often we do not like to think of ourselves as sinners. True, we say the general confession, but it really costs little to say that with our lips along with others. But in ordinary living some people dislike to admit to sin. Some even hate to own up to a mistake! There is always the tendency to justify or excuse our mistakes, and to rationalize our positions. We often tend to blame environment. The last place we want to put responsibility is upon the individual himself.

The reason we need a Saviour is because in the life of every one of us there is an unruly area of terrible selfishness, that may show itself in hatred, lack of discipline, ungoverned passion, or callous indifference to life's best values. People who think they do not have such an area in their lives are greatly deceived and are in greater spiritual need than those who know they have it in their lives.

This area in one's life is not improved by increased learning, or more culture. Money, social position, nice clothes, fine homes, do not correct it. This is where we need a better ruler than ourselves. We need a Saviour to soften our sinful emotions, and to turn our ingrown attitudes outward to him.

It is easy to demonstrate the truth of the need for a Saviour. Try this test. Think of the most shameful moment in your life—one you would not want the light of day to shine upon. Isn't that argument enough? Can Christ save and help? Think of the greatest religious moment in your life. Isn't that a foretaste of what Christ can do for us?

and political, that estrange and infuriate, we must either shatter or surmount them.

"Segregation will be destroyed by active brotherhood. The church will free its soul and hands only if it removes from itself the stigma that it is the most segregated institution in the United States, and in the world at large ceases its hand-washing in such baleful persecutions as those in South Africa and Spain."

★ Chad Walsh is a professor at Beloit College and a priest of the Episcopal Church. He is the author of several books, including "Stop Looking and Listen" and "C. S. Lewis: Apostle to the Skeptics." More recently he has revealed himself to be a thoroughly modern poet who combines the technical resources of contemporary verse with the deep insight of orthodox Christianity. These poems are contained in his latest book, "The Factual Dark" published at $2 by the Decker Press, Prairie City, Illinois. Here is a sample:

The Devil sports no scarlet shorts today,
No suavely curving horns. His feet are normal,
His suit well-pressed, a modest banker gray.

Or this modern lullaby as he rocks his daughter to sleep:

Sleep on sleep on
While the gray caps rock
The boat at the dock
And the hand of the clock goes round and round.

At a different lake, successful with vetoes,
The mazdas burn hot and give no light;
In the wider world of the widening night
The darkness is deeper with Francos and Titos.

RECTOR MARKS HIS ANNIVERSARY

★ The Rev. John A. F. Maynard celebrated the 25th anniversary of his rectorship of the French Church of the Holy Spirit, New York, on February 12th. There were greetings from Bishop Gilbert and Governor Dewey.

AMERICANISM CALLED A DANGER

★ Chaplain James A. Pike of Columbia University apparently agrees with the point of view presented in this number by Chad Walsh. Speaking at a meeting of Congregationalists in Springfield, Mass., the Episcopal clergyman said the Americanism cult's creed is "Jew, Catholic, Protestant—that does not matter. We're all Americans and that's the unifying integrating principle." But the trouble with this over-glorification of the American way of life, he said, is that it forgets religion and theology, and in the resulting confusion "people accept the fruit rather than the root."

College Work

Bishop Nash as chairman of the college work division brought recommendations for the integration of the college work of the Church which suggests the setting up of a Commission for College Work. The Rev. Roger Blanshard, new executive secretary of the division, told of the request of the Society for College Work that the division take over the establishment of the national association of Canterbury Clubs, which had been accepted.

Auxiliary Report

The work of the Woman's Auxiliary was presented by Mrs. Margaret Sherman. She gave to all the members copies of the most recent publications, addresses made at San Francisco, "Christian Advance" by Bishop Neil and Leila Anderson, and "His Holy Fellowship" by the Rev. Theodore Ferris. The board of the Auxiliary set up policy at its meeting to give an equipment fund to each of their workers, except those connected with institutions, of $100 a year, asking them to send in an annual report of its expenditure. Previously the equipment fund had been allotted only upon individual requests, certified by the bishop or one in charge. They also have made it an experimental policy to provide $700 for workers to buy a new car, when they have the assurance that the missionary district is giving a maintenance account of 6c a mile.

Missionary policy in China was discussed in executive session. Since nothing came to the floor, it is reasonable to assume that the Episcopal Church and its work there will remain on the same basis, "wait and see."

Selected by
GEORGE MacMURRAY

HIGH PURPOSE: Alger Hiss appears to have been a man of high purpose. He has held many positions requiring character, ability and idealism. He was found guilty of perjury, but there was no evidence of moral turpitude introduced into his trial. The government had no case other than the charges offered by Mr. Chambers, whose record was revealed as quite the antithesis of that of the man he accused. Both Mr. and Mrs. Hiss are members of the Society of Friends. They bore themselves with restraint and frankness throughout the trial. Can it be that juries, in the hysteria of this postwar era, may be in the wrong? At any rate, an appeal from the verdict may be expected. It is our American tradition to suspend final judgment until due process of law is completed. Until then, a mystery remains. Perhaps someday it will be unraveled. — Watchman Examiner (Baptist).

FREE PULPIT: One of the greatest contributions the Church can make to our modern world is to set up a pulpit in the midst of its errors and self-deception and charge the minister with the grave responsibility of proclaiming from a courageous and sincere heart the unadulterated truth as he sees it, and to dare any man to forbid the freedom of his utterances. —There is nothing so impotent as a muzzled pulpit fawning at the feet of a cowardly congregation.—Christian-Evangelist (Disciples).

RETURN TO MADRID?: Is it too much to expect of the state department still another turnabout on a question which they consider to be of minor importance? Possibly. But if, between now and the next meeting of the General Assembly, the department learns that American public opinion is adverse (to sending an ambassador to Franco Spain), our delegates may not actually press for a UN action which will only perpetuate the dictatorship which has been fastened on the impoverished Spanish people.—Commonweal (R.C.)

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Christ's Victory and Ours. By Frederick C. Grant. Macmillan. $2.00.

This is a notable new book, primarily intended for reading and meditation in Lent, but on a theme so deep and wide that it has no seasonal limitations. Dr. Grant deals particularly—as many books before have done—with the crucifixion and the words of Jesus on the cross. Many such books have been sentimental and rhetorical, but this one emphatically is not so. It has the astringent quality of a man who is not only a devout Christian but at the same time a profound and intellectually disciplined scholar. The particular words on the cross become a gateway into large vistas of theological understanding. The reader will be grateful also that after the chapters which center upon the crucifixion the final one, "The Gospel of the Resurrection," brings its climactic message of Christ's everlasting victory over sin and death.

—W. RUSSELL BOWIE

The Apostolic Fathers: An American Translation. By Edgar J. Goodspeed. Harper. $3.75.

Professor Goodspeed's translation of the New Testament, of which the 25th anniversary was recently celebrated, is one of the best-known modern translations. It is an "American" translation, i. e. in the American language. His translation of the Apocrypha is one of the most attractive and most scholarly versions of those books ever made. His new volume is also an "American" translation, and gives us the Apostolic Fathers in the language of today. Each book has a brief Introduction giving just the information the reader needs for proper orientation. The book opens with a translation of Doctrina Apostolorum, the little book which Dr. Goodspeed believes lay behind the Didache, a "counter-blast" to the collection of Paul's letters.

The Atoning Life. By Henry Sylvester Nash. Harper. $1.00.

This is a reprint of a work first published in 1908 by the father of the present Bishop of Massachusetts, and is the Presiding Bishop's Book for Lent.

It provokes a strongly mixed reaction. On the one hand, it is a moving book that calls for admiration not unmixed with amazement. It anticipates in striking and lucid passages the religious and theological concerns brought to the fore in our own day by the revival of the great theological traditions. There is a religious vitality about it, and flashes of psychological insight coupled with a refreshing breadth of vision. Much of what is said bears no indication of date, particularly in the sphere of personal faith and life.

On the other hand, one could scarcely defend it theologically. It is held that man is perfectible; that we can build the Kingdom of God by moralizing our society. Mystery is simply the wonder of meaningfulness; sins there are, but Original Sin there is not. In short, and despite the frequent orthodoxy of the language, this book is a fine example of the long-lived Pelagian heresy.

The style and language are magnificent, the insights are stimulating, and the soaring optimism has a pleasant if somewhat ethereal taste in these troubled times. Let us say—useful for edification, read critically, but let it not be applied to establish doctrine!—HOLT GRAHAM.

The Presiding Bishop's Book for Lent 1950

THE ATONING LIFE

by Henry Sylvester Nash

"I have read it a number of times; it is a gem. It has a timeless element in it, which makes it timely. It is a book of real insight, rich and fruitful."
—JOSEPH FORT NEWTON

"I am delighted that Dr. Henry Sylvester Nash's The Atoning Life is to be reprinted. It is a profoundly impressive and stimulating little books." — BISHOP WILLIAM SCARLETT

VIDA D. SCUDDER
Churchwoman of Wellesley, Mass.

May I suggest that people interested in China should add to the valuable works mentioned in your Book Notes the volume "The Chinese Conquer China" by Anna Louise Strong? I wish all readers of The Witness might have been present to hear the author as she spoke in my living room to an audience gathered by Miss Emily Balch. I think they would have been impressed, as all present were, by Miss Strong's sanity, dignity, and trustworthy reports of experiences. The occasion was a moving one for me, for she had spoken in the same room twenty-odd years ago. Through what drama she has lived. Don't miss her book.

With appreciation of the fearless and well-balanced treatment of our many problems in The Witness.

ANDREW M. VAN DKYE
Member, Witness Editorial Board

As the reporter for Deputies when the debate on the seating of women was conducted at General Convention, I want to say that Spencer Ervin is correct in faulting us for failing to contradict Canon Wedel's statement (Witness, Jan. 19). I was unaware, until his letter appeared, that the correction has not been made. The distinction between the Assembly and the Convocations in the Church of England was clarified for me by the Rev. Bradford Young of N. H., who had lately been an exchange rector in England.

I do think however that there is a fallacy in Mr. Ervin's argument. The subject before the Deputies was admitting women as lay deputies. His suggestion that none of the apostles were women has nothing to do with the case, since apostolic succession has to do with bishops.

MRS. WILLIS H. ATWELL
Churchwoman of Grand Rapids, Mich.

You will probably be deluged with replies to the letter of Mrs. John H. Moore, (Witness Feb. 9) but perhaps she will be pleased. I could comment on every paragraph, but for the sake of brevity, I shall not. While I cannot claim to know the Te Deum word for word, I can sing it along with only an occasional look at my Prayer Book. We also use the Benedicite, which would surely fall into disuse if conservation of time were important! The phrases of the Litany are very familiar to me and many others of my generation. The prayer for the Congress is used at the opening of every session and whenever any important issue is before the Congress. It is used regardless as of whether the Congress is Republican or Democratic, and was used before a member of our parish was a Representative in Congress. I am sure that at least some use it in their private devotions.

My experience is very limited, and while I was confirmed more than fifteen years ago (Mrs. Moore refers to those confirmed fifteen years ago) none of my children are old enough to be confirmed, but I feel sure they will grow up being familiar with the very things in the Prayer Book that Mrs. Moore feels are falling into disuse.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Action to Stop Armament Race Demanded by Conference

The Delegates at Detroit Meeting Grapple With National and World Issues

By W. B. SPOFFORD JR.

★ After four days of intense discussion on economic morality from the Christian point-of-view, the thought, which had been haunting the minds of the 450 delegates to the Federal Council's second study conference on the Church and Economic Life, held in Detroit, February 16-19, was brought out in the open.

In the conference's final session, Episcopalian Jerry Voorhis, executive secretary of the Cooperative League of America and former Congressman, moved that the Federal Council, through its appropriate agencies, immediately make comprehensive studies of the moral implications of the hydrogen and atomic bombs and provide some vigorous leadership to the Churches, and the nations and peoples of the world, in attempts to achieve immediate peaceful solutions to problems which have been intensified by the development of new suicidal weapons. The resolution was passed without dissenting vote.

Farmer Speaks Up

Then the conference, which earlier had approved the statement that "war is not inevitable," overwhelmingly passed a resolution, submitted by farmer Joseph Fichter of the Methodist Church, that the United States government should, immediately, begin "talks" with other nations, including the Soviet Union, on means of controlling the super-bombs. In discussing the motion, several delegates emphasized that, if the conference could not take affirmative action on some such proposition, the delegates would be morally culpable, in light of the Christian ethic, and the conference would be worthless. In the voting there was but several dissenting votes to the motion.

In the straight economic realm, the conference stated that Christian economic morality is to be found neither in Adam Smith nor Karl Marx, but in the Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles. "The Church has a unique opportunity and obligation to become a force for reconciliation without becoming a chaplain to the status quo," said a conference statement drawn up by a committee headed by Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam.

Episcopal Leaders

The real work of the conference was done in group sessions, dealing with a) the individual, conflicting motives and claims; b) freedom of enterprise and social controls; c) the American economy in relation to world needs and resources and d) the Churches' program in relation to economic life.

Episcopalians who were officially on the program as speakers, consultants or leaders of group sessions, besides Mr. Voorhis, were Madame Frances Perkins of the civil service commission; the Very Rev. Ralph Higgins, Grand Rapids, Mich.; Charles Taft, past-president of the Federal Council; Edward Cushman of the Wayne University Institute on Industrial Relations; Bishop Ludlow, suffragan of Newark; Noel Sargent, executive secretary of the National Association of Manufacturers and Mrs. Theodore Wedel, representing the united council of church women.

In the report on motives, the conference said: "For the Christian, responsibility for the welfare and freedom of others takes priority over his desire, however worthy, for his own individual freedom." Emphasizing the doctrine of stewardship, the conference statement reads: "Working in cooperation with others rather than against them is in accordance with Christian motivation. If by competition is meant the motive whereby one vies with others in serving mankind, then competition is an essential factor in a good society. If, however, competition in economic life leads men to compete in the acquisition of wealth for its own sake or in the use of power over one's fellows or to gain special privilege which bars others from the goods of life, then the competition must be judged un-Christian."

In respect to freedom of enterprise and social control, the statement, after saying that Christians are concerned to build a society which achieves such basic values as freedom, order, justice and fraternity, said:

"Our Christian responsibilities must be discharged both on the level of self-restrained individual action and also on the level of developing institutions, groups, and an economic system which will give the individual the greatest opportunity to serve these values."

This report, after going on record in favor of federal aid to education and urging all possible measures to assure all citizens full access to expanded, adequate, modern medical and health services, favored the convening of a voluntary national congress of individuals, drawn from the ranks of business, agriculture, labor, the professions, technical areas and the general public, to discuss and establish a sound national policy in respect to economic life. The idea for such a conference was first broached by Walter Reuther, president of the U. A. W.-C. I. O., in his speech at the opening luncheon of the conference.

The World Scene

In respect to the American economy's role in the world scene, the conference said: "The moral responsibilities of the nation, holding such a degree of power, are tremendous. It must be the purpose of the Christian Church to help our nation to accept these responsibilities in humility and faith. One of the consequences of this position is that economic readjustments or business recessions in America have serious consequences in other countries and are felt throughout the world."

This nation has three basic economic responsibilities in this area, the report said: 1) to use its economic strength in such a way as to contribute to a just and durable peace; 2) to assist other countries to attain basic self-support and a decent standard of living and 3) to safeguard and promote the social and economic welfare in the United States. In this connection, the report said, "The United Nations and its specialized agencies should receive increasing moral and financial support. The program of technical assistance and other governmental programs involving widespread international cooperation should be organized through the United Nations whenever practicable in order to strengthen the United Nations, to draw the contributions of other countries into the program, and to reduce the temptation to put special United States interests affected by them ahead of larger long-run interests."

In conclusion, this report said that it believed that war was not inevitable and that, while the delegates recognized the existing necessity for military defense against totalitarianism, they held that a moral political and economic program is the primary essential for the positive achievement of an enduring peace. The most vigorous debate of the conference, perhaps, centered on this point.

The final section, dealing with what the Church's task should be, emphasized the need for more Church research in this whole area, more comprehensive Christian education on the moral implications of economic systems; the setting of better examples in this field by the Churches, including just and adequate salaries for all church employees and the elimination of "class churches," and the application of Christian principles to concrete economic situations.

It should be emphasized that, while the delegates to the conference were appointed by their respective denominational heads, they were not speaking for their denominations but only for themselves. Also, the final reports, accepted by the conference, represented compromises between many different positions in all areas.

Middle Way Stressed

Throughout the conference, the words "the middle way" were used often and, in the results, the delegates seemed to wish to develop an economic life between capitalism and communism. As the conference statement said:

"Christians are opposed to all who would rule God out of the universe or out of the practices of the economic life. Atheism is un-Christian, whether it be affirmed by a philosopher or expressed in practices that disregard God's will. The Church must attack the atheism of orthodox communism in which faith in God is called superstition and also such practical atheism as is present in contemporary capitalism in which God's will is regarded as irrelevant to the economic process, whenever or wherever it appears in the professions, in labor leadership, in farm organizations, in industrial ownership and management. Any order too largely driven by the acquisitive spirit, organized upon autocratic principles and grounded in materialism, must be changed to the end that the motive of service, the methods of mutual aid, the principles of democracy, and a philosophy that stresses the supremacy of personality shall be dominant."

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

OREGON PLANS NEW WORK

★ Plans for the expenditure of more than $100,000 for new work in the diocese were approved at the annual council of the diocese of Oregon. Most of the money will be used to assist local groups to acquire new sites for church plants. The National Council also will assist in the program. Bishop Dagwell has already stated that during 1950 the work of the Church will be expanded in Multnomah, Cottage Grove, Springfield, Waldport, Powers, Forest Grove, Lebanon, Delake, Reedsport, North Bend, Brookings, Beaverton, Sylvan and Oakridge.

DEPARTMENT OF SPORTS

★ We have never been able to gather enough sports news to have a sports page—something we would very much like. But we do run into a news item occasionally. Thus the annual diocesan track meet was held in Boston on February 18. If any records were broken we hope our correspondent there will let us know.

BISHOP DAGWELL HITS H-BOMB

★ Bishop Dagwell was one of the speakers at a public meeting held in Portland, Ore., to protest against the manufacture of the hydrogen bomb. The well-attended meeting overwhelmingly approved a letter to President Truman which offered the following alternatives; a world disarmament conference; strengthening of the UN; a call to Congress to declare World War II officially over; "an attitude of friendliness toward all other peoples and the relief of suffering overseas by the use of U. S. food surpluses."

Bishop Dagwell said the decision to make the H-bomb was "contrary to everything we cherish as children of God. You do not make peace by engaging in armament races. 'Those who take the sword shall perish by the sword."

Another speaker, Prof. L. Edward Shunk of Lewis and Clark College, told the audience: "I think it's time to stand up and object to decisions taken with no effort to apprise the people."

BISHOP DAGWELL

NEW CHURCH AT OXFORD

★ Ground was broken recently for a new church at Oxford, Ohio. There were addresses by Bishop Hobson, President Ernest H. Hahne of Miami University, Mrs. Philip Henderson, wife of the president of Western College, and Mayor Edwin Morgan of Oxford. A vigorous work with college students will be carried on in the new plant.

CLERGY RETREAT IN CHICAGO

SEES REDS LOSING TO CHURCH

★ Bishop Blair Larned, in charge of Episcopal Churches in Europe, addressing church groups throughout the east, likens the cooperation of western governments and of Churches in the struggle against Communism to "a rainbow after the world's worst storm."

The former suffragan bishop of Long Island affirmed his faith in eventual world peace through Christian and governmental unity as exemplified in the World Council of Churches.

Europe today is seeing the Communists pushed back through the world-wide uprising of all Christians, Bishop Larned said, adding that "Christ must rejoice to see the coming together of the Western World."

Bishop Larned reported on Protestant mission work among displaced persons and refugees in Europe. He said "rich dividends" could be expected from the two-million-dollar increase in the Protestant Episcopal budget in 1950, most of which is earmarked for missions. He appealed for support of this increase.

It is the refugees who need attention most, Bishop Larned said, adding that 15,000,000 people, who had fled or been expelled from Communist countries in Eastern Europe, were swarming over Germany and Austria, with 1,500 more joining daily.

The blame for this situation must rest as much with the allied powers as with Communist ideology and practice, the Bishop asserted. He deplored allied concessions under Article 13 of the Pottsdam agreement, which, he said, permits expulsion of all persons of German national origin from European countries now Communist-dominated.

The promotion department stresses that if the station in your locality does not come in clearly, then order from them a transcription or phonograph record immediately—281 Fourth Avenue, New York 10, N. YOUTH MEETING IN MICHIGAN

★ The largest number ever to gather for a youth meeting in Michigan, 750, met at Christ Church, Cranbrook, February 12, with the addresses given entirely by young people. The offering was sufficiently large to provide ten partial scholarships for members to attend the diocesan youth conference in June.

JAPANESE STUDENT SUPPORTED

★ Iwao Iowasaki, a student from the University of Tokyo, arrived in Minneapolis, February 3, to study at the University of Minnesota in the School of Mines. He was brought here through the efforts of the Rev. Daisuke Kitagawa of the Japanese American Community Episcopal Church and Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Norrbom whose son, Lowell, was killed in an automobile accident. Lowell, while studying Oriental language at Harvard, corresponded with Iwao, and his parents have brought Iwao here to study in memory of their son.

As a foreign student of a military occupation country, Iwao could not buy his passage in Japanese money. Canterbury Club at the University of Minnesota has shared in raising money for Iwao's transportation. In addition to individual contributions, students volunteered to do jobs in their spare time, and contribute the money earned to this fund. These jobs included typing, mimeographing, running odd errands, baby sitting, and cleaning. One student spent many hours vacuuming floors, furniture and walls with his vacuum cleaner.

Churches, was the preacher at a missionary mass meeting held February 24 at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine, New York. Before the service he led a conference of the clergy of the diocese.

CHURCHES UNITE FOR SERVICE

★ Members of twenty-five churches in the lower part of New York City had a union service on Ash Wednesday at Grace Church. Other Episcopal churches taking part were St. George's, St. Mark's, the Holy Communion, Calvary, Ascension.

OVER-PAYMENTS FROM OVERSEAS FIELDS

★ Through study of the expectation report, National Council vice-president, Bishop John B. Bentley, has found that every overseas mission field accepted its assigned quota; every overseas field paid its expectation in full; nine overseas fields overpaid their expectation; and payments on the part of overseas fields of the Church amounted to 102½% of their assigned quotas.

Bishop Bentley has written to the overseas bishops, sending congratulations to them, their staffs and their people, "While striving towards a larger measure of self-support, they have had the privilege and joy of sharing in all the Church is doing around the world."

NEW HAMPSHIRE HAD NEW CENTER

★ One year ago last month a family arrived in Plainfield, N. H., seeking a home they could call their own—for a lifetime. Through the best part of a year this father and mother and their three children had traveled more than 25,000 miles in thirty-three states to find their American destination. New Hampshire was not on their itinerary and quite by chance (or was it by Cause?) they came as far as Plainfield. That was the end of their quest. They found their house and named it "Journey's End."

Briefly, that is not only an introduction to the Dexter Stephens family of Plainfield; it is also a preface to the establishment of an adult conference center in this Diocese. This story would be incomplete without a description of the house called "Journey's End." In present appearance as well as in its future nature it resembles Seabury House, the National Conference Center of the Episcopal Church in Greenwich, Connecticut. Many of you will identify it as the residence of the author Winston Churchill. He lived there for eight years and during this time wrote "The Inside of the Cup."

Some thirty acres of pleasant fields and woods surround the house. There are living quarters for twenty people in the house during the colder seasons of the year. In the summer it will be possible to accommodate as many as sixty persons at one time. Even at this early date a Book Store has been established by Mr. and Mrs. Stephens. Those of us who have seen it testify that it is well stocked with all current material published for the use of the Episcopal Church.

Through the generosity of Mr. and Mrs. Stephens the splendid facilities of this estate have been offered for the use of N. H. Diocese as an Educational Conference Center. They will continue here in residence and serve as directors of the Center.

COUNCIL URGES AGREEMENTS

★ The National Council, at its February meeting, issues a call to all Christians to labor and pray for peace, stating that "total war" may endanger mankind to the point of "total destruction." The statement called upon the president and other political leaders "to continue to seek international agreements for the limitation and supervision of weapons and armed forces, and for the peaceful uses of this scientific knowledge and technical skill to advance human welfare."

CONSECRATION IN BRAZIL

★ The Rev. Egmont M. Krischke is to be consecrated at the Church of the Crucified, Bage, Brazil, March 12th, with Bishop Melcher the consecrator and Bishop Bentley and Bishop Pithan the co-consecrators.

BISHOPS PREACH IN HOUSTON

★ Bishops predominate at the mid-day daily services held this Lent at Christ Church Cathedral, Houston, Texas. They are Bishop Hines of Texas; Bishop Block of California; Bishop Carruthers of South Carolina; Bishop Pardue of Pittsburgh; Bishop Quin of Texas. Others to get in the select circle are Dean High Moor of Pittsburgh and the Rev. John S. Higgins of Providence.

FORWARD MOVEMENT EDITOR

★ The Rev. Francis J. Moore took office as editor of the Forward Movement on February 20. He is anxious that people who write to the Forward Movement shall note the change, and make sure that mail is addressed to him instead of to his predecessor, the Rev. Canon Gilbert P. Symons, who has now retired from the post he has filled since 1935.

Moore is rector of the Church of the Advent, Cincinnati. His appointment with the Forward Movement was made by the Presiding Bishop. He has been actively interested in the Forward Movement since its beginning, having assisted Canon Symons in the writing of the first number of Forward Day by Day in 1935, and having written several numbers since. He came to Cincinnati from Toronto, Canada, in 1931 and after five years with the Student Christian Movement, assisting the Rev. Frank Nelson at Christ Church, and having charge of the congregation at Indian Hill from 1933. He became rector of the Church of the Advent in 1938.

BISHOP CLARK IS ILL

★ Bishop Stephen Clark of Utah is in a hospital in San Francisco, suffering from a slight stroke. He and Mrs. Clark had gone there several weeks ago for a short vacation, and the stroke took place following a confirmation service which he had taken for Bishop Block. He is reported to be improving rapidly, and is now sitting up, but will need extended rest before he can resume his work in Utah.

EDITORIALS

Christianity and Communism

ACCORDING to the long-established policy of The Witness, we publish as signed articles a good many statements with which, editorially, we do not agree. Sometimes, when we think the matter is sufficiently important, we print our view of things. So we shall exercise this privilege now, in commenting on the article in this issue by Professor John C. Bennett of Union Theological Seminary, entitled Communism: Ally, Competitor or Both.

We find ourselves in hearty agreement with much that Professor Bennett says. Christians must, first of all, have a clear understanding of Communism, both as an economic system and as a world political force. This is a much-needed challenge, if we may judge from the many irresponsible and hate-filled litanies chanted by representative Christian leaders. Secondly, the ideology of Communism is neither more nor less anti-Christian than the principles of Naturalism and Positivism which are freely taught in many American universities. Thirdly, there is a serious inherent danger in any and all forms of dictatorship. The late Lord Acton's famous dictum: "Absolute power tends to corrupt absolutely" is terribly true. Fourthly, Communism is not primarily military. Its immense spread in the past thirty years has been due to economic appeal and political action. Professor Bennett's illustration of China is pertinent, of which he says that American military support of Chiang Kai-Chek "would destroy the possibility of any constructive American influence on Communist China." All these are wise and timely analyses and warnings, with which we are in complete agreement.

We must, however, part company with Professor Bennett when he declares that it is necessary for Christians to "say 'no' to Communism as an ideological and political force." Surely, this is—as the German epigram has it—"to pour out the baby with the bath." A Christian may well believe, if he thinks that he finds the evidence in history, that Capitalism in its developed modern form is decadent and rotten at the heart and no longer capable of creative action for the benefit of mankind as a whole. And he may believe, on the other hand, that the economic principles of Communism are sound and that it has done and is doing an infinitely valuable work in regenerating the economic and cultural life of a very large proportion of the world's peoples. Our Lord's declared aim of the more abundant life for all men is certainly being implemented in much of Communism's accomplishments.

There is no need for Christians to stand aghast at the words "dialectical materialism," as if they denoted a veritable "sin against the Holy Ghost." Dialectical materialism, as far as it goes, is a true enough conception for the interpretation of history. The rise and fall of civilizations and cultures have had their quite impersonal causes in the economic and geographical facts of their time, as Chad Walsh pointed out in his article on Nationalism last week. They are plainly to be seen, for instance, in such a phenomenon as the decay of Feudalism and the birth and growth of modern Capitalism. If similar material factors are now operating to bring a Communist culture into the life of the planet, it cannot be other than absurd for a Christian to deny it. What the intelligent Christian should do is to point out the supreme fact that back of and working in these material forces of history is Almighty God who, through the Incarnate Son, in the Holy Spirit, has given new life and light to individuals and to groups, like the Hebrew prophets and the Christian saints and their fellowship, and through them has more than once turned the world upside down. So, dialectical materialism is true enough, but it is not the primary truth. And it should not be forgotten that there is another aspect of this primary truth and that is the "Scourge of God"

"QUOTES"

And will ye sit in sackcloth?
And will ye weep and pray?
And will ye bow your ashy heads
That broken-bulrush way?

What sins be these ye flee from?
What wrong do ye repent?
Now think ye if ye cry, Lord, Lord,
That ye have kept His Lent?

Ah, choose to feed the hungry!
Last night ye stole his bread;
Ah, choose to set the bondman free,
His price is on your head.

Ah, choose to lift the burden
Your brother still must bear,
Undo the cords, lift off the load
'Tis yours, ye laid it there.

principle. As the Hebrew prophets so eloquently pointed out, God again and again uses relentlessly men and peoples who scorn and deny him to bring some other portions of the world more nearly into conformity with his will. Those Christian folk who can see in Communism nothing but unmitigated evil might well consider carefully this aspect of God's dealing with his world. Bishop Hall of Hong Kong, in his brilliant article in this issue, is of course saying just that.

We Share the Guilt

WE especially regret that Professor Bennett in his article neglects entirely to mention what has been and is one of the most potent causes of Communist dictatorship, namely, the thirty years' militant opposition to and ostracism of Soviet Russia, beginning with military intervention when she was weak and beset by desperate problems not of her own making, but stemming from corrupt Czarism and the First World War. Had the nominally Christian, but actually greedy and money-worshipping western policy-makers, acted with some measure of international decency when the infant Soviets were struggling to build a new culture on the ruins of the old, the "dictatorship of the proletariat" might well have developed into quite another form than the totalitarian regime we know. The iron curtain of today, with iron dictatorship behind it, is to a very great extent a defense mechanism against the bitter hatred of western capitalism. But apparently American economic and political leaders are incapable of learning from past mistakes and sins. Our foreign-policy today is nothing more than a greatly intensified repetition of the old cordon sanitaire failure. "Containment" of Communism, with the preposterous armaments race, as a policy is both vicious and futile. Vicious, because it has meant supporting corrupt and reactionary regimes all around the globe; futile, because it has alienated the common people everywhere and so played into the hands of militant Communism. China, of course, is the large-scale proof of it and the same policy in Europe will bring inevitably a similar result. The Truman Doctrine is bankrupt and to talk of one's Christian duty to support the Marshall Plan which is its economic implement is today simply absurd. The ablest minds among conservatives today realize the fiasco. The wealthy Will Clayton, former Assistant Secretary of State, told the House foreign affairs committee only last month that "Stalin is winning the cold war" and if this continues, the year 1955 "will probably find the western hemisphere surrounded by Communism." Columnist Walter Lippmann, high-priest of American conservatism, has insisted from the first that the "containment" policy makes no sense and he now summons the policy-makers to count their losses and make a new start.

Our First Duty

IT is our belief that a Christian's first political duty today is to oppose with all his might the present armaments race, which has never in all history led to anything but war, and to advocate, in the name of religion and common-sense, the immediate recognition of the Chinese Peoples Republic and the opening of trade here and with every country in eastern Europe; for it will be through trade, rather than through armaments and fear of alien ideas, that a beginning of understanding will come. The notable plan for reconciliation and peace put forth by the American Quakers deserves the active and hearty support of every Christian citizen. And there is at least an encouraging ray of light on the political horizon, with the announcement of Senator Brien MacMahon's proposal calling for the substitution of global relief administered by the United Nations for the Marshall Plan. One of the strongest features of this proposal is that it insists on a prior agreement for universal atomic disarmament.

In Professor Bennett's article, we feel that the underlying assumption that Christianity and Capitalism, reformed or otherwise, somehow belong together is a false and dangerous position. Basic Christian doctrine is not reformist, but essentially revolutionary. The Crucifixion was the first proof of this character and through the ages since then it has been true that where Christianity was at its creative best it was the enemy of the status quo. Innocent, Hildebrand, Stephen Langton, Francis of Assizi, Wesley, Wilberforce were, all of them in their day, Christian revolutionaries whose leadership and influence served to transform the political, as well as the religious, life and institutions of the eras in which they lived. They were all in the true revolutionary line of our Lord and the apostolic early Church. And we Christians of today may, if we have the vision and the courage to do so, follow in their train and play our part in the creating of new institutions for the culture of the one world which is travailing to be born.

Current Movements and Christianity

COMMUNISM: Ally, Competitor or Both?

By JOHN C. BENNETT
Professor at Union Seminary

THE first task of Christians in relation to Communism is to understand it, and above all, to understand why so many millions of people in the world regard it as their chief hope. We make a fateful mistake when we dismiss Communism with a swear word or a slogan and then assume that all that remains to be done is to have sufficient military force to stop the Russians and the Communists from extending their power. This way of dealing with Communism, which has become almost conventional in America, obscures the necessity of discovering a constructive alternative to Communism; it cuts us off from whole peoples, including now the people of China, which accept Communism because it is the only movement that seems radical enough to give them a new start; it prevents us as Christians from taking seriously the fact that the spread of Communism is a sign of the failure of Christians to be true to the revolutionary demands of their own faith.

Christians must say "no" to Communism as an ideological and political force but they must not allow that "no" to cancel a "yes" to the strivings of people for deliverance from poverty and racial discrimination which make them open to the appeal of Communism. It is tragic that, while for a time it brings them that deliverance, Communism usually fastens upon them a kind of oppression that is more efficient, more destructive of cultural and spiritual freedom and more difficult to shake off, than any that they have ever known.

Why should this come about? Why should a movement that was born of moral indignation against what mid-nineteenth century Capitalism was doing to people, that has ever since offered men the promise of an ideal society that will be free from all exploitation and conflict, that today, especially in Asia, commands the complete dedication of a great many of the most intelligent and generous youth—why should such a movement become an instrument of oppression?

Part of the answer may be seen in the fact that Communism gained its power first in a nation that was accustomed to despotism. Moreover, in the expansion of Communism in the world, it is always difficult to distinguish between the interests of the Soviet Union as a great power and the purposes of Communism as a world movement. In its own defense the Soviet Union, where it can do so, insists on conformity to doctrine and policy conceived in Moscow in other Communist controlled countries.

But there is a much deeper cause of this tragic contradiction in Communism. Communism is an absolute system of thought and life which is held together by the faith that its program will bring complete redemption to society. Its philosophy of dialectical materialism, which as an academic philosophy is no more in conflict with Christianity than forms of naturalism and positivism that flourish in American universities, makes it natural to subordinate the whole life of the person to the demands of the party, or of a Communist society. Its atheism prevents Communism from allowing for any transcendent divine judgment upon itself and it also fails to satisfy the religious needs of men. As a result Communism comes to occupy the place in the lives of its supporters that religion should occupy and it becomes in itself a form of idolatry in the sense that the Communist program is given the absolute position in a man's life which belongs only to God.

Freedom is Frail

IT is not strange that people who are controlled by this Communist view of life and this Communist faith and purpose come to believe that all the ruthlessness and terror of the revolutionary period, of the dictatorship of the proletariat, are a small price to pay for the new order that will follow, an order that is expected to end most of the evils from which men suffer. The most serious miscalculation that Commuists make, I believe in good faith, is their assumption that the dictatorship which they set up as a temporary expedient will wither away and that freedom will develop naturally as soon as Capitalism is completely overcome. They do not understand how frail a plant freedom is, how it can grow only in soils that are carefully prepared for it; and there seems to be among them no recognition of the sad logic of dictatorship according to which fear of actual and, then, of possible opponents leads to a tightening of controls over society until the preservation of the dictatorship becomes the chief objective of those in power. Thus what begins as a great crusade for justice may become a meaningless reign of terror designed to preserve a new status quo.

I do not say that when Communism spreads to such a nation as China, it must inevitably follow this course to the end. There may be antidotes in Chinese culture that will make possible a new kind of Communism in the future. But those who now are impressed by the many favorable accounts of what is happening in China under Communist "liberation" should at least remember what has happened elsewhere when Communist power has become firmly established.

Several Proposals

WHAT should Christians do in response to Communism? The following are suggestions toward an answer to that question.

One, Christians in America should support policies that will help to prevent the extension of Russian and Communist power wherever there is a viable alternative. This means support of the Marshall Plan and, though this is more controversial, I believe that it means support of the Atlantic Pact and of sufficient military preparations to make it clear to Russia that use of military force to extend the area of her power would be too costly. Military measures alone would be futile because Communism is not primarily military in its power and so, where there is no viable alternative, as in China in 1950, military support of a discredited anti-Communist regime in Formosa would not stop Communism, but it would destroy the possibility of any constructive American influence on Communist China.

Two, Christians in Communist controlled countries cannot be expected to resist Communism on the political level. They may, indeed, be right in believing in some situations that Communism represents the least evil political alternative open to them. They should still resist Communism as an ideology and they should avoid following what may be the line of least resistance—the forming of a combination of Christian and Communist teaching that distorts both. But on the basis of Christian faith they should show as great concern for social justice as the Communists do at their best. Their role will be a very difficult one and American Christians should be slow to criticize them when they seem to go too far in cooperation with the Communists.

Three, Christians in all countries should seek to preserve contact with the people to whom Communism makes a strong appeal. It should be remembered that most of the people who support Communism do so, not because they are convinced Marxists, but because of long standing privations and grievances from which Communism offers them deliverance. To ostracize these people because they seem too friendly to Communism is foolish policy as well as an offense against charity. The mission boards of many of our American denominations in their insistence in continuing missionary work in China have seen this clearly and they deserve generous support.

In this country there is a widespread tendency to insist that any deviations from "the American way of life" are marks of perversity. There are many Americans who are in this respect as narrow as the Communists. Within the Church it should be possible to expect imaginative understanding of the people who live under conditions that are in the sharpest contrast to American prosperity. It is not strange that nations in which the majority live near the edge of starvation, in which the advantages of middle-class civilization are known only to a few, in which there has been very little experience of civil liberties, have a different view of what is socially important than we have in America. We should maintain faith in everything that is good in our own heritage without losing the capacity to see the world from the point of view of people whose experience has been so different.

Four, Christians in all countries should realize that the only answer to Communism is to be found in constructive policies that deal rigorously with the same problems that Communists promise to solve. Negative and repressive methods of dealing with Communism are self-defeating. In this country it is far more important to prevent a major economic depression than it is to track down Communist teachers in the schools. I have indicated that there is a military factor in the resistance to the extension of Russian power but this is only of secondary importance. Military preparations may give western Europe security that will enable it to develop a healthy social life which will make it immune to Communism but it is the healthy social life and not the military force that creates the immunity.

Need of Evangelism

FIVE, the Christian responsibility on the deepest level is the task of evangelism. It will have to be the kind of evangelism that conveys the meaning of the Christian gospel for society as well as for the depths of personality. It must be controlled, not by the desire to find spiritual support for political resistance to Communism, but by loyalty to the claim of the gospel upon all men.

We shall find that there are many people, especially among students and intellectuals in Asia, who have in all of their lives never encountered a view of life that has made as much sense to them as Communism. A missionary in China has recently written about the younger intellectuals in that country that, among them, Communism has practically no competitor, that they know "no other integrated philosophy of life and society in the field around which a man can integrate his thoughts." They and countless others have never had a good chance to learn that Christianity, instead of being an outmoded superstition that is useful chiefly to prop up an old social order in the west, is an ever new gospel which is God's truth for them. They may not be open to this truth until moments of disillusionment come, but these are sure to come. Communism's weakest point is its failure to understand the perennial human problems that emerge in every social system and it has not prepared its adherents for the new forms of sin and frustration and tragedy that follow the revolution. In Christ there will be both judgment and new life for men who find themselves caught in the evil which Communism does not expect and for which it knows no redemption.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. Discuss the meaning of Communism both in theory and practice.
2. Prof. John Macmurray of England once said that Christians are disposed to discuss Christianity in theory with Communism in practice, whereas we should compare like with like: i.e.; in practice or in theory. Have the group make comparisons along the lines he suggests.
3. What is the basis of the strength of Communism?
4. What are some of the evils it proposes to end?
5. Do you think there is a difference between Soviet Communism and Chinese Communism?
6. What are the purposes of the Marshall Plan and the Atlantic Pact? Discuss their merits, pro and con.
7. What does the author consider the most serious miscalculation of Communists?
8. Discuss each of the author's recommendations for Christian action.
9. Is there evidence that Christianity is being used "to prop up an old order in the west"?

The Meaning of the Creed

The Third of a Series for Lent

By JOHN E. HINES
The Bishop Coadjutor of Texas

"AND IN JESUS CHRIST, OUR LORD"

IF men have lost their capacity to wonder, then they have lost their capacity to understand and appreciate the creed of Christendom! For the creeds of Christendom, even as is the gospel itself, are the "snare" of logicians and rationalists. They do not scorn reason, but they escape that which is only reason. They do not disparage logic, but they will never yield to that which is only logic. For faith is always beyond reason and beyond logic.

When we say, "I believe in Jesus Christ, His only Son, Our Lord," we step into the great center of the creed. Perhaps it might he said that the Christian creeds ought to begin with this article rather than with the article, "I believe in God," for our understanding of this second article of the creed determines our understanding of the first article. Perhaps, as Christians, the sequence of statements ought to be rearranged. For example, St. Paul, in his Second Corinthians 13, gives forth with a more historic sequence, when he says, "The grace of our Lord, Jesus Christ, the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Spirit." For that is nearer the natural progression of a Christian's faith.

This second article begins by naming, as the object of belief, a man, Jesus, and, at once, identifies this man by naming him Christ, which means the "prophet," "priest," and "king" of the last days, expected by the people of Israel. Then, in pointed fashion, further classifies this man, this "Christ," by placing him in such proximity to God that there is nothing other than unity, itself, that can exist between them—"His Only Son, Our Lord." Surely, this is the area for man's wonder. This is full of mystery and of significance. For, immediately, the questions fight for recognition: "What does this Jesus signify" . . . as the Messiah of Israel? As the only begotten of the Father? As Lord?

It is worth noting, I think, to say that within my life-time, and certainly within the life-time of many of you, the Church has had to grapple with at least two radically differing interpretations of the nature of Jesus Christ. These two, the clergy particularly will recall, are the Jesus of history, and, for want of better terminology, the Jesus of higher criticism. Frankly, they are not one and the same. They have much in common, but they also differ widely, and radically. Some believe that this is but a period of transition in theological development, and that there will be a definite fusion of these two Jesuses.

I hope not to confuse you, but the first Jesus I met was the Jesus of history. For, it was my lot, together with many others, to have our seminary training at the very height of so-called religious liberalism. This liberalism did not have anything to do with "social issues," whether you were a radical or a conservative in such views. It had to do more with the ancient battle between the "Fundamentalists" and the "Modernists," between an interpretation of the scriptures, with modern science excommunicated, and an interpretation with modern science being the arbiter. It was a re-discovery of the "human Jesus," "Jesus, the man," and the era was marked by dozens of biographies of the man, Jesus. This was the Jesus, who worked miracles, that, in the final analysis, were not miracles. They were just oriental imagery. The "liberal" theologians were falling all over themselves trying to make Jesus of Nazareth "theologically acceptable" to the scientists, who seemed to be about to usher in the new kingdom. When Jesus did anything extraordinary, such as restoring the demonic to sanity, or being transfigured, or stilling the waves, these things had to be reduced to the ordinary, so that the scientific process could be propitiated, and faith would not suffer.

Step by step, these men cut God down to their own size, and then to the dimensions of their own intellect, doing precisely that about which St. Paul warned men nineteen centuries ago, "The changing of the uncorruptible God into the image of corruptible man." For, certainly, this treatment of the Jesus of history did not do justice to the spiritual magnitude of the Christ.

Form Criticism

THE factor which introduced a reaction against the kind of Christology, about which I have just been talking, was the introduction of "form criticism" in relation to the study of the gospels. This was not just a new method of criticism, meaning examination, of the gospels. This was an entirely new approach to the whole historical problem of the gospels. D. M. Baillie describes "form criticism" as "a movement which studies the gospels historically not by analyzing them into their various source-documents, in the way with which we have become so familiar, but by distinguishing the various 'forms', the various types of anecdotes, parables, wonder-stories, homiletical reminiscences, that were used in the preaching of the early Church about Jesus, and grew into the gospel tradition, in order to assess the age and significance of the individual fragments that make up our gospels."

In this process, form criticism often seems to throw more light upon such questions as "What was the early Christian preaching and message like?," than on the question, "What did Jesus actually say and do and mean?"

And, if the results lend little to our knowledge of the life of our Lord, the exponents of this process reply that "the gospels neither can nor should be used by theologians in an endeavor to get behind the 'apostolic witness', the primitive Christian 'message', to the historical Jesus."

It was against this critical background that a new treatment of Jesus was born. It took its rise on the continent of Europe, but its effect has now become world-wide. That does not mean that you will hear about it from your pulpits next Sunday, or in the Sundays after, but it does mean that your clergyman cannot pursue his studies of the gospels, without running into this new Christology. For this new estimate of Jesus has arisen from a new treatment of the gospels, a treatment which believes that the gospels were not written for either biographical or historical purposes, but rather in the interest of Christian faith.

The prime apologists for this new understanding of Jesus, have been Karl Barth and Emile Brunner, although the two would not see eye to eye by a good bit. Karl Barth holds that the New Testament has little or no interest in the personality of Jesus, nor in any personality, for that matter, for the very term, "personality," indicates an attitude and out-look alien to Christianity. To approach an understanding of Jesus Christ through such an avenue only leads (in Barth's mind) to a "Jesus cult," which is a kind of profound "hero-worship," but is also a substitute for the Christian faith. To Barth, there is nothing remarkable to be found in the life, character, and teachings of Jesus. The human life of Jesus is not a revelation of God as much as it is a concealment of God. As a matter of fact, says this scholar, "the disciples did not know who Jesus was, in the days of his earthly ministry!" It was only in the light of his death, and resurrection, and the experience of the great forty days, that it began to dawn upon them that this man was the Lord of life, the Messiah of God, the author of the new age! So that for him, for Barth, the gospels were written, not as a play-by-play description of what Jesus did and said while here on this earth so that men would be convinced that he was Saviour and Lord, they were written as an "after thought." They were written with the eye of faith, an eye which could only have been developed after the testimonial of the resurrection.

I am calling these two factors in theological thinking to your minds, not because I believe you are a group of theologians and certainly not with the express intention of adding to your confusion, or to my own, but rather to emphasize the tremendous importance of this second article of the creed. Whatever the disagreements among theologians, we cannot do without a doctrine of Jesus Christ. As a matter of fact, if we have no Christology, we cannot have a sound theology, nor can we have a sound understanding of the nature or meaning of history. So that whatever other allegiance you may profess in the recitation of the creed, the content of your belief in Jesus Christ is decisive.

God is Like Jesus

WHAT, then, do the Christian creeds request of believers when they say: "I believe in Jesus Christ, His Only Son, Our Lord." Why, they request—yea, demand—that Christians believe in a God who is at least like Jesus Christ. He may be more and, if the Incarnation is to mean anything, he is more—is this God. But he is at least to be measured by Jesus Christ.

I am not sure that men and women are willing to grapple with the proposition of what they mean by the word "God." After all, thinking about God is not very easy for the limited human mind. It is not easy for theologians, by their own admission. It certainly is no easier for us, who are laymen in theology; yet, it is also true, it seems to me, that even though we profess to be Christians, and attempt to understand the mystery of God "tabernacling with men," we start with misconceptions picked up we know not where.

When we say "God," as we have said in the first article of the creed, do we mean the "maker of all things"? Yes, we have admitted to that. But, as Dr. Baillie points out, "If we can say no more than that about God, that he is maker, we could not even say that in its truest sense. For all that we would get would be a kind of first cause, or great artificer, neither of which is what is really meant by the word God. It is true that the Christian faith does designate God as the creator of all things, but the arguments for such a God, from nature, do not tell us what Christianity means by God."

When we say "God," we do not even simply mean the source and guardian of the moral law, however important that may be. For any religion which stems from a conception of God, merely as the source of moral order, would be bound to end up with disciples whose highest allegiance, and whose bounded duty, would be summed up in morality. I am afraid that it is precisely this kind of God that rules the thinking of many, many people today. Their conclusion is that, "It doesn't matter what you believe, as long as you live a good life," but their equation of the "good life" is not with Christian adoration, and Christian penitence, and Christian self-surrender, as much as it is with the "do-good-ism" of ethical acts. Their creed is summed up in an expression by one of my financially well-off acquaintances, who frankly said, "My religion is to do good for other people," and a high enough conception on the purely ethical level, but without appreciation of the disturbing fact that no one of us, without the self-revelation of God which comes through worship and prophecy and sacrament, has either the right or the capacity to set up an unassailable standard of "what is good." Such a man does not remember that Christianity has exposed the paradox of morality, revealing that the attempt to be moral often defeats itself, resulting in the Phariseeism, which, God, because it is not a real goodness, must always reject.

No, Christians mean more, when they say "God" than is indicated by creation and moral order. Christians actually mean more than the limits of the creed will allow words to say. Once again, it is in the form of paradox, whereby seeming irreconciliables are held in uneasy harmony.

It means (to quote Dr. Baillie again), "One who, at the same time, makes absolute demands upon us, and offers to give us, freely, all that he demands."

It means the one who demands of us unlimited obedience, and then supplies that obedience himself. It means the one who calls on us to work out our own salvation on the ground that it is he, himself, who works both the willing and the working in our hearts and lives.

It is not that God is the God who bestows his favor and grace upon those who render obedience to his commands, for, under those circumstances, it is doubtful whether God could ever confer his grace so rebellious, so disobedient, is man, but the Christian, even when he has given his freest obedience as he sees it, knows that somehow it was all of God, and he says: "It was not I, but the grace of God that was with me."

This is the Creator-God, who has made us to be free personalities, but it is the experience of Christians to understand that we are both most free and most personal when God is in possession of us. For, it is God's very nature to give himself in that way: to dwell in us, in such a way, that we, by our own will choosing to do God's will, are still led to confess that it is not ourselves, but God.

Destiny of the Chinese Church

By RONALD O. HALL
The Bishop of Hong Kong

"THE Kingdom of heaven is like a grain of mustard seed. It is like a grain of mustard seed which a man took and sowed in his field. The mustard seed is the least of all seeds. But when it is grown it becometh a tree, so that the birds of the air come and lodge in the branches of it." Jesus spoke these words to a very small company of men and women in Galilee. Jesus is not dead; he is risen. He is speaking these words again to us tonight. We also are a small company. In China only one man in two hundred is a Christian. We are also a small company but we have an advantage over those who first heard him speak. We know that the seed of the kingdom which Jesus sowed in Galilee has become a great tree. It has spread all over the world. This knowledge strengthens our faith today in China.

He also said "I will utter things which have been kept secret from the foundation of the world." (St. Matt. 13, v. 35). The kingdom of Christ fulfilled all the hidden working of God since the foundation of the world. Jesus is called the "Christ" because he is the fulfilment of all God's preparation of the Jews. But God is the God of the whole earth. He had therefore also prepared the Roman people, who had conquered the Jews and were occupying their country, for the coming of his kingdom. When St. Paul traveled preaching the gospel he traveled in the Roman Empire. And many other Christians also spread over the Roman Empire preaching the gospel. In the lands where there was Roman rule the mustard seed grew into a great tree. In the lands where there was no Roman rule it became a sickly plant. God then used the law and order of the Roman Empire to enable the seed to grow into a great tree. The Roman Empire ruled with much cruelty. We know that they crucified bandits. But they built great roads and also made the highways of the sea safe from pirates. In the Roman Empire there was an orderly government. This orderly government made it possible for the seed to grow into a great tree.

Communist rule has a similar place in God's plan. God is the God of all the nations of the world. He prepared the Jews and the Romans for the coming of his kingdom. He has also prepared China for the coming of his kingdom. As he said to the Jews that he would "utter secret things hidden from the foundation of the world" so today he is saying he will make plain secret things about China's past. We will make plain to us that for 6,000 years he has been preparing China for this hour. And why do I say for this hour? Because at this hour the Chinese Church is facing a new world power very like the Roman Empire was 2,000 years ago.

Good and Evil

AS God has prepared the Roman Empire for the coming of his kingdom, so I believe he has prepared the Communist Empire for the coming of that kingdom. As under the protection of Roman law the mustard seed grew to be a great tree, so under Communist rule I believe the seed will grow into a great tree. I have said that the Communist Empire is like the Roman Empire. It is like it in being a mixture of good and evil. Jesus said the kingdom of heaven was like a field of good seed in which an enemy had sown weeds among the rice. But when they asked "Must we not pull up the weeds?" He said "No! let both grow together." Many Christians today are spending too much time deploring the weeds in Communism. They are preparing themselves to go and pull them up. Jesus says to us "Let both grow together, until the harvest." Jesus also told a story of a man who offered to get the dust out of his neighbor's eye. Then his neighbor and all the onlookers laughed because the man had a roof-beam in his own eye. This beam was so long he couldn't get near his neighbor's eye to help him. We Chinese Christians must see to the beam in our own eye first.

One of the good things in Rome was the spirit of obedience to law. You remember the Roman centurian asked Jesus to heal his son. He said to Jesus, "As a Roman soldier I know what obedience is. If you command the evil spirit to leave my boy, I know it will." Jesus answered "I have not seen so great faith, no, not in Israel."

In Peking Christians are saying that today about the Communists.

But there were two evil things in the Roman Empire, one was the possession of slaves and the other was the permission given to individuals to accumulate as much property and money as they could, as long as they did not break the law. The Christian Church has been able to abolish slavery but it has not been strong enough to abolish the evil of great accumulations of private property. So perhaps God has raised up Communism to destroy the evil of accumulated private property just as he raised up the Roman Empire to destroy the evil of lawlessness and banditry in Europe. The prophet Isaiah says "Woe unto them that join house to house and add field to field." You will find the book of Deuteronomy and the other prophets also condemn the accumulation of private property. The accumulation of private property has always increased poverty. It was the cause of the Taiping rebellion. It has been the cause of the downfall of the Kuomintang.

God's Preparation

WHEN Jesus sowed the mustard seed first in Galilee, it was able to grow into a strong tree because God had prepared the Roman Empire to receive this seed. I believe the tree will grow more strongly in the Communist Empire even than it did in the Roman Empire. I believe it will take time to grow. You know that all trees that are long lived are slow growing. So I believe the tree of the kingdom will not grow any faster in the Communist Empire: but I believe it will grow bigger and stronger. I believe God has prepared China to convert the Communist Empire as he had prepared the Jews to convert the Roman Empire. In my chapel above the altar are the four characters "Dao Shing Yuk San" (The Word was made flesh). They are printed in triumphant gold on red ground. Why such triumphant gladness? It means that the Dao which has always been the creative heart of Chinese life and culture, reveals himself in Jesus Christ. This revelation unfolds the purpose of God for China which has been kept secret since the foundation of the world. God had prepared the Jews for their place in his kingdom by teaching and suffering. The teaching of the prophets and the suffering of the nation had taught them there is only one God and he is God of all the earth. Chinese Christians have learned that from the Jews. The Old Testament is for us as well as for them. But God is the God and Father of all nations. Jesus Christ is the word of God "by whom all things are made." Chinese civilization has been made by the word of God, whose heart and purpose is revealed to us in the face of Jesus Christ. We are in Christ's presence. That means not only in presence of Jesus the carpenter of Nazareth who died on the cross and rose again on Easter Day. We are also in the presence of the eternal word of God who down the centuries has made and sustained all that is good and great and true in Chinese civilization. God has been preparing China to sow the seed in the Empire of Communism, just as he had prepared the Jews for that first sowing in the Empire of Rome. A great destiny and a great responsibility awaits us.

Understand Personality

CHINA'S understanding of personality is not individualistic. God has prepared China for this hour in more ways than I have time to tell. You have had great teachers and great sufferings. I will mention one of the lessons of this experience of great teachings and great suffering. It is the lesson that a man is only a man when he is in relation to another man. The Confucian system has made this into a fixed framework: ruler and ruled, father and son, husband and wife, elder brother and younger brother, friend and friend. My first great Christian friend was a Chinese. He brought me to China. His name was Koo Tz Yan (Dr. T. Z. Koo). The 'Yan' character expressed all that I mean. You know it is made up of the character for 'man' and the numeral '2!*

We do not so think of man in Europe. Perhaps it is because we do not so think of man that the world is torn between the individualism of the west and the new Communism of Russia, and of those now joined with her in the new Communist Empire. I have read many times in English writings that China's "rugged individualism" will finally modify Communism. I regard that as a superficial statement. You and I know that God has given China an understanding of personality which is not individualistic. Much of the moral weakness of government in China has been due to this virtue in China. Because in Chinese thought a man is always related to another man, Chinese officials have often put their family before the state. That is the source of official corruption.

*Note for western readers. Tz-yan equals "Son of Love"; 'Yan' in the Confucian system has a similar place to 'love' in the New Testament; but it has only horizontal, no vertical reference.

But the great Jewish understanding of God's unity and God's holiness was also the cause of the Jewish weakness. They were proud and exclusive. Jesus is quite merciless in denouncing the Pharisees just because they were corrupting the sacred understanding of God given to them in trust for others.

To the Chinese has been given to understand the true nature of man. You can put it like this. To the Jews was given to understand the true nature of God. But it needed Jesus to complete this understanding. To the Chinese has been given to understand the true nature of man. But this also needs Jesus to fulfill it. Chinese Churches have then a great responsibility to teach the world the true nature of man. It may be that only through the growth of the Christian Church in China can the division between western nations and the Communist Empire be resolved.

Words Not Enough

THIS then is a great hour of destiny for us. Jesus speaks to us as he spoke to his first hearers in Galilee. They were a small company. We are a small company. But Jesus says "Be not afraid—the mustard seed will grow into a great tree."

We have one advantage over his first hearers. We know that the seed did grow in Europe. Our faith is strengthened by this knowledge. We have one advantage, but we also have one disadvantage. The first Christians who spread over the Roman Empire preaching the kingdom of God had no New Testament. We have the New Testament. You are puzzled. Surely to have the New Testament is an advantage and not a disadvantage? No, it is a disadvantage. I will tell you why. With the New Testament in our hands people think we come with a new teaching. They think we bring wise words spoken a long time ago—by a great man who is dead. Christians must not preach words. They must preach a Person. It was not the New Testament that converted the Roman Empire. It was the lives of the Christians. The lives of the Christians were able to convert the Roman Empire, because they lived in the faith that Christ was risen. They knew their lives "were hid with Christ in God." They could "do every thing through Christ who strengthened them." They knew that words are not powerful enough to destroy evil. The great act of God, the death of Christ upon the cross and his rising again—that great act of God for our salvation—was their message and their life. This redemption of Christ is more than words. It is like the fire of coals burning before the altar of God in heaven. We stand here before the throne of God as Isaiah stood in the temple. He cried out "Woe is me for I am undone. I am a man of unclean lips and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips." Let us be ready for the angel to come with the coal of fire, and burn our lips. It will be pain and anguish, for it will reveal to us the misery of our sinfulness. But it will be healing pain. God is saying "Whom shall we send and who will go for us?" Dear, dear friends, we must all be ready to answer "Here am I; send me."

The Divine Service

THE Divine Service (Morning and Evening Prayer) has retained its hold upon the affections of the people, as it has done in no other part of the Catholic Church. Indeed, it is often said that Mattins and Evensong are too popular, because so many people come to them on Sunday instead of to the Holy Communion. We must not put Mattins into a corner because of this, but must do what we can to make the Holy Communion better understood and loved by eschewing both defect and excess of ceremonial. In the Middle Ages there was hardly any communion, since people only communicated once a year, but many kept the Lord's Day holy by attending 'Mattins, Mass, and Evensong'.

It is rather misleading to speak of 'the Lord's own Service', or 'the Lord's Service', as if the phrase excluded Mattins or Evensong; for the worship in which our Lord took part and at which he preached was the Divine Service of the Synagogue, an order of psalms, lessons and prayers which was the pattern upon which the Divine Service of the Christian Church was formed.

Our two services contribute an invaluable part of the Christian life, a great safeguard against distorted ideas and weak-minded devotions, a great instrument of sobriety, peace, intelligence, and depth in religion. The Divine Service is a service of quiet and thoughtful worship, of meditation, of learning, remembering, and reflection. There is much rest in it, much time to ponder, and pray, and to relax in God from the strain of mundane life, spreading our souls out in the sunshine of heaven, strengthening our inner life by the fellowship of the Common Prayer, and lifting up tranquil hearts in piety, thankfulness, and resolution to the God of our fathers.

Read Ahead." Chapter 10 of the book, sub-titled "The Kingdom of God," is particularly objectionable, the statement said, as "it contains untruths and misrepresentations about Protestantism, a field of interest in which the author, not a Protestant, is evidently unacquainted."

"The unfortunate fact," the statement continued, "is that Mr. Flynn's information was derived largely from the writings of Carl McIntire.

"Carl McIntire was formerly a Presbyterian USA minister, but for several reasons was defrocked in 1936. Since that time, he has carried on a relentless and violent attack upon the Federal Council and the World Council of Churches."

The Erie council directors said Flynn's attacks reflect upon the practices and leadership of the 27 denominations which comprise the Federal Council, and their 27,000,000 members.

COLLEGE WOMEN TO MEET

★ A conference for college women on vocational opportunities in the Episcopal Church will be held at Lenox School, Lenox, Mass., March 17-19. Students will attend from the various colleges in New England.

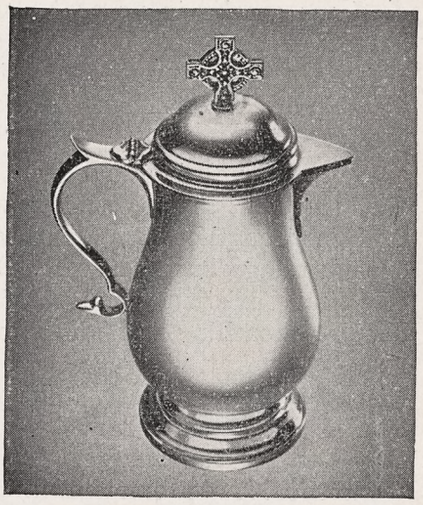
GIVE VIEWS ON FILM STARS

★ Clergymen in Hollywood generally agree that publicity given to "unfortunate incidents" involving actors and actresses unfairly blacken the reputation of the whole movie industry. One of these to comment was the Rev. J. Herbert Smith, rector of All Saints, Beverly Hills who said that "it makes no more sense to judge the entire film colony by the failures and indiscretions of one person than it does to judge a race or a nation by the inadequacies and deficiencies of an individual member of that race or nation. Yet that is what many are doing today to the moving picture industry, because one star made the front pages of the world's press with the story of her frustrated love life."

WASHINGTON CATHEDRAL DEALS WITH BOMB

★ The theme of the Ash Wednesday services at Washington Cathedral was one of the nation's moral responsibility in relation to the hydrogen bomb. Speakers at the services were Bishop Dun, Senator Lodge of Mass., Newsman Marquis Childs, Senator Humphrey of Minn., and the Rev. C. W. Cranford, Baptist pastor.

Bishop Dun's address on "God, Man and the H-bomb" will be in The Witness for next week.



WOMEN ARE BARRED FROM KITCHEN

★ There is discrimination at Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, presided over by the Melishes, father and son. At least when the turkey dinner was held there last week by the newly organized men's club, women were not allowed to step inside the kitchen. Some of the wives and sweethearts of the men stated that they would pay a premium for their meal if they could stand in the kitchen and watch the men prepare the meal. The offer was rejected.

MARRIAGE COMMISSION CONVENES

★ The commission on holy matrimony, authorized "to report to the next General Convention their recommendations as to amendments of canons on Holy Matrimony," held its initial meeting in February at General Seminary. Bishop Washburn of Newark was made chairman; Editor Francis J. Moore of the Forward Movement, vice-chairman; the Rev. Gregory Mabry of Brooklyn, secretary-treasurer.

OVERSEAS NEWS

SCOTT WARNS OF VIOLENCE

South Africa's present danger is not Communism but race hatred and violenge, said the Rev. Michael Scott, Johannesburg Anglican clergyman, at a press conference in New York. Scott, who recently went before the UN trusteeship committee to condemn racial discrimination in Africa, was on The Witness 1949 honor roll. The clergyman pointed out that one reaction to the government's exploitation of the natives was the election of the first Communist's representative—a native—to the South African parliament. He minimized the threat of Communism, however, pointing out that it would be more likely to thrive in a country where there was greater industrialization and more highly developed political forms.

"Our danger," he said, "is that of degenerating into racial hatred and primitive forms of terrorism."

He cited the reversion to paganism and ritual murder in parts of Basutoland, and riots by African students which had destroyed six mission schools in the last two years. Mr. Scott ascribed the riots to "despair and frustration" on the part of students because they were educated and then not allowed to use the skills they had learned.

As regards Church action on South Africa's race problem, Mr. Scott pointed out that the National Christian Council had protected the government's Apartheid (segregation) policy as un-Christian. The Dutch Reformed Church has officially recognized the segregation policy, he said, but differences are beginning to appear among its congregations, not all of which approve of Apartheid.

Meanwhile word has arrived from South Africa indicating that Mr. Scott has been punished by his Church for his position. Officials of the Church in Johannesburg have stated that he no longer has any connection with the Church of England's Johannesburg diocese. "Should he return to the Transvaal," the officials declared, "it would be open to him to apply for a fresh license, and if there were a suitable vacancy he might be appointed to it."

WORLD GROUP FORMED BY R. C. PRESS

A permanent organization to coordinate the work of R. C. newspapers throughout the world was organized in Rome last week. More than 300 delegates from 20 countries attending the conference.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Addressed to Christians: Isolationism vs. World Community. By Floyd H. Ross. Harper. $2.00.

A sharp indictment of historic ecclesiastical Christianity, from St. Paul to the Barthians, for its spirit of exclusiveness, setting up barriers of creed and code against people of other faiths. An unashamed liberal "seeker" and a teacher of the history of "world religious," Dr. Ross rejects every claim to givenness, uniqueness, and chosenness in respect to the Christian revelation. He is as scornful of Protestant confessionalism as of medieval scholasticism. The only one of the Reformers of whom he finds anything good to say is Zwingli; and his favorite Christian seems to be Meister Eckhart. Now it is a simple matter to draw upon the seamy side of Church history to implement the charge of intolerance. But Ross' brushing aside of the claims of Christianity seems quixotic and shallow indeed. Certainly, such nebulosity will produce no martyrs!

—P. V. NORWOOD

The Lambeth Conferences (1867-1948). Macmillan. $3.50.

This is a most useful, and in fact, indispensable volume for anyone interested in the Lambeth Conferences, since it contains the agenda and reports of the first five Conferences (pages 1-333), and then the full reports, resolutions, and encyclical letter of the 1948 Conference (pp. 1-120).

Christianity after Freud. By B. G. Sanders. Macmillan. $1.75.

This book is addressed to those who may have been influenced by Freud and his disciples and who have thereby rejected religion and belief in God. The author is an orthodox Christian who is persuaded of the validity of the psycho-analytic method of Freud and believes that "Freud's view of religion depends solely upon the pre-supposition that God does not exist." If one begins with the pre-supposition that God does exist, one can interpret Christian experience in the light of psycho-analytic theory without sacrificing any essential Christian truth. Mr. Sanders attempts to do this and describes the Sacraments as "symptoms of the transference disorder" and designates Christ as "the Divine Psychiatrist." But since the whole point of the book is to persuade Freudians that it is Freud's pre-supposition (and presumably theirs) which determine the conclusions of his arguments on the nature of belief in God, what will the argument accomplish? If Freudians who read the book agree with its thesis, they will still have their pre-supposition and will still reject belief in God.—A. C. L.

Bishop of Northern Michigan

I ask your help in straightening out a matter which has caused some embarrassment. The Witness (Feb. 16) carried a statement to the effect that Northern Michigan had dropped all aid as of now. The actual facts are these: at our Convention we voted to ask the Bishop to negotiate with New York to see whether we could drop aid as of 1st of January, 1951. Consequently I wrote New York but had not received any word which indicated we could take such a step. Imagine my surprise when a telegram and several letters of congratulations arrived because of your news item. We do want to drop aid but cannot do it this year.

H. J. MAINWARING
Layman of Wollaston, Mass.

Bishop Mitchell recently said that Bishop Hall of Vermont "believed firmly in obedience to canons and rubrics" and that Bishop Hall told the Vermont convention of 1928 or '29 "that reservation was unlawful . . . if any were practicing that custom, they were to cease."

But Bishop Mitchell admits that Bishop Hall said "he would be willing to authorize that the sacrament be carried to the sick for a service of holy communion . . ."—a form of reservation.

Reservation prevailed in the Church in the very earliest times, with the force of canon law, before canon law dealt with it. The original purpose was not for the sick, but for those who had been absent from the eucharist. The first canons on reservation were not to forbid but to reinforce a custom already universal.

There were frequent canons in the English Church, not giving permission to reserve the blessed sacrament, but dealing with neglect so to do. When the Reformation set in, every parish priest in England was bound by canon law to maintain constant reservation. These canons were never repealed, never superseded by contrary canons.

Learned canonists like Bishop Hopkins of Vermont, Judge Hoffman, Dr. Vinton, Bishop White, Dr. Hawks, Hugh D. Evans, and others, are of the opinion that this Church is bound by English canon law, except where our own canon law has altered it.

Neglect to reserve does not empty the canons of their binding force. Bishop Hopkins, perhaps the most learned ecclesiastical lawyer America has ever produced, declared: "It needs the authority of the legislature itself to alter what the legislature has established . . . The neglect to obey it cannot alter the law . . . No law can be deprived of its binding obligation until some other law is passed which of necessity does it away."

Among the Cowley Fathers, reservation has been a long-established custom.

Hundreds of American bishops have acted on the ground that the Church's law authorized them to give formal permission to reserve, or that the responsibility belongs to the parish priest, who, according to the Prayer Book, is "possessed of full power to perform every act of sacerdotal function among the people."

No. 28. THE PROVINCE OF THE PACIFIC, by Louis Childs Sanford.

"This is an accurate account of the development of the Episcopal Church in the West by the one best qualified to write in terms of the province, of which he was president for many years. Following a brilliant introductory chapter by Bishop Parsons, there is the story of the way in which the Church in the West was organized. There was opposition to provinces throughout the Church when they were first suggested, due to various and mixed fears, and it was not until 1913 that the eight provinces came into being. Because of the large geographical area and the circumstances of Church life in the West, the Province of the Pacific has had a significant influence, has two official training schools (Church Divinity School of the Pacific and St. Margaret's House), and has attempted to increase the prestige of the provincial system.—Dr. Randolph Crump Miller in "The Churchman."

STORY OF THE WEEK

Melish Case Petition Signed By Over Eleven Hundred

Episcopal Clergy Throughout Nation See Case As Threat to Freedom of Pulpit

★ Eight bishops and 1,123 clergymen of the Episcopal Church on February 27 asked permission to file a brief as friends of the court in support of the appeal of the Rev. John Howard Melish, and the congregation of the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, New York. The legal motion was made by Samuel Thorne, attorney, before the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of New York, second department, in Brooklyn. He acted on behalf of the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, professor of practical theology and social studies at the Episcopal Theological School, Cambridge, who stated in an affidavit filed with the court that he had been authorized in writing to speak for the eight bishops and more than eleven hundred clergymen. The ministers joining in this move come from every domestic diocese in the Episcopal Church and such overseas missionary districts as Alaska, Haiti, Hawaii, Mexico and the Panama Canal Zone. There are currently 6,547 clergy of the Episcopal Church.

"We believe," declared Fletcher in his affidavit, "that the issues of law involved in this case not only affect the rights of the parties to this appeal, but also affect the rights of all the clergy of the Episcopal Church and the rights of all congregations of such Church throughout the United States."

"The two issues with which we are concerned," he continued, "are the freedom of the priestly and prophetic function of the ministry, and the security of tenure of the minister against dissolution of his pastoral relationship contrary to the expressed wishes of a majority of his congregation."

The statement concluded, "We believe the construction placed upon the canons of our Church by the trial judge in this case to be erroneous. Should that construction be upheld, it will adversely affect the relationship of every member of our clergy to his parish. For centuries the Protestant Episcopal Church in the United States and the whole Anglican Communion, of which it is a part, have considered the pastoral relationship permanent in character and have designedly hedged it about with special protections against dissolution. The dissolution of the pastoral relationship on the initiative of a vestry, contrary to the express will of a majority of the parish, does violence to this traditional concept. Such arbitrary dissolution presents a serious threat to the clergy in the exercise of their priestly and prophetic office."

Attached to the affidavit filed in the court were the names of the eight bishops and 1,072 other clergymen. Mr. Thorne indicated that since the affidavit was drawn up, fifty additional clergymen had asked to join the friends of the court, and that the entire list of 1,131 bishops and clergy would be filed with the court, if permission for such a brief were granted.

Mr. Samuel Thorne, who acted as attorney for the eight bishops and more than eleven hundred clergymen, is a lavman long identified with the life of the Church in the diocese of New York. He has represented the diocese at a number of General Conventions, and is a trustee of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. He was for a number of years the chairman of The Witness Advisory Board, a position now held by Bishop Barton of Eastern Oregon, one of the eight bishops to sign the brief.

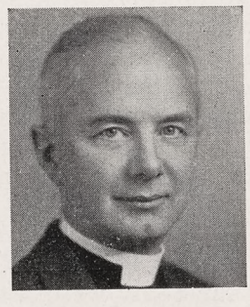
Background

The pastoral relation between Dr. Melish and the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, was dissolved on March 4, 1949, by Bishop DeWolfe, of Long Island, on the application of nine of the eleven vestrymen of the church, who alleged dissension in the parish because the rector of more than forty-five years' service had refused to dismiss his son and associate, the Rev. William H. Melish. This action of the nine vestrymen was repudiated by more than 70% of the voting members of the congregation. The Bishop's decree of dissolution was subsequently enforced on April 25, 1949, by a civil court injunction after a trial before Supreme Court Justice Meyer Steinbrink. It is this lower court decision that is being appealed by Dr. Melish and the Holy Trinity congregation in the Appellate Division. The case is expected to be heard on the April calendar.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

SPENCER MILLER HITS BOMB

★ Spencer Miller Jr., Episcopal layman who is commissioner of highways for New Jersey, in a Lent address at Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, stated that "the hydrogen bomb represents mankind's final suicidal triumph—the harnessing of the inmost secrets of creation for purposes of unimaginable destruction—a menace to the very order of nature. It brings into absolute focus the failure of our philosophy of a materialistic civilization which has sought to organize its life apart from God. The suicide of our civilization is in progress. The cult of so many of our leaders is that only the strong shall be secure. By every reliance we place on our armed might alone, we turn our back on the deepest Christian insights and the very fundamentals of our faith. Let me assert that the days of any civilization that places its security in any type of armed weapon, are numbered. The greatest moral tragedy in our history as a nation was the dropping of the A-bomb on Hiroshima in 1945. That bomb fell on America!"



"Today," continued Miller, "we are faced with the most terrifying of all facts, that the power to unleash primeval force sufficient to vaporize the human race is lodged in the hands of a few, without benefit of any adequate public information and no opportunity for public participation in decisions. The Christian Church cannot accept in silence this prospect of mass slaughter. It cannot be callous to the claims of its own gospel message of compassion. It must not stand before the world paralyzed and submissive before the seeming probability of widespread annihilation. It must testify to the essential one-ness of humanity. It must warn that the United States cannot afford the moral and spiritual risk of waging atomic warfare. This is not a question of expediency but essential right. This is a question of what is the will of God in Christ."

"Some of us," Miller went on to say, "have learned from long experience in arbitration in industrial disputes that bargaining begins only when equality exists between the bargaining parties. It may well prove that the possession of the A-bomb by the Soviet Union will now create that element of equality that will make the possibility of successful bargaining more hopeful. Also, the sense of impending disaster facing all people, and leading to such outspoken utterances as those of Senator MacMahon, Senator Tidings and Winston Churchill, may well be God's way of stimulating us to face our mutual need of a true world community."

"Lent this year," he concluded, "is not so much a time for personal repentance as for a concrete change in foreign policy. A policy based on one lethal weapon is not enough. We have to rely upon our true power as a nation—our trust in Almighty God, and in the conviction that love in action can create a power that cannot be resisted. No stone must be left unturned in the search for points of accommodation between ourselves and the Soviet Union. If ever the spirit of Christianity on our part was needed, this is the time and here is the place."

CHURCH LEADERS DISCUSS BOMB

★ Four American Church leaders are now in Geneva, Switzerland, to discuss under the auspices of the World Council of Churches the theological and moral questions involved in the hydrogen bomb. The four, all members of the 14-member executive committee of the Council, are Bishop Oxnam, Methodist; the Rev. Franklin C. Fry, Lutheran; Charles Taft, Episcopalian; Mrs. Leslie E. Swain, Baptist, and only woman on the committee. Their cabled statement is featured on page eight as an editorial.

CHARLES MARTIN LEADS CLERGY CONFERENCE

★ The Rev. Charles Martin, headmaster of St. Alban's School, Washington, D. C., led a conference of the clergy of Michigan the week before Lent, at Ann Arbor. The general theme was various practical aspects of the ministry. Bishop Emrich also gave an address each morning.

EPISCOPAL LEAGUE HAS MEETING

★ The H-bomb, the new China and the Melish case were highlighted through resolutions at the annual meeting of the Episcopal League for Social Action, meeting in New York February 20. Two were addressed to President Truman, one calling for "immediate diplomatic recognition of the new People's Government of China and the establishment of trade relations with this same government." It also requested that no further "financial or military assistance be extended to the Koumingtang." The other addressed to the President stated that his decision to proceed with the manufacture of the hydrogen bomb was viewed with "horror and shame, for this latest step in the gigantic armaments race is a denial of Christian morality and ignores the consensus of scientific opinion that any war waged with such weapons would be a war of annihilation which no nation could win," and the statement then went on to urge the President "to initiate new proposals for atomic control through the United Nations and to call for an immediate conference of the heads of state of the Soviet Union and the United States for the purpose of reaching mutual agreement on outlawing atomic warfare." The other resolution called upon the League "to give full and unqualified moral support to the stand taken by the clergy and majority of the laity of Holy Trinity Church in Brooklyn to protect the rights of the clergy and congregation."

The first session of the meeting was a symposium at which the heads of various religious communities told of their work, described by Mrs. Mary Simkhovitch, chairman of the meeting, as representing "green shoots in the present life of the Church." The Rev. Francis Ayres spoke of the Parishfield Community in Michigan; the Rev. John Nelson on the Kirkridge Retreat House; the Rev. William Webber on the East Harlem Project; the Rev. Warren McKenna on the Workers of the Common Life, a newly founded center in Boston; the Rev. Paul Moore told of the work carried on at Grace Church, Jersey City.

At the evening meeting the Rev. Cameron Hall of the Federal Council of Churches reported on the conference on the Church and economic life (see Witness, March 2).

NEWARK PARISH ACTS ON H-BOMB

★ At least one parish has acted on the H-bomb — St. John's, Newark, N. J. On February 12 Rector J. Fred Hamblin and the vestry and associate vestry of the parish sent a resolution to President Truman urging him to "initiate immediately conferences between the great powers of the world, through the United Nations, with the objective of coming to an understanding between men and nations as to the desire to ban forever these new weapons of destruction; and further that the President of the United States of America initiate a movement for the consideration of a program of outlawing war as an instrument of settling international disputes."

In a covering letter to the President Mr. Hamblin also informed him that the resolution was signed by some members of the parish in addition to the wardens and vestrymen.

HEAVENLY REST CALLS JOHN E. LARGE

★ The Rev. John Ellis Large, 44 year old rector of St. Andrew's, Wilmington, Del., has been elected rector of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, New York City, effective June 1. He succeeds the Rev. Henry Darlington, rector for twenty-eight years, who recently resigned because of ill health.

OUR MISTAKE DEPARTMENT

★ We are informed by the director of publicity of the diocese of Los Angeles, John B. Lockerby, that no persons have yet been named to head the drive for funds, and that we were wrong in stating that Henry Kaiser Jr. and Robert Gross have been named.

RECTOR of St. John's, Buffalo, the Rev. Walter P. Plumley (right), gives certificates of appreciation and extends public thanks to representatives of Museums of Science, Elmwood-Franklin School, Courier-Express, Buffalo Seminary, and State Teachers College

COMPLETE RADIO COVERAGE

★ When Presiding Bishop Sherrill speaks into a microphone on Sunday morning, March 12, at precisely 11:30 a. m., he will be using one of the largest and far-reaching radio networks ever arranged. Six hundred and seventeen stations will carry his message to the whole Episcopal Church, with his appeal for full support of the new, increased program of missions at home and overseas, of relief for needy in war-devastated countries, for the new program of Christian education, and for cooperation in the inter-Church appeal for world relief.

Three radio stations in Alaska will carry the program, and WAPA in San Juan will take the message to Puerto Rican Church people. The Bishop will be heard in the Hawaiian Islands through five radio stations, two in Honolulu, others in Hilo, Lihue and Wailuku.

EDITOR'S NOTE: You of course will be in your parish church for this all-important broadcast. Urge others to be also.

GENERAL SOMERVELL IN PITTSBURGH

★ General Brehon Somervell was the speaker at the annual corporate communion of men in the diocese of Pittsburgh, attended by 1400 representatives from 70 churches. The General, now the president of an industrial concern, admonished those present of the peril of Communism. "Some of the clergy," he stated, "think well of socialism; some are prominent pinks. They have sold their souls to the state. The process from this point is the same as that of the drug addict who requires larger and larger doses of his drug to keep him going until he is a slave to it. There is no difference between a pink and a red, except in the amount of his zeal. Socialism is the blood brother of Communism, make no mistake about it." He concluded by urging that the Church "become the militant, virile and victorious force" to combat Communism.

RECORD CLASS AT ST. MARTIN'S

★ St. Martin, New York, observed its 22nd anniversary on February 19th by presenting to Bishop Gilbert a class of 147 candidates for confirmation. The service was attended by about 2,000. The rector of the parish is the Rev. John H. Johnson. The preacher at the morning service at St. Martin's on March 19 will be the Rev. W. B. Spofford, managing editor of The Witness.

ARCHBISHOPS PLEAD FOR CONFERENCE

★ The Archbishop of York, Cyril F. Garbett, on February 28 pleaded for an immediate attempt "on the highest level" to reach agreement on abolition of the iranium and hydrogen bombs. "Negotiations should be started at once," he said, "since there is no time for delay."

His statement followed a similar one by the Archbishop of Canterbury and other leaders of the Church of England.

PLANS FOR CHRISTIAN EDUCATION

By JOHN HEUSS
Director of Christian Education

★ This month the Church is asked to study its work of Christian education. This is the last of three great fields of labor to be studied in preparation for the One World in Christ campaign which will culminate on Sunday, March 12. On that day the members of each parish and mission will be asked to give generously for the advance program adopted at General Convention. The share of that advance to be used for better Christian education is to be $341,500 each year of this triennium. This is an increase of some 200%. It is an evidence that the Episcopal Church at last has realized, what other communions have known for a long time, that the education of its people cannot be neglected any longer. It will still be much less than the Presbyterians, Methodists, Baptists, Lutherans and Congregationalists each invest in education, but it will be a step in the right direction.

What will this money be used for? It will be used to create a department of Christian Education capable of giving the Episcopal Church the kind of educational help it sorely needs and so long has deserved to have. Such a department would be organized to give service in seven different ways.

One, to produce the teaching materials needed for the Sunday schools. This includes children's courses, teachers' manuals, parent-home materials and leadership training courses. This production is the work of the editorial division.

Two, to provide advice by correspondence and consultation to the Church in weekday religious education, summer vacation schools, special study courses and projects. This is the task of the children's division.

Three, to develop plans for effective youth work. This includes guidance to the united movement of the Church's youth, promotion of the national youth commission and youth convention, the development of practical materials for youth activities and learning. This is the job of the youth division.

Four, to produce a much needed curriculum of adult study courses and promote the training of lay men and women capable of leading widespread adult education activities on a large scale. This is the work of the adult education division.

Five, to produce the audio-visual aids needed to implement all education projects of the Church and to train the leadership of the Church in their use. This is the work of the audio-visual education division.

Six, to guide the growing camps and conference movement in the Church and provide training for leaders in this increasingly important educational work of the Church. This is the work of the division of camps and conferences.

Seven, to develop for Episcopal preparatory schools and parish day schools a more effective program of Christian education. This is the work of the division of private schools.

In addition to these large areas in which leadership for better education must be given, the national department of Christian Education must also do three other vital things:

Train the clergy of the Church for use of the new curriculum. This has already begun at the College of Preachers.

Assist the seminaries to improve their work in Christian education, by providing scholarships for selected clergy and lay leaders to study for advanced training in education; and to give grants-in-aid for full time salaries of those competent to teach Christian education in the seminaries.

To provide widespread field training in diocesan and area conferences to clergy and lay people for better education.

For this large job the national department needs a staff of twenty-five members. At present we are attempting to get along with nine. Curriculum development is slowed down. Clergy and lay training is having to be done by staff members who were hired to write courses. No real educational work can be done until we are able to have the kind of educational department we need.

Therefore, the One World in Christ campaign must succeed. The strength and life of the Episcopal Church depends on what happens on Sunday, March 12. You are asked to give generously.

Christianity and the Hydrogen Bomb

The statement on the hydrogen bomb was passed unanimously by the executive committee of the World Council of Churches, meeting February 21-23 in Geneva, Switzerland. The Witness editorial board, meeting February 27, voted unanimously to print it as our editorial for this week. In doing so we urge every reader to write President Truman, Secretary of State Dean Acheson and your Senators and Representative demanding "negotiations—to bring the present tragic deadlock to an end."

THE HYDROGEN BOMB is the latest and most terrible step in the crescendo of warfare which has changed war from a fight between men and nations to a mass murder of human life. Man's rebellion against his Creator has reached such a point that, unless stayed, it will bring self-destruction upon him. All this is a perversion; it is against the moral order by which man is bound; it is sin against God.

All men have responsibilities before God as they face the grave issues raised by the hydrogen bomb and other weapons of modern war. Let each ponder in his conscience, be he statesman or scientist or ordinary citizen, how far his own action or attitude contributes to the danger of world suicide; and what he must do to prevent it, and to bring the nations to understand and serve one another.

The governments of the nations have an inescapable responsibility at this hour. The world is divided into hostile camps through suspicion and distrust, and through the failure of the nations to bring their mutual relations within an agreed system of justice and order. As representatives of Christian Churches we appeal for a gigantic new effort for peace. We know how strenuously the governments have discussed peace in the past. But sharp political conflicts continue and the atomic danger develops uncontrolled. We urge the governments to enter into negotiations once again, and to do everything in their power to bring the present tragic deadlock to an end.

This is the hour to listen afresh to the word of the God who is the Lord of history. And this is the hour for earnest prayer to him. For the fate of mankind is in his hands. Those who trust him do not need to fear, whatever comes. He is the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. All are to appear before his judgment seat, and to give an account of what they have done, or have refused to do, for their fellow men.

Peace, It's Wonderful!

IT is no accident that our "opinion industry" presents us with two opposite attitudes on the subject of peace. On the one hand we are being whipped into a state of hostility by the propaganda of the cold war and the militant doings on the labor front and, on the other, we are being urged to seek the solace of "spiritual peace" offered by religion and psychiatry. While the article in this issue on "The Peace of Mind Cult" does expose the theological fallacies of this latter fad it is to be regretted that it does not go more fully into the connection between the two sides of this contradiction. Nothing, in other words, is said about "Peace on earth, good will toward men."

While it is true that in times of outer confusion people tend to seek inner peace as a way of escape, it is impossible, also, we suspect, to cultivate deliberately an emphasis on religious and psychological exercises as devices to prevent them from dealing effectively with the causes that work against their true peace. All sorts of organizations, such as the N. A. M., have been "getting religion" lately—not for themselves particularly but for the masses of the people. They want religion dispensed as a psychological opiate or narcotic to keep the people in their place.

Christianity is a great deal more than just religion. It is God coming into all of life and entering into its creation and redemption. In the Incarnation he touches the three levels of human relationships—nature, the realm of production, economics; society, the realm of distribution, politics; and religion, the realm of worship and spirituality. This whole activity in which man is called to share is marked by sacrifice and struggle. Peace, as Mr. Hunter states, is merely a by-product and to seek it primarily is the surest way of not finding it. Inner peace can only come by fighting for external peace in the world, not by trying to extricate ourselves from the problems and difficulties of life.

These peace cults, furthermore, are bad psychology, based on the popularizing of amateur psychiatrists. The reputable psychiatrist or psychoanalyst does not profess to free his patient of all inner conflicts and tensions but rather to enable him to understand and get along with himself. These cults do a disservice to psychiatry as well as religion because they seek a peace which is an empty negation with the result that the "last state of that man is worse than the first." It will usually be found that when psychiatrists are interested in religion it is not this kind of subjective escapism but rather is directed towards the betterment of the economic, social, and cultural patterns of the kind of world which produces their patients, particularly in these days of frustration.

After demolishing "peace of mind," and cautioning against "peace of soul," Mr. Hunter comes up with "peace of God." But this does not get us far enough away from the perils inherent in all kinds of peace cults for God, too, can be mocked. Our Lord said "I bring not peace but a sword" and "in the world ye shall have tribulation, but be of good cheer I have overcome the world." Christianity does not promise peace. It proclaims victory.

"QUOTES"

OURS is the sin of a Christendom which confesses Christ but will not have him reign; which has limited his authority to private occasions, and has excluded it in public and social affairs; a Christendom which has told Christ to mind his own business, which is the saving of souls, and to let society and the world alone. Germany perfected that sin; are we clear of it?

No Maniesto

WE have learned from our underground network of secret agents that the New York Catholic Club, known correctly as the Society for the Maintenance and Defense of Catholic Principles, had a bit of discussion lately on the "joint statement in defense of the traditional pastoral relation" which has been circulated among, and signed by, a large number of the clergy. The contention of this document is that the grounds of the judgment in the so-called Melish Case violate the traditional prerogatives of the parish priest in relation to his congregation.

At a recent meeting of the above organization the matter was brought up for some sort of counteraction, apparently by those whose partisan zeal blocked any awareness or recognition that Catholic principles were involved. What would be their attitude if the mitre were on the other head, so to speak, (or rather not there at all) and such a bishop ruled against an Anglo-Catholic rector on the ground that he refused to fire his curate because he was too much involved with Alcoholics Anonymous (the complaint would presumably have been made by the liquor interests on the vestry) and was filling the church with rummies and drunks? We can't see any basic difference here except that AA's are popular now and CP's are not. If, of course, the clergy under question had been brought to trial in the traditional manner and convicted (ex hypothesi) of heresy and/or immorality then the judgment would be on historic, Catholic grounds.

This way of firing rectors, as brought out by this unhappy case, and of hiring them too, presents an issue which is peculiar in the Anglican Communion to the Episcopal Church in the United States of America. Churchmen who believe in the supernatural source of the authority of both the priestly and prophetic aspects of the ministry have a common ground, which is both evangelical and catholic, for the protection of the pastoral prerogatives of the parish priest against discriminatory oppression by either bishops or laymen, or both in collusion.

As a good omen for Evangelicals to contemplate we are glad to report that at the meeting above the opinions of the more theologically minded prevailed and the Catholic Club is not going to issue a Protestant Manifesto!

PEACE CULTS: Ally, Competitor or Both?

By DAVID R. HUNTER
Director of Education, Diocese of Massachusetts

"MEN of America, I perceive that in every way you are very religious." One might expect such an observation if a Paul of our day were to come to our land a stranger and examine the weekly lists of non-fiction best sellers. No longer is it thought an accident if a religious book is included on this dollar producing honor roll. For many months over a quarter of those which have made the grade have been religious books of one type or another. Some of these have remained on the list for a year or more, establishing records that most authors scarcely dream of achieving. All of which seems to point to the presence of a deeply felt need and a renewed interest in some kind of religion. The need cannot be disputed but the quarter to which people are turning for relief should give reason for pause. There is more than a little indication that the religion in question is not the religion of Jesus Christ, but rather Christ's age old rival, the worship of self in modern sophisticated guise.

Return to Religion

THIS modern book selling phenomenon began in the mid-thirties with the publication of Henry C. Link's "The Return to Religion," a book widely quoted and heralded by many a religious leader but which Halford Luccock of Yale Divinity School rightly described as containing "elements of corruption and perversion of Christian truth." It held up to men the lure of returning to religion for what they could get out of it, whereas the heart of the Christian ethic is a seeking after the will of God in love. "Whosoever would save his life will lose it" has been forgotten by most writers who would lure us back to God on the pretext of self gain.

One who has known and admired Joshua Loth Liebman finds it difficult to categorize his world famous book in this way. Unquestionably it contains many helpful insights presented with the same lucidity and flaming appeal that characterized Liebman's pulpit oratory. Furthermore, "Peace of Mind's" interpretation of the findings of modern psychiatry (not all of which are accepted by the profession) and their correlations in certain ways with both Jewish and Christian ethics constitutes a unique contribution to the field of religious literature for general consumption. But basically these are not the tests by which to measure a book of this nature. "Peace of Mind" is a work pertaining to the subject of salvation, and as such, its soundness will depend primarily on Liebman's conception of value and his doctrine of man. His advice is a godsend and desperately needed, or it is misleading and dangerous, depending upon his understanding of these two basic areas of experience. The same is true of every other publication and movement that constitute the peace of mind cult of our day.

Liebman's Highest Good

TO pursue Liebman's work further as an example, the first two pages make crystal clear the fact that peace of mind was Liebman's conception of the highest good. The "gift of the untroubled mind" is the gift par excellence, and this gift is attained or earned by man within himself. Liebman quotes approvingly a modern master of this school of thought, Matthew Arnold:

> We would have inward peace
> But will not look within . . .

Here we have both value judgment and doctrine of man in the opening half dozen pages. Personal peace is our highest value, and in man is to be found the power that will obtain it. These contentions are maintained throughout the book until Rabbi Liebman closes with a series of commandments of a "new morality" which depend entirely upon man's ability to keep them for their effectiveness. There is mention of God, to be sure. Liebman was a teacher and leader of Israel, but Liebman's philosophy was not dependent on God, nor did it seek to convince us of man's dependence on God. Man is dependent on himself, and the peace of God comes finally to him who wrestles with this self dependence and realizes his own innate goodness.

However appealing such a philosophy may be to a people like ourselves who have been reared in the midst of a generation of achievement at the hands of "self made" men, a people who in any generation would find it pleasing to imagine ourselves self reliant, it is none the less a philosophy diametrically the opposite of our Christian heritage. Our Lord did not hold up peace of any kind as the supreme objective of life. He made a practice of promising neither peace of mind, nor of family, nor peace among nations to those who would follow him. "My food is to do the will of him who sent me and to accomplish his work" would seem to have been his way of putting it, and his life was the incarnation of this philosophy. Man's highest good in the Christian understanding of reality is to seek after and accomplish the will of God. This may or may not bring peace, the likelihood being great that it will not. Yet to the Christian in the midst of such tension, the presence of God is of greater moment than the absence of peace.

The scarcity of peace in our time and the unlikelihood that the Christian pilgrimage will bring peace in this life are direct results of the nature of our being—from which the Christian doctrine of man proceeds. Just as two men can look at a human event and gain two completely different images, so do we differ in our analysis of human nature, but the main stream of Christian experience on this matter has been very clear and completely consonant with the revelation received through Jesus Christ. Man is a part of the vast creation of God who apart from God is at the mercy of himself. Apart from God man is at the mercy of selfishness however disguised that selfishness may be. Our liturgy has preserved this basic understanding of ourselves in a hundred different ways which fuse to provide us with our primary means of regaining our relationship to God. Week after week through the collects we acknowledge our natural being to God in prayer: "Almighty God, who seest that we have no power of ourselves to help ourselves . . .," "who alone canst order the unruly wills and affections of sinful men . . .," "without whom nothing is strong, nothing is holy . . .," "grant to us the spirit to think and do always such things as are right; that we, who cannot do anything that is good without thee, may by thee be enabled to live according to thy will . . ."

If anyone should think that the world has changed and man has grown since first these liturgical forms were uttered, let him observe that the Lambeth Conference of 1948 was still of the same mind when it declared that "man is a being created by God and is under his sovereignty, and . . . apart from God, he can neither master his nature nor find his true self."

We are fools, therefore, if we continue to be lured by one panacea after another that would bring us inner peace—fools because we were not made to seek after ease of self and even greater fools because no such peace of any duration is attainable in a world where "the rulers of the darkness of this world" are pitted against the Christ.

Peace of Soul

IN surveying the literature that is commonly thought of as characterizing this cult, an exception needs to be made in relation to Fulton J. Sheen's "Peace of Soul." Whatever we may think of Monsignor Sheen's communion, his sentimental utterances on the radio, and his often naive or bizarre interpretations of psychiatry, his conception of value and his doctrine of man are thoroughly in keeping with Christian tradition. He can perhaps be excused for succumbing to the pressure of high powered book selling in his choice of a title. The book itself does not offer peace of soul as bait to draw people into the net of religion, although it does not deny that soul peace will come as a result of subjecting "the whole personality to the will of God." It is true that Monsignor Sheen never quite comes to grips with the factor of motivation, but the implication of the entire book is quite clear. The object of all of our living is not peace of mind or soul—the object is God. In the closing sentences of the book one finds this in so many words—"There is one simple way of beginning a conversion: cease asking what God will give you if you come to him, and begin to ask what you will give God." If all of the health promising, peace promoting, conscience relieving movements of our day that lay claim to the power of the spirit could let such a statement be a part of the philosophical foundation of their ministry, they would then have the moral right to speak as Monsignor Sheen does in his very last sentence, when he says, "It is not the sacrifice it sounds, for, in having him, you will have everything besides." The latter quotation has no meaning without the former.

The strength and the danger of "Peace of Soul" are to be seen not in its acknowledged value judgments but in one glaring omission. Monsignor Sheen never protests, as his particular communion claims, that only through the Church of Rome can these things come to pass. In carefully refraining from making this admission, he has produced a book with ecumenical value which can speak in many respects for the great central stream of Christendom, but he has also provided what can become a trap for the unsuspecting. A prospective servant of the Master who has arrived at a willingness to give himself to God soon finds himself being led by a seemingly rational and irresistable process into giving himself to the most arrogant and authoritarian of all forms of ecclesiasticism. It is not the whole truth to say, as Monsignor Sheen does, that any man is free to refuse if he chooses, for the Monsignor's communion offers him no choice. It is a matter of salvation with arrogance and loss of liberty or no salvation at all. But there is scarcely a hint of this in "Peace of Soul."

Jeremy Taylor

WITH all due respect to the current literary output, however, we would do well to sit at the feet of some of our forebears who without knowing the unique hurly burly of our century knew all of its turmoil and tensions and also knew God. Exactly three hundred years ago there was published by Jeremy Taylor a book that will some day be newly edited and republished to become the antidote for the peace of mind literature of our day. Taylor's "Rules for Exercises of Holy Living" has brought many a man a deep sense of peace, but the rules were written to bring man to God with scarcely a promise of peace. They begin: "It is necessary that every man should consider that, since God hath given him an excellent nature, wisdom and choice, an understanding soul and an immortal spirit . . . he both also appointed for him a work and service great enough to employ those abilities . . . And therefore, as every man is wholly God's own portion by the title of creation, so all our labors and care, all our powers and faculties, must be wholly employed in the service of God, and even all the days of our life." This is both the milk and the meat which we need.

Peace of God

BUT does some one say, what about the blessing with which we are regularly dismissed following the holy communion—"The peace of God, which passeth all understanding, keep your hearts and minds in the knowledge and love of God . . ."? Is it not proper to pray for God's peace? On occasions it certainly is, but the first thing to note about the above blessing is that it is not a petition for God to send peace to us. It is rather an invoking of God's peace to keep us in rightful holy relationship with God. The peace is not a state of mind, it is a manifestation of God's power. The effect of God's power and the object of all our living is that this holiest of all relationships may be established and re-established.

Something of the subtlety of our being is to be seen in Jeremy Taylor's description of a man truly at peace: "Here, therefore, is the wisdom of the contented man, to let God choose for him; for when we have given up our wills to him, and stand in that station of the battle where our great General hath placed us, our spirits must needs rest while our conditions have for their security the power, the wisdom and the charity of God."

So long as we live, the desire for peace will be a part of us, but let us not sanctify it by making it the central core of a religion which was founded on much higher and more realistic levels. Not that we should have peace, but that God should manifest the works of peace through us.

"The God of peace . . . make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight, through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory forever and ever."

The Meaning of the Creed

The Fourth of a Series for Lent

By JOHN E. HINES
The Bishop Coadjutor of Texas

"I BELIEVE IN JESUS CHRIST, HIS ONLY SON . . . LORD"

TO call this Jesus . . . this Christ . . . Lord is a commitment to which no man, or woman, should subscribe without the most careful consideration of what is involved. For we live in an age which is inclined to take the term "Your Lordship" with more levity than seriousness. To us, "Lordship" represents a tradition, and a system, from which our forefathers contrived to escape. However, this should not dull our appreciation of what it meant in Jesus' day, for expressions are luminous only when they are understood in their context and special surroundings.

In Jesus' day, "Lordship" meant the authority and power an owner had over his servants. They had no rights of their own. They were not independent persons over against him. They acted not on their own responsibility, but strictly under his. As a matter of human interest, each master branded his servants, marked them with his initials, or with his sign, to indicate (1) that they belonged to him, and (2) that they were delivered from servitude to any other master. So they were his property, were these people, and their preservation was the Lord's concern.

By so much does an understanding of Jesus' Lordship move on the plane of his contemporary culture. Yet, Jesus was not content that such an understanding of "Lordships" should limit the relationship between his disciples and himself. For he knew that all human lordship has a term. Furthermore, that such human lordship was derivative. It came into being at a point in history and its validity ceased at another definite point, for even the sternest master could not bridge over the gulf of death. Yet, Jesus, whose Lordship is that of the Creator of our life, is not limited to this world only. He is also the owner of our new life, as the life of those who, in him, have been freed from sin and death. Therefore, whether we admit it or not, it is a Lordship which affects our very existence, for it is a lordship from which there is no appeal to a higher court and without it, we would cease to exist, or, if we did exist, we would be lost.

Paradox of Bondage

HOW beautifully Jesus, himself, keeps this Lordship, which we own of him, from degenerating into the serfdom which was the curse of the social order, of which he was then a part. With what content did he fill the role of servant so that the bondage which held his disciples to him was not a tyranny, but a release. How clearly does he reveal himself both as the source of all man's highest aspiration and the guarantor of their realization. With what graciousness does he reveal to men the paradox of their bondage, whereby the closer they cleave to him, the more spacious is their freedom of thought and motion. Until, in reality, he can crystallize their real station in life, and eternity by saying, "No longer do I call you servants, but friends."

Such, then, is the light cast upon the whole idea of God for Christians, by their confidence in Christ, and by their confession of his "One-ness with God," and his Lordship over their life. But, even that does not exhaust what we feel when we say, "I believe in Jesus Christ," for it is the saving power of this Jesus that really brings a man to his feet, or to his knees, in adoration and thanksgiving. Not for nothing did prophecy direct Joseph, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins."

Perhaps the dominant characteristic of our age is its disinclination to feel the need for redemption, which means, its lack of a consciousness of "sin." I suppose that, during the rise of the same so-called liberalism about which I spoke earlier, there was no doctrine so completely rejected, so often sneered at, so frequently joked about, as the doctrine of "original sin." The modern world came to look upon it as a relic of an "age of unenlightenment," a statement of the superstitious. After all, that generation belonged to a race which was conquering space, abolishing slums, banishing disease, perhaps even banishing poverty. In need of redemption, this creature! Pure nonsense! Or so . . . too many thought!

But, now, there are some second thoughts on the matter. Two great world wars have shattered the illusion that man, knowing the right, will do the right. These two wars, and their aftermath, indicate, in their own terrible manner, just how forbidden is the fruit of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, for man. For the basic sin of all mankind is the attempt to usurp God's right of sovereignty over this world. Modern man's sin, like that of the first man in his Garden of Eden, was to pretend to be that which he had no right to be, that which, by nature he most decidedly was not, namely, "Lord of his destiny, and master of his universe." Yes, man's greatest sin is pride, it is self-will. As Dr. Davies put it, "It is not so much crime, an infringement against stipulated law, it is treason. For in the affirmation of his own will over against the will of God, man challenges the very foundation of existence and being."

So we see that it was to win man back to sonship, a position which man forfeited in his rebellion that God sent his only begotten Son upon the earth. It was not just a sudden decision, a snap judgment, an experiment, in the mind of God. It was as someone has well put it, that "through all the earlier ages of mankind, God was preparing for the Incarnation and paving the way for it in the world . . . 'paving the way of faith for us, that we might more easily believe that the Son of God had descended into the world.' It was to this end that the Son of God condescended to converse with men, from Adam down to the patriarchs and the prophets, and then when man was ready to receive it, the full revelation came."

Purpose of History

SURELY the restoration of man to his original relation to God is the supreme purpose of history. To bring men and women to repentance, to initiate them into a new life, to start them on a new career in which selflessness shall replace selfishness, is the end toward which history is working. This is what Christ means for history. And, this is what history means for Christians. The Scripture puts it simply, but profoundly, "In the fullness of time, God sent his Son."

Now, may I add that it is important for Christians that they know how to appropriate and benefit by this self-giving of God. Perhaps, even in this late day, we can take a leaf from the experience of St. Paul, for St. Paul came very near the heart of the secret in his search for salvation. He had, as you will remember, all his life been trying to save himself. He had spent his earlier days trying to win God's favor by keeping the law, and by being a good man. Yet, even as he tried, he knew that he was failing, and that his life was a field of unresolved conflicts. Then, in his conversion, he began to see that he had been making a mistake. He had been viewing reconciliation with God from the wrong end. He discovered a secret that is easy for modern men to overlook, namely, God's love for us does not depend upon our being worthy of it. Frankly, we could not possibly win that love by our own efforts to earn it, by good thought, by good deeds, even by a good life. For such an attempt at earning God's favor only leads to a snare. Self-righteousness, for even after we have done all these things (in the light of God's mercy) we are still unprofitable servants.

But, if we read the New Testament aright, we will know that we do not need to earn God's love. He loves us "while we are yet sinners." And he has sent his Son with a gift, which we can neither earn nor deserve. Further, that the whole of the initiative lies, not with us, but with God and that "We love him, because he first loved us."

Is there any wonder then that St. Paul could conclude that he was, himself, the least of all the Apostles. Is there any wonder that he saw all of his labors as not actually being his own. Is there any wonder that he describes the initiative of God in terms which the world can never forget, saying, "By the grace of God, I am what I am." Is it any wonder that, through the ages, the saints have learned the same secret, and have shared the same new life, and have learned to call the same benefactor, Lord.

An Important Word

I CANNOT leave this article of the Creed without calling your attention to the special significance of the possessive pronoun "Our" when saying, "I believe in Jesus Christ, Our Lord." Frankly, it is only recently that I have come to an increasing consciousness of the value of each seemingly small word in the Creed. Sometimes, it is the very small words that mean the most. A less sensitive mind might pass over the little word "in," in the very opening statement, and so miss the whole of the Christian position of faith in God. Another might go on saying, "Our Lord," as if reading familiar sign posts on a well traveled highway, conscious that they are there, but without discovering whither they lead. This word is important. Yea, one of the most significant of Christian sign posts. For the word "our" tells us that this lordship of Christ is no private intercourse between Christ and individual believers, but rather is it the rule of Christ in his Church. Now that is worth thinking about in an age which is dedicated, too much, to fragmentizing and individualizing almost every human experience. It is startling to realize that Christ becomes the Lord of my whole life, never simply individually. I cannot ever possess this Lordship alone. It is precisely within the congregation of those who are called to this Christian faith, hence the term Ekklesia, that Christ is both acknowledged and honored as Lord. "No man calleth Jesus Lord, save by the Holy Spirit." For, to put it baldly, I do not have the gospel alone. I do not have the law alone. To be alone is to be without this saving Christ, whose body the Church, perpetuates a grace. Furthermore, I cannot overcome faith's great temptations, alone. It is only within the group, only in the midst of those constituted my brothers and sisters by virtue of their having heard and witnessed God's saving word. It is only within the group that I receive power of deliverance from temptations. If this is true, and I believe it profoundly, the Church assumes new proportions, and new significance. No longer can we avoid assessing its spiritual resources. Central, must we place it in the operation of God's plan for all of history. It will not stand with good grace the characterization of being optional. For it is only along with and in responsibility to my neighbor that I can present myself before God, or commend myself to his mercy. It is only in the company within the fellowship that I can validly pray, "Thy Kingdom Come."

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. What did "Lordship" mean in Jesus' day?
2. What is one of the most important things that distinguishes the Lordship of Jesus?
3. What does Bishop Hines mean by "the paradox of freedom"? Give instances where it is expressed in the Prayer Book.
4. What is meant by redemption?
5. What is meant by original sin? Discuss.
6. What is the basic sin of all mankind?
7. What is the supreme purpose of history?
8. What was St. Paul's great discovery?
9. Why is "Our" important in the Creed?

God, Man, and the H-Bomb

By ANGUS DUN
The Bishop of Washington

WE have taken as a kind of watch-word for today this sentence: "Under the judgment of God we seek light in our darkness and freedom from ignoble fears."

None will deny the darkness. It is the darkness of fear. We face an ugly, unclean thing called the hydrogen bomb. For all I know, it may be only a very bad dream. Whether it be a bad dream or early possibility or a present actuality does not greatly matter. It is simply the latest version of the terrible powers of destruction we Americans possess and the Russian people possess. To look upon it with open eyes is to be afraid. It means death; not only personal death, which we all face in any case, but death to the beauty and decency and good life we seek to build together. It is ugly and unclean, as a massive gallows, a massive unredeemed cross held up before man. To look upon it is to be afraid. Yet we know we can find no wisdom in fear and no worthy life when possessed by fear.

The darkness we face is the darkness of perplexity. It is the darkness of men who are lost and see no road that leads to life. Our leaders, who bear heavy responsibilities on behalf of us all, tell us in effect that they can see no way save the broad way that leadeth to destruction. For there is one who speaks in this place, saying: "They that take the sword shall perish with the sword." "They that take the bomb shall perish with the bomb." Surely the way of desperately matching destructive power with destructive power is the way to destruction. The most that can be said of it is that it might buy a little time in which another and a better way could be found.

Some say we must straightway have world government. To which the answer is made that we do not possess the community of life and the slowly-built sense of belonging together on which alone government must rest.

Some say we must buy peace at a great price, but a price far less than the price of war. To which the answer is made, we cannot buy peace.

An address in Washington Cathedral on Ash Wednesday

Some say we must talk again with those who fear us and whom we fear. To which the answer is made, "Of what use is it to talk with those whose talk is double talk?"

There are even Satanic voices which whisper, "We're already at war. Let's have it over." To which the only decent reply it, "Get behind us, Satan."

We walk in the darkness of perplexity and do not find the narrow way that could lead to life.

Walls of Dynamite

ALL honor to them that seek and seek, for only to them that seek will a way be opened. God have mercy on us if in irresponsible faithlessness we do not seek. For if it must needs be that offenses come, woe to that man by whom the offense cometh.

We know that the hydrogen bomb is not at the heart of our trouble, nor the bomb that fell on Hiroshima nor the unrelenting fire we can rain on our enemies and they can rain on us. It is man who is the problem. It is we men who are the problem to ourselves and even to God. As someone said not long ago, mankind is like a family living in a house whose walls are built of dynamite. But it is man who put the dynamite in the walls.

Or should we say that Russian men are the heart of our trouble? It was German men a little while ago. Perhaps it will be some other kind of men in days to come. But today it is Russian men.

If the one who speaks to us in this place says to us Americans, "Thou hypocrites, first cast out the beam out of your own eyes; and then shall you see clearly to cast out the mote out of your brothers' eyes," we are disposed to say, "Good Lord, your extravagant language needs correction. We admit that we have a few specks in our eyes. Everything is not perfect among us. But surely the beams are in the Russian eyes."

Yet wisdom shall not be found in self-righteousness. It is the humble who are guided in judgment and light riseth up in darkness for the godly.

Even if in the sight of God himself our rightness is as far superior to the Russians' wrongness as we think it is, we are not good enough to harbor complacency. In the trials of our time every American who lives irresponsibly, who seeks his own gain without counting the cost to others; every politician who plays recklessly for partisan advantage or his own advancement; every injustice in our common life, every hypocrisy in our democratic professions, weakens us and makes us less ready to lead the world out of darkness into light.

We have gathered here today, not in the fear of men, but in the fear of God. That does not mean in fright before God. It means in the reverent awareness of his judgment. We believe truly—God helping our unbelief—that in the fear of God—in that sense—is the beginning of wisdom. We have listened to the testimony of men and are grateful for it. But most of all we would hear God speaking to us and to the people of this whole land, if by any means our ears might be opened.

What is he trying to say to us? Surely he is trying to say what he has said to men in other times of darkness and fear and perplexity.

Seek God's Will

SURELY he is seeking to say to us as he has said to men in other times, "Do not expect of me some easy miracle or sign that shall cost you nothing in self-scrutiny or sacrifice or repentance. There is no way to peace save the way of righteousness. I have in times past used a godless people as the scourge of them that thought themselves godly. Do not talk too glibly of how good it would be if only others would live by my Son's Sermon on the Mount. Do you walk by that difficult and narrow way? This kind of Devil with which you are harassed cometh out only by prayer. Have you Americans tried much prayer, you churchmen, you statesmen, you congressmen? By prayer I do not mean a kind of frightened mass-pressure on deity to get you out of your hole. I mean the disposition of the spirit my Son tried to teach you when he gave you his prayer. I mean the disposition of the heart and will which can truly say, 'Our Father—Father of us all—thy will be done—not ours.' Then you will be able to go on, 'Give us—all of us—our daily bread.' For you will know that to Me the daily bread and the security and the freedom of all those others are as important as the daily bread and the security and the freedom of you Americans. You might even be able to go on to 'Forgive us as we forgive.' It is to that disposition of the heart that I promise a good answer."

Surely the God whose speaking we would hear is trying to say to us, "Though you should by your cleverness gain some temporary security in the world, what will it profit you if you lose your souls? You are made to walk in the light of open dealings and mutual trust and good personal relationships. Beware lest in your anxious search for security you move into a life of spreading secrecy and distrust and darkness."

I am trying to hear God's speaking. Do you try, too, and share with your neighbors what you hear?

It is not given to us men to know the future with all certainty or to build that which is forever and forever. It is our part to live in the days and the years that are granted us in the quiet strength of those who know that though the storms of our troubled world rage horribly, yet the Lord who dwelleth on high is mightier.

We shall pray that America may be strong, strong in arm and strong in courage, resolved to make no final peace with oppression. Let us pray still more that America may enter into the blessedness of the peace-makers. That can be only if we are delivered from our infantile egotism, our delusions of superiority, from the love of ease and softness and surrendered to the creative purpose of him who came among us to bring peace.

We live in a dark time, but not as men without hope. "Earth might be fair," yes, even now it might be fair.

In our darkness we turn to him who bore the human name of Jesus and in whom faith has seen the wisdom of God. And we see that the loveliest life, the fairest life, the life that did most to make the earth fair, was a brief and broken one lived with a deep sense of earthly insecurity. And we are strengthened.

Fine Vines

By PHILIP H. STEINMETZ
Rector of the Ashfield Churches

IN Lent we think about pruning poor practices and promoting proper ones. There is much to be learned by observing methods of making grape or even tomato vines more fruitful. Not only must external pests be killed, but shoots must be pruned. That is, part of the plant and a very beautiful and luxuriant part must be sacrificed in the interest of greater growth of fruit.

The same goes for many of our possessions and habits. They are not all evil. They are often beautiful and good. But if they conflict with the growth of the fruits of the spirit, love, joy and peace, longsuffering, gentleness and the like, we are wise to discard them.

But in the process of pruning we remember the important fact that the life is in the vine. We may think that our will power in pruning is the source of growth and the important part of the matter. But the fact is that life comes whether we will it or not. God is the well-spring, we are the rivulets.

Therefore there is great joy in Lent, arising from a realization of the wonderful gifts God pours upon us as we make way for his working. We think of the things to be abandoned, but we think far more of the power and glory of the life which is freed for further flowering by their loss and give thanks for what God works through us.

Prayer for These Times

By DEAN JOHN W. SUTER of Washington Cathedral

ALMIGHTY God, Maker of the universe, Governor of nations, Father of all: We stand before thee in this time of peril and perplexity, our hearts failing us for fear, our minds groping in darkness. Out of the deep we call unto thee, O Lord hear our voice.

Thou hast given us power of brain and craft of hand to cleave the very core of earth, O Thou who didst make the round world so fast that it cannot be moved. Shall Man, thy child, unlock what thou hast wrought? Before this awe-ful gift we are ashamed. Yet Thou, O Lord, gavest us this knowledge, and thou art Holy, thou art faithful, of purer eyes than to behold iniquity, and in thee is no variableness.

Look with pity, we pray thee, upon the sin of the whole world.

Lead us, Eternal One, into thy meaning for us and our world; open to us the secret place of thy heart, that we may learn the truth.

Guide our leaders; purify their motives and their aims, that they may be led of thee. Guide our people; speak thy Word to every heart and mind and will, that, so led and so purified, our Nation may rise to achieve thy victory, not ours, and the Nations we fear may win not their victory but thine; for in thy will is our peace, even as in thy Fatherhood all are embraced whom thou hast made, O Lord Most Holy, O Lord Most High. Amen.

"We're not against the Negroes," Moore declared, "but we are for segregation. And God is, too, if you stop to think about it." There was no Episcopal minister in the delegation.

evade the fundamental issues of justice. Reactionary forces strive to discredit our ministers by labeling them 'communists,' and revolutionists that seek to destroy our conservatives by labeling them 'fascists'." In the address before the St. Louis Federation of Churches he said that "Protestants are resolved to resist all attempts to limit the freedom of the pulpit." He began his address by taking a crack at John T. Flynn's "The Road Ahead" which he declared was full of falsehoods.

CODE ADOPTED BY PHOTOGRAPHERS

A code of church conduct has been drawn up by the Professional Photographers' Association of Greater St. Louis. It incorporates the following rules:

"We will contact officiating clergymen before the wedding ceremony and make inquiries as to their regulations with reference to taking photographs of the ceremony or other special occasions;

"We further agree to abide by the rules of each particular church;

"We will make no unnecessary disturbances, and will work as quietly as possible at our duties at all times;

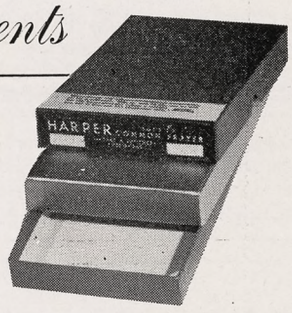
"We will at no time leave used flash bulbs, empty cartons, or film-pack tabs, or any other miscellaneous wrappings on church property."

OPPOSITION TO H-BOMB DEVELOPS

Protests are beginning to be heard about the decision to go ahead with the H-Bomb. The Indiana Council of Churches said that instead of developing super-bombs the U. S. should "use its good offices to promote peace in the world." A large number of churchmen in New York heard A. J. Muste, Presbyterian minister, say that if the American people sanction the bomb "they vote for war" and apparently went along with him when he said that manufacture of the H-bomb made total resistance and civil disobedience to the war-making powers of governments both necessary and imperative.

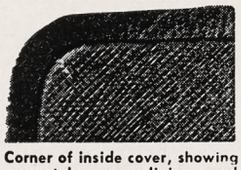
UNIQUE SERVICE IN PRISON

Members of the Free Methodist Church and the Church of the Nazarene at Battle Creek, Mich., changed places with thirteen prisoners during a religious service held in the county jail. When the church people were met by the sheriff and promptly locked in the bull pen along with about 25 prisoners, they were surely surprised. The churchmen were more surprised when, looking out through the bars, they saw thirteen prisoners occupying the chairs normally reserved for them.



But when one of the prisoners arose and said, "We've got something for you preachin' fellows; I guess you'd call it a sort of present," the churchmen began to relax. Then the prisoners presented an hour's program of prayer and hymns featuring a quartet and a chorus. A student of theology, who admitted that he had done some preaching before he strayed from the path, delivered the sermon, which he titled, "I Jumped Before I Looked." He described himself and fellow prisoners as careless fellows, who were in jail because they had not looked into the future before they leaped.

H-BOMB MAY NULLIFY WORK OF CHURCH



The H-bomb could nullify in an instant all the work of the Church, according to Baptist George D. Heaton of Charlotte, N. C., in an address before the annual meeting of the International Council of Religious Education. Modern civilization, he said, stands "at a point in history where we no longer have any margin for error, and where a single mistake might be unremedial."

MRS. GEORGE W. MORSE
Churchwoman of New York

I have no doubt you were represented at the conference on the Church and economic life, held in Detroit and sponsored by the Federal Council of Churches. (Ed. Note: Conference was reported in The Witness, March 2). Do I exaggerate its significance when I call it a high point in the expression of a growing sense of responsibility that Christians are feeling toward all the problems of a bewildered world? The appeal by Walter Reuther to "bring Christianity down to earth," with a proposal that labor, management and agricultural leaders meet voluntarily to consider major economic problems, is an S.O.S. and finds response in the hearts of Church people who feel that the Church in its corporate capacity has failed to give the help that is so desperately needed.

As one of your subscribers in sympathy with the high aims and purposes of The Witness, it seems natural to turn to you with the hope that you may appeal to Christians to answer this challenge with courage and wisdom.

MR. F. M. JUDGE
Churchman of Boston

I have just read my Witness for March 2 and I want to congratulate you for running the article by Dr. Bennett, in which he deals with a most difficult subject exceedingly skillfully. Likewise I was impressed by the very fine editorial on the same subject. The two articles ought to provoke a good deal of worthwhile discussion in these trying days when we are seeking answers—or should be to the many baffling problems that confront us.

FRED W. BURGESS
Lay Reader at Villas, New Jersey

As an octogenarian, who has resided in three countries and four dioceses I wish to add my endorsement to the expressions of Mrs. John H. Moore of San Antonio, Texas, regarding the omission of the Te Deum and other parts of the Prayer Book, so that many attending the Episcopal Churches of today know little or nothing of the beauties of the authorized Morning Prayer Service of our Church.

Having started life over again at 80 as a Licensed Lay Reader to conduct the Mission of St. Barnabas-by-Bay, it is my duty and pleasure to conduct the services in accordance with the full intent of the Prayer Book an opportunity denied to many who attend Episcopal Churches today.

MRS. C. E. ROBERTS
Churchwoman of Dallas, Texas

May I commend you for printing the letter of Mrs. John H. Moore (Witness, Feb. 9) which very beautifully expresses my sentiments. I have missed the Te Deum, exhortation, etc. And I Agree there is no more appropriate anthem for Easter than "Christ our Passover", which should be repeated the following Sunday. How much finer were the "alleluia" anthems than the minor pentential strains of "Joseph's Garden". and in the same vein why not scriptural anthems like "Glory to God in the highest" at Christmas instead of blossoms and roses. Well we can hope the costly effort at "education" can accomplish more than just study about the Prayer Book and its history, and result in study of the book itself, and use of it.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Churches In 50 Nations Called To Support H-Bomb Control

Churches Commission In Geneva Urges Petitions To All Governments For Negotiations

★ The commission of the Churches on international affairs has asked key Protestant and Orthodox church bodies in over fifty countries—seven in the Soviet sphere of influence—to press their national governments for "effective multilateral control of armaments" including atomic and hydrogen weapons.

Acting at the request of the World Council's executive committee, the commission, an agency of the World Council of Churches and the International Missionary Council, put forth for consideration four principles. Described as "guides for national policy" and as a measuring rod to judge the action of the respective governments, these principles included the willingness of each government not only to enter disarmament talks, but to "manifestly take the initiative in pressing for such consultations."

The commission also asked its constituency to encourage government actions aiding underdeveloped regions, diverting military expenditures to constructive uses, and intensifying the development of cultural relations.

The commission's action was taken following a statement by the World Council's executive committee declaring that the governments of all nations have "inescapable responsibility at this hour . . . to do everything in their power to bring the present tragic (East-West) deadlock to an end." The statement was featured in The Witness last week.

Text of Communication

We urge that our people in their respective countries convene conferences of representative leaders to press for steps which must be immediately launched in the direction of international control of destructive forces and international cooperation for constructive ends. In such conferences, we suggest consideration of the following proposition both as guides for national policy and as criteria for exercising moral judgment upon governments:

1) That governments not only indicate readiness to enter into international consultations for the international control of armaments but that they manifestly take the initiative in pressing for such consultations.

2) That governments announce a policy of willingness to make a fresh start in these consultations and give tangible evidence of their desire to proceed in a spirit of cooperation and goodwill.

3) That governments, in preparation for and in the process of consultation, repudiate the policy of seeking national advantage to the disadvantage of other nations and, if need be, take reasonable risks to secure international agreement.

4) That governments, by the exercise of their sovereign power, show their intent to delegate such authority to international agencies as may be necessary for effective multilateral control of armaments.

Equally important for consideration by the churches, we are convinced, are the measures by which international cooperation for constructive purposes may be promoted. We suggest particularly that attention be given to:

1) The part of national governments in the United Nations program for assistance to underdeveloped areas.

2) The extent to which government funds now assigned to military preparations can be diverted to measures for promoting comity through mutual assistance on a world scale.

3) The ways in which people and governments, particularly in lands between which serious tensions now exist, can develop harmonious relations through cultural, professional, social and religious cooperation.

CANON HODGSON A VISITOR

★ Canon Leonard Hodgson, professor at Oxford University, arrived in New York on March 8 for a seven-week stay. He preached at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine last Sunday, March 12, and March 14-18, delivered a series of lectures at the University of the South. Other engagements are at Princeton, the U. S. conference of the World Council of Churches at Buck Hill Falls, Pa., Columbia University, Harvard, St. Mark's Cathedral, Seattle, a series of lectures at Seabury-Western.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

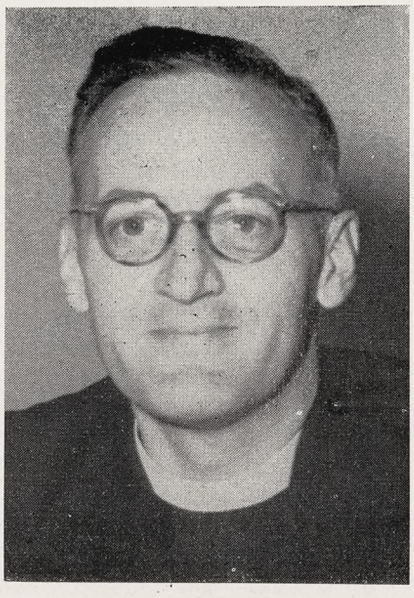
FACTS ABOUT SUPPORT OF THE GENERAL

★ There appeared in Backfire, February 16th a letter by the Rev. DeWolf Perry of Charleston, S. C., appealing for support for theological seminaries in which he stated that the General Seminary was supported by the general Church. The fact is that the Church, either through General Convention or National Council, has never appropriated a cent to the General Seminary or any other seminary. A considerable proportion of the budget of General comes from the Theological Education appeal, personal gifts and grants from various Church organizations. Any misconception that may have been created by Mr. Perry's letter to The Witness and other Church papers is a serious one if it should result in stifling the flow of gifts or in any way undermine the Seminary's appeal to Church people for financial backing.

BISHOPS MEET IN 1951

★ A meeting of the House of Bishops will be held January 9-12, 1951 at El Paso, Texas, with Bishop Stoney of New Mexico and Southwest Texas the host.

DEAN EDWARD WELLES CONSECRATION



★ Dean Edward Welles of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, will be consecrated bishop of West Missouri on April 19 at Grace and Holy Trinity Cathedral, Kansas City. The Presiding Bishop will be the consecrator, with Bishop Spencer, retired bishop of the diocese, and Bishop Powell of Maryland as the co-consecrators. Bishop Ives of Milwaukee and Bishop Lewis of Nevada are to be the presentors, with Dean Sprouse of Kansas City and the Rev. Sewall Emerson of Norwalk, Conn., the attending presbyters. The sermon will be preached by Bishop Bayne of Olympia.

BIG CONGREGATIONS FOR MISSION

★ Overflow congregations attended the regional missions held in Dayton, Columbus and Cincinnati, conducted by the Rev. Bryan Green of England. In Dayton the missioner instructed the congregation to pick up their chairs and go to a Presbyterian Church nearby, which has a greater seating capacity than Christ Church, where the mission began.

BISHOP COLMORE RECOVERS

★ Bishop Colmore, retired bishop of Puerto Rico, who recently suffered a stroke, is making a splendid recovery and his physicians believe that there will be no permanent effects.

BISHOP STEPHEN F. BAYNE of Olympia is to be one of the speakers when the Canterbury Province of New Zealand celebrates its centenary May 16-21 with a Church of England congress at Christchurch

THE WAY GOD WANTS IT

★ Chaplain James Edden of Camp Leroy Johnson, New Orleans, reports the baptism of a child whose mother is a Japanese from Honolulu, the father a white Louisianian, the officient a Negro priest, the proxy godparents all southerners. "All throughout the service," said Chaplain Edden, himself a Negro, "I had a feeling that this is the way God would like for us to live."

CHURCH LEADERS WRITE MURRAY

★ A number of Episcopalians are among the 26 Bostonians to write the president of the CIO, Philip Murray, urging him to stop "star chamber investigations and expulsions." The letter follows:

"It has always been our belief that a service to the millions of American working men and women was a basic service to America itself. The CIO has been in the forefront of the fight to protect the economic security, civil liberties and democratic progress of the American people. The great achievements, of which it is so justly proud, have been won as a militant, democratically-run, forward-looking Congress of free labor organizations. In your own words, 'I recognize, as do all officials of the National CIO, the rights of all individual members of the CIO as private citizens to vote and speak as they please on political questions, and similarly the autonomous rights enjoyed by international unions.'

"We who sign this letter feel deep concern over the recent departure by the CIO from this policy, feel it as a threat to the economic and democratic security of all America. When CIO centralized authority, assumes the right to dictate political policies and political opinions to its autonomous affiliates, overriding the democratic rights of their members to determine those policies; when the CIO undertakes to enforce political conformity by star chamber investigations and expulsions, the whole fabric of American democracy and American freedom has been undermined.

"This policy of CIO civil war is a suicidal one, which can result only in destroying the strength of the CIO. Only two groups can gain from it: first, the reactionary employers who will take advantage of a weakened CIO to break down the living standards of millions of helpless working men and women, a course which threatens the collapse of our economy; and secondly, the fascist, KKK, and allied elements who are already making powerful attacks against minorities, against labor, against freedom of speech, thought and political action.

"For the sake of the entire nation we urge you to return to the basic policy of respect for the autonomous political rights of all organizations and individuals, under which the mighty CIO was one of the greatest strongholds and defenses of American democracy."

The Episcopalians who signed were the Rev. Warren McKenna, the Rev. Kenneth de P. Hughes, the Rev. E. Hastings Smyth, Mrs. John F. Moors, Prof. John Wild of Harvard, the Rev. Robert Muir.

UNEXPECTED GIFT RECEIVED

★ Bishop Barry of Albany received from a total stranger, living in another state, a check for $1,000 with a letter saying that he had heard of the increased budget for the national Church and that he wanted the money used "for your own bread and butter in the diocese." He also received $500 from a member of the Auxiliary, and a double pledge from the Auxiliary itself.

OSMOND H. BROWN MADE CANON

★ The Rev. Osmond H. Brown, rector of St. Philip's, Buffalo, N. Y., has been made an honorary canon of St. Paul's Cathedral, the first Negro to be so honored in the history of the diocese of Western New York. Bishop Scaife in making the announcement said that the appointment was in recognition of his "great contributions to the life of the Church and the community."

PEACE PRAYERS OFFERED

★ Trinity Church, Elmont, L. I., N. Y., was among the Protestant and Roman Catholic Churches to have programs of prayer and meditation for world peace March 10-21. Participating also was the one synagogue in the town.

DEAN FOSBROKE AT SEABURY

★ Dean Hughell E. Fosbroke, retired dean of General Seminary, delivered the third annual Winslow lecture at Seabury-Western Seminary on March 6th. His subject was "The transcendence of God in the Old Testament."

OAKLAND ARGUES BIRTH CONTROL

★ The community chest of Oakland, Cal., was threatened with a serious split or even collapse as the result of a dispute over birth control. Four Roman Catholic agencies walked out of the Council of Social Agencies, a chest supported group, after the Council voted 15-4 to admit to membership the Planned Parenthood League. Later the Catholic agencies said they would be forced to withdraw from the chest drive if funds continue to be granted to the Council, which indirectly aids the birth control agency.

PREACHING MISSION IN QUINCY

★ The Rev. Whitney Hale, rector of the Advent, Boston, is to conduct a preaching mission, March 19-24 at Christ Church, Quincy, Mass.

WHEN THE COUNCIL of the diocese of Florida met at St. John's, Tallahassee, in January, these people saw to it that things ran smoothly: front, Mrs. John E. Perkins Jr., Mrs. Eugene Page, Mrs. Mabel S. Farnsworth, Mrs. Ben A. Meginnis, Mrs. A. J. Henry, parish secretary; back, Arthur Platt, Ben A. Meginnis, Will Marshall Jr., the Rev. Jeffrey Alfriend

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

A NEW CHURCH COLLEGE

★ Daniel Baker College, Brownwood, Texas, became the first Episcopal Church college in the southwest when the property was accepted on March 7 by Bishop C. Avery Mason of Dallas. Properties of the college, appraised at $750,000, will be turned over to the diocese when Southwestern University ends its sponsorship of Baker at the close of the present semester in June. Officials said the college would offer a four-year course in arts and sciences "in the light of the Christian gospel."

MRS. WEDEL ON A COMMISSION

★ Mrs. Theodore Wedell of Washington is one of the delegates of the commission on the life and work of women in the Church which is now in session at the ecumenical institute at Bossey, Switzerland. There are delegates present from nine countries to plan a comprehensive survey of the life and work of women in the churches throughout the world. The commission was created at the Assembly of the World Council that met in Amsterdam in 1948.

ST. PAUL'S CENTER in New Orleans offers children activities ranging from painting classes to motion pictures

COLLEGE WORK CONFERENCE

★ College work in the northwest province was the discussion subject at a college clergy conference at Ames, Iowa, for four days in February. The Rev. LeRoy S. Burroughs, rector of St. John's, Ames, is the provincial secretary for college work and was the convener of the meeting.

Fifteen college clergy and one woman worker came from several states to meet with the Rev. Roger W. Blanchard, National Council college work secretary. The college workers represented a cross-section of collegiate institutions as they represented work being done by our Church at state universities, teachers' colleges and private colleges. Mr. Blanchard discussed programs and methods. Besides being able to answer many questions in the workers' minds, the national secretary was able to sample opinions and ideas on the local campus situation.

The Rev. Charles R. Davies, chaplain to Episcopalians at Kansas State College, Manhattan, Kan., led a discussion period. Under the title "expanding program," Mr. Davies suggested ways in which the worship experience of churchmen reaches into the academic and recreational life of students and faculties.

The Rev. Gordon V. Smith, Bishop-elect of Iowa, concluded one evening's study with a meditation on "the priestly life." Each evening one of the faculty members of Iowa State College presented a paper on his field of study and the relation of the Church's program to it.

UNION SERVICE OF YOUTH

★ The young people of Trinity Church, Pine Bluff, Ark., invited the youth organizations of ten Protestant Churches in the city to unite with them on race relations Sunday. The result was described by a local Presbyterian minister as "the most successful meeting ever held in Pine Bluffs." A hymn-sing followed the supper, after which Walter Trulock, an ex-navy officer, told of his visit to Europe last summer. He based his remarks on the sermon on the mount, and tied in race relations by referring to the movie "Pinky," then showing in a local theatre. "Any superiority of one person over another is because that person has done more with what the Lord gave him," summed up Mr. Trulock.

PETITION ACCEPTED ON MELISH CASE

★ The Appellate division of the New York Supreme Court last week granted permission to file a brief as a "friend of the court" in support of the Rev. John Howard Melish (see Witness, March 9). The appeal on the case is expected to be heard in April.

PROVINCIAL MEETING OF YOUTH

★ Youth of the third province held a conference last month at St. Thomas', Whitemarsh, Pa., with about sixty present. The Rev. J. H. Treder of Hershey, Pa., advisor to the group, spoke on what the Church has to offer youth, and Captain Fred Nussbaum of the Church Army led a discussion on whether or not young people are capable of conducting their own program. A highlight was an address by Bishop Remington on the place young people should have in the life of the Church.

NEW PRESIDENT FOR ST. PAUL'S

★ Mr. Earl H. McClenney Sr. has been named president of St. Paul's Polytechnic Institute, Lawrenceville, Va. He is at present the head of Voorhees College, Denmark, S. C., and takes up his new post April 1. He is a graduate of Talladega College, Greensboro, N. C., holds a masters degree from Cornell and is now a candidate for a doctorate at Penn State. He is a member of various organizations related to college work, including the American Association of University Professors. He succeeds the Rev. J. Alvin Russell, who recently retired because of illness, after serving the institution for many years. St. Paul's was founded by Dr. Russell's father, and has grown under the direction of these two clergymen into what is generally recognized as one of the finest Negro colleges in the country.

BURTON SCOTT EASTON IS DEAD

★ Prof. Burton Scott Easton, 72, for many years professor of New Testament at the General Seminary, died on March 7 of a combination of chronic diseases. He began his work at General in 1919 and continued until his retirement last year. He was recognized as one of the outstanding scholars of the Church and was the author of numerous books on religious subjects.

OLD FOREIGNER STILL THERE

★ A letter received by the National Council from the veteran China missionary, the Rev. Robert E. Wood, tells that St. Michael's Mission, Wuchang, has had "a record year." Baptisms for 1949 numbered 112. At Christmas 186 communions were made at two services, which is "more than we ever had in any past year."

Wood added a postscript to his letter saying, "Believe it or not, in these days when church property is taxed so heavily, St. Michael's is exempt. The reason is that our local government thinks our parish day school is such a good school. The government has sent us an official statement of this exemption."

From another source came the report that when the Chinese priest from St. Michael's went to the government office to confer about school affairs, an official there asked him, "Is that old foreigner still at St. Michael's, and does he still love children?"

KIMBER DEN ELECTED BISHOP

★ The Rev. Kimber H. K. Den has been elected bishop of the diocese of Chekiang, China, succeeding the English bishop, the Rt. Rev. John Curtis. Mr. Den, connected with St. Matthew's, Nanchang, in the diocese of Anking since his ordination in 1920, has been outstanding in social work. He has organized and run schools, rural centers, a leper colony, and more recently a home for the blind. In this work he has received a good deal of support from the U. S., with considerable sums raised through The Witness.

His diocese, on the eastern seacoast south of Shanghai, has 37,000 square miles and an estimated population of 22,000,000.

CLASS GRADUATED IN CHINA

★ Bishop William P. Roberts, writing from Shanghai to the National Council, says that a class of six men have just graduated from the Central Theological School. Two were ordained deacons on January 25 for the diocese of Shanghai and another was ordained for voluntary ministry.

PANAMA CANAL ZONE CELEBRATES

★ The district of Panama Canal Zone celebrated its 30th anniversary at the convocation held last month at Ancon, with clergy and laymen present from Nicaragua, Costa Rica, Panama, Canal Zone and Colombia. People think generally of the district as a tiny one, as it formerly was with 7 clergy, 13 missions and an area of 500 square miles. Today it is a thousand times greater in area and has 23 clergy and 59 missions.

Bishop R. Heber Gooden presided over the convocation and in his address pointed out the real strides made toward self support, and the completion of another church at La Boca, Canal Zone.

UNIQUE CHURCH SERVICE

★ About one thousand people —the biggest congregation there during the past twenty-five years — packed Eastwood Church, Notts, England, for a special "Transport Service," and nearly two hundred had to be turned away.

For the occasion, the church was decorated with a radiator of a double-decker bus, conductors' cash bags and ticket punches.

Nottingham City transport band accompanied the choir of thirty in the hymns, and bus drivers and conductors from Nottingham and district were present in force.

Following the service, the rector, the Rev. Peter Caporn,

YOUNG ADULTS MEET IN LOS ANGELES

★ Fifty delegates from 18 young adult groups in 17 parishes attended a five-hour conference on the organization and program of young adult groups, held at All Saints', Pasadena, Calif., with the Rev. F. C. Benson Belliss presiding. The conference, conducted by the Rev. A. Ronald Merrix, dealt with these questions: (1) What are the chief interests and needs of young adults in the Church and community? (2) What programs have been found successful by groups represented at the conference? (3) What older adults in the Church owe to young adults. (4) What is required to ensure a sustained growth and healthy development of this young adult movement in the Church?

As the conference proceeded it appeared that many were interested in the religious training of children and youth. They wanted to know how to arouse a greater concern for Christian education on the part of vestrymen, the adult membership of the Church, and non-church-going parents. They voiced a need for more knowledge of the Bible, the Prayer Book, church ways and ritual; for warm, genuine fellowship in congregations and parishes; and acknowledged that they should seek to win others to active membership in the Church.

Reports of group programs showed a wide variety of activities, including parties, discussions, work projects, dramatic productions, pageants, a vacation school, packing clothing and food parcels for Europe, corporate communion services, and assisting in parish visitation.

Leading a discussion on what older adult churchmen owed to young adults, Mr. Merrix said that the state of the world and the Church during the past forty years indicated that attitudes of penitence and repentance would be wholesome. The reality of God's forgiveness should be seen in newly-effective Christian living. Older adults could point to the continuing extension of the Church's world mission and the ecumenical movement. There was evidence of a growing interest in Christian education and evangelism. Further progress along these lines, he thought, would come as small groups of persons voluntarily committed themselves to live as full-time Christians, whatever their occupation, accepted the demands of decisive conversion and consecrated churchmanship, issuing in "a life of holy communion with God and with one's fellowmen in God."

In the concluding session, a lively discussion resulted in a proposal for "an organization of some sort to tie parish groups together, arrange meetings for an exchange of opinions on group programs, and how problems had been met and solved." The time had come, it was felt, for the preparation of a manual telling the experiences of others in the organization and program development of young adult groups.

INTERRACIAL SERVICE AT ASCENSION

★ The first of two interracial fellowship services was held at the Church of the Ascension, New York, February 26. The parishes of the New York and New Jersey deanery of the Polish National Catholic Church united with the Ascension for a service consisting of vespers and benediction of the blessed sacrament in Polish, and prayers and hymns in English.

A united Polish choir of ninety voices occupied the gallery of the church and sang the liturgical music. The Ascension choir was in the chancel and sang the processional, recessional, and Balfour Gardiner's setting of the compline hymn, "Before the closing of the day."

The Very Rev. R. E. Zawistowski of Brooklyn, dean of the district, was officient, assisted by the Rev. Joseph Kardas of S. S. Peter and Paul Church, Passaic, and the Rev. Rudolph Zabek, of Holy Cross Church, New York. The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, rector of the Ascension, presided and gave an address of welcome.

The sermon was preached by the Rev. Eugene W. Magyar, rector of the Church of the Holy Name of Jesus (Slovak Old Catholic) in Passaic, N. J. It was an eloquent exposition of the oneness of the two communions.

Other Polish National clergy present included the pastors of churches in Newark, Long Island, Bayonne and Paterson. After the service, the young people's fellowship and the fellowship forum of the church were hosts at a reception in the parish house.

BISHOP CLARK ON LEAVE

★ The Presiding Bishop has granted a six months leave of absence to Bishop Clark of Utah, who recently had a slight stroke while visiting in San Francisco. Bishop Lewis of Nevada is in charge during the period.

EDITORIALS

One World in Christ

"CHRIST for the world we sing" and "Rise up, O men of God" rang out in parish churches all over the land last Sunday morning. That third week of Lent came in with a missionary note as the Presiding Bishop spoke to congregations from coast to coast. They were listening in Maine, in California, in great city churches and in tiny rural ones, and places overseas — the blessed company of faithful people. The Church was really one, like a mighty army, united in one great hour of sharing. What the response was will not be known for a week or so, but it is our earnest hope that it will be more than sufficient for the Church's need in the nation and in the world.

Surely there is a connection between our observance of Lent and our offering for One World in Christ. What does Lent mean but the putting away of some of our inveterate selfishness through individual acts of sacrifice and discipline? Our growing up more and more in the stature of the fullness of Christ in whom self-interest became self-giving? Our renewed zeal and concern for the Kingdom of God in this world, that Kingdom once personified so perfectly in one who was wholly obedient to the righteous love of God even to the cross? If we are having a meaningful Lent, then the call of the Presiding Bishop to give and to sacrifice for the Christian Cause the world over came as a great opportunity. We can and we must deny ourselves that this generation have the word of God preached and taught and practiced more effectively.

Suffice it to say that the membership of this Church has the financial resources to do what is asked of us, but do we have the moral resources? Let's not feel sorry for ourselves on this score of giving, saying, "There are so many appeals." Very few of us have hurt ourselves financially for the sake of the faith we profess. We are far and away from the Biblical standard of a tithe for the Lord. Were we willing even to go half way, to give five per cent to God and his Church, and the other five per cent to the community chest, our school or college, etc.—we would at least double our local and national budgets! This is no longer a time to play with religion and with the Church. The day of decision — are we with Christ or against him—may be nearer than we think.

Rise up, O men of God!
Have done with lesser things,
Give heart, and soul, and mind, and strength
To serve the King of kings.

"QUOTES"

THE character of Christ did not merely consist in the absence of wicked things; it consisted essentially in the daily sacrifices and continual services rendered to God and man; it consisted also in the absence of bitterness and the refusal to take revenge against those who constantly maligned him; it consisted also in his comprehensive mission in which he bore the iniquities of us all. It is not merely because Christ kept the ten commandments that he convinces us of sin; it is because Christ entered fully into the needs of human life; the cry of human misery; the victims of human injustice, and gave himself for them, that causes us to realize that when we have done all, we are unprofitable servants.

Help Wanted

GOD needs our help just as we need his. God's need of help is implied in the gospel for the Fourth Sunday in Lent. The gospel tells the story of the feeding of the five thousand. We are told that Jesus had compassion on the multitude and fed them. Because of the gospel, this mid-Lent Sunday is known as refreshment Sunday. It is unfortunate that this comforting concept of refreshment dulls the call of God for help.

Four thousand were fed with five barley loaves and two small fishes. In addition to compassion, Jesus had power, the power to provide; but he made the provision available to the multitude through the disciples. It was the disciples who made the multitude sit down. It was the disciples who distributed the bread. It was the disciples who distributed the fishes. It was the disciples who gathered up the fragments. Christ had compassion. He had the power to provide, but he used the disciples to make his provision available to the multitude.

The lesson should be clear. God through Christ has the power to provide. Certainly he has compassion for the tense and fear ridden multitudes of today. Certainly he has the power to provide release from fear and tension. Certainly he has the power to provide peace both for men and nations. But the provisions of this bounty, then as now, must be brought to the multitudes through the means of devoted and consecrated men. God needs help. It was true in the feeding of the multitude under the shadow of the mountain side. It is equally true today in the shadow of the H-Bomb. The compassion is his. The power to provide is his. But he needs help! The help you are withholding is the help he needs.

Current Movements and Christianity

THE CHURCH: Ally, Competitor or Both?

By BERNARD IDDINGS BELL
Canon of Christian Education, Diocese of Chicago

CHRISTIANITY consists in knowing and serving God as supremely self-revealed in Jesus the Lord; in being loved by him and loving him; in facing life with and for him bravely and honestly and simply; in rising, by his free gift of help, above life's terrifying brevity and its tragic difficulties; in at least an attempt to obey him and, for his sake, to love the brethren; in being saved by him from self-regard, self-indulgence, self-damnation.

The Church has a place, an important place, in Christianity. The God-appointed function of the Church is to bring human beings to the living and divine Christ and him to them. To this end it has doctrines, ways of thinking about the living and divine Christ; and prayers, ways of conversing with the living and divine Christ, individual prayers and common prayers; and sacraments, ways of being touched by the living and divine Christ; and worship, ways of humbly adoring the living and divine Christ; and activities, ways of bringing the living and divine Christ to bear upon a world spiritually blind and self-malformed. The Church also has, properly, organization and continuity. Christ founded his Church that through it these things, necessary for man's salvation, might be preserved and used for him, by him. The Church is Christ's body, that is to say the instrument he uses wherewith to do his work with men, for men.

The Church is a divinely ordained means toward a divinely purposed end. It is a human brotherhood, to be sure; but it is a fraternity meaningless unless it be given to the Lord for the fulfilment of his redemptive design. In the Church man's desires matter only secondarily. The Church exists to know and do his will, not ours. As his instrument it has significance, dignity, beauty; as anything except his instrument, it is futile, absurd, ugly, and this no matter how wealthy it may be or how fashionable, no matter how beautiful its buildings, how sweet its music, how urbane its eccleciastics, how eloquent its preachers, how well financed its labors, how complacent its membership, how jolly the fellowship.

Means Not An End

THERE has always been, and still is, a tendency on the part of Christian people to forget that the Church is only a means and to exalt it as an end, to make of it a covert in which to hide from Christ, the Hound of Heaven, whose love is so vast in its demands. If one may borrow a figure of speech from Kierkegaard—he employs it in another connection—there is temptation to use the Church prudentially, much as a small boy, when about to be spanked puts napkins in the seat of his trousers lest he face a too direct impact. Or, to change the comparison, we may seek to be inoculated against Christianity with a churchly solution of one part Christianity to ninety-nine parts respectability and good-fellowship. Good-fellowship and respectability are not poison; but they can, and frequently do, so dilute the grace of God as to render it almost powerless.

To the extent that this happens, the Church becomes a substitute for Christianity. A deadly substitution it turns out to be, both for humanity, which needs redemption and finds it not, and also for the Church itself, which is soon, and more and more, regarded by people generally with polite indifference, or even with the kind of contempt expressed in T. S. Eliot's "Hippopotamus." In this poem that sound Christian, Mr. Eliot, is not attacking the Church as the body of Christ, only the Church which has forgotten its purpose and made itself into a false God. That is the sort of Church which "sleeps and feeds at once" and is "wrapt in the old miasmal mist."

The Episcopal Church, by and large, has tended too much to exalt itself and minimize God. This is why it has far less dynamic than one would suppose from observing its statistical strength and its appealing liturgy and its clear and sure theology. Some day it may have a better repute than now it has, when it looks on Christ less timorously and takes itself per se less seriously than is the case at present. The disease of over self-esteem we partly took over from our American founding fathers. In Virginia and environs, in the Colonial period, the Church was scarcely more than a conventional meeting-place of the better-off land-owners; and in the other colonies too it was almost always oppressively respectable. This self-regard grew no less as the non-English immigrants poured in during the 19th century. Episcopalians for the most part came to regard themselves as patricians—middle-class patricians, it is true, but still patricians. It has been hard for us to jump the hurdle of the 18th and 19th centuries and to recover the Christ-centered Anglicanism of an earlier day. We are doing better at it nowadays; but one still finds much too many parishes like the one about which Annette has just written me.

Letter from Annette

Annette is a musician, an actress, a gay and brilliant person, respectable too but happily unaware of it. She came from religious indifference and found Christ three years ago in the Episcopal Church, came to love the Church not for its own sake but for Christ's sake. She married last year and moved to a certain nameless city and to a parish called, let us say, St. Wilfrid's. She wrote me today: "The Church here has everything, from an exquisite chapel to a gymnasium and a manual-training shop for young Episcopalians to enjoy themselves in. There is money all over the place. One feels a bit shabby at worship with neither mink nor Persian lamb. Nothing worth mentioning is done for outsiders. Everyone is as cordial as a glacier, especially toward the working classes and odd ducks like me. It is impressive, all right; but is this the Church? It seems more like a social club. It makes me feel a little sick. Its people love the parish hugely and boast about it; but what it is really for, they seem never to think about."

We all know those parishes. Sometimes, it is true, the gilt is now become a bit tarnished, the whole place redolent of very genteel mothballs, a little musty; but the people love it, gaudy or dingy, much more than they love God. In these all too typical parishes, rich or once rich or wishing to be rich, the Church has become a substitute for Christianity. In such parishes, too, because Christ is "kept in his place," revered but not much listened to, his mystical and revolutionary utterances do not sound too disturbing. If truly heard, they would shock and offend. "It is only Communists and fellow-travelers, surely, who would turn the world upside down." The vulgarity of the gospels is concealed by the quaintness of the King James version; the dynamite of the eucharist is replaced by the easier formalities of morning prayer; the sermons are not disturbing of complacency—the vestries see to that—and few are the clergy who even wish to rebel; the benevolences are sent to remedial rather than reformative good works.

The result is the sort of pseudo-piety vigorously described some years ago by Vida Scudder of Wellesley College: "A Church pleasant-voiced; endangering nothing in particular; an ornament of the Sunday pew; devoted to good causes in proportion to their remoteness; ignorant alike of the ardors of the mystic or the heroisms of the reformer; cheerfully assured that whatever is innocently agreeable is religious; a domestic religion, calculated to make life pleasant in the family circle; curiously at ease in Zion." What happens when the Church substitutes itself for Christ is that the Church becomes a bore or a laughing-stock or both.

I cannot refrain from adding that it seems to me that while the Episcopal Church is now recovering—or we may hope and pray so—from this deadly mistake, the new "ecumenical movement" is plainly being tempted to go in for it in a large way.

Ecumenical Movement

THERE is a tendency in "ecumenical" circles to assume that it does not matter overmuch what people think of Christ, whether he is God redeeming the world or only a super-fine moral leader or even perhaps a neurotic with messianic illusions of grandeur who nevertheless said some right good things. The thing to do is to get everybody into "one big united Church"; that Church will save the world. One catches this note in much of the "ecumenical" promotion, especially in America. One hears it, for example, quiet but really there, in the speeches of Mr. Taft, and militantly in the allocutions of Bishop Oxnam. It appeared also in Dr. Henry Van Dusen's article in "This Week" a short time ago. We need not hesitate, Dr. Van Dusen seemed to be saying, to unite the churches without concern over agreement in doctrine, and this for two reasons. First, the constituent bodies are most of them already interiorly divided on doctrinal matters (as though an evil is made less an evil by magnifying its scope). Second, there are almost no differences among Christians today on really basic matters. It may be that Dr. Van Dusen, sheltered in the Union Theological Seminary, an excellent institution but a-typical in the American religious scene, does not realize that the differences are in fact wide and radical, about such fundamental matters as the deity of Jesus, the essential sinfulness of man and the necessity of man's redemption, the possibility of social peace without divine grace. Just a few little things like these! One is driven to the conclusion that the "ecumenical movement" is in considerable danger of substituting the Church for Christianity, that many of its American leaders have indeed done the substituting already. This seems too bad. It can denature and stultify the most encouraging religious development of this century.

To understand the nature of the substitution of "the community of Christians" for the Lord of all Christians, is to see the folly of it, indeed its blasphemy. "Ecumenicals" are urged to be on guard against it, even if to be Christ-centered slows up "reunion" for a while, maybe for a long while. We of the Episcopal Church should make it plain that we shall be party to no such going off the rails by the "ecumenical" brethren, no matter how much Dr. Van Dusen upbraids us. And we must continue the evangelistic recall of our own communion from a complacent Churchianity to a dependence on and devotion to the living Christ. The world, now hurtling on toward political, economic, moral catastrophe, is going to be saved, if it is to be saved at all, not by the multitude of an uncommitted host nor by the charm of Episcopalians nor by any human device. In that salvation, or maybe in a rebuilding after debacle, the Church can play a mighty part, but only if it stops admiring itself and starts to adore and to obey the most high God.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. What does the group think of Dr. Bell's description of Christianity contained in his first paragraph?
2. What is meant by "the Church is Christ's body"?
3. Discuss life in your own parish in the light of the author's paragraph beginning: "The Church is a divinely ordained means--"
4. Would Annette's criticism apply to your own parish: discuss Dr. Bell's statements that follow the letter.
5. What is the ecumenical movement?
6. Do you think the author's opinions of it are sound?
7. Are there differences among Christians on basic matters?
8. In the light of Dr. Bell's last paragraph, discuss the purpose and function of the Church.

The Meaning of the Creed

The Fifth of a Series for Lent

By JOHN E. HINES
The Bishop Coadjutor of Texas

"WHO WAS CONCEIVED BY THE HOLY GHOST, AND BORN OF THE VIRGIN MARY"

THE next fragment of the Apostles Creed has been a veritable bone of contention for more than a generation for, in it, the modern, western mind is confronted with a decision. It is called upon to confess that when the word became flesh, it became flesh in a supernatural or, at least, out-of-the-ordinary way. For this confession holds that Jesus Christ was "conceived by the Holy Ghost, and born of the Virgin Mary."

Frankly, it has been a long time since the western, modern mind has had to consider judgments in the light of the possibilities of the supernatural. Twenty years ago, men were refusing to do that. At that time, "neo-rationalism," the belief that the human mind possessed all the necessary endowments for the solution of any and all problems, was more than just current, it was totalitarian. At the same time, and as an inevitable corollary, humanism was the accepted religion of the academic world: a creed which was, in reality, creed-less, except that its convictions both started and ended with the inexhaustible quality of the spirit of man. That this might be the kind of universe in which both the unpredictable and the unexpected might happen, was a thesis which men refused to consider as being of acceptable origin. That the seeming invincibility of man's spirit might possibly be due to the mightiness and reality of supernatural antecedents, was a suggestion which was dismissed as unworthy of deliberation. The men, who championed such a conception of man and history, humanistic, seemed totally unconscious that, with it, and if unrelieved, they could conceivably bring their world to the very brink of spiritual bankruptcy, and social confusion. Like the Grand Inquisitor in Brother Kavanaugh, they did not alter their opinion, or change their practice.

Now, men are beginning to see the world with other than the eye of mathematics, and the exact sciences. Great exhibitions of man's own irrationality, have led them to re-examine their thesis of the impregnability of the human mind and the human spirit or of inevitable progress. Once more, men are wondering, because the precision of yesterday has been shattered, perhaps permanently. They no longer live in one world, these men, but in two: the world of the natural, and the world of the super-natural. And they are beginning to understand that man, by definition, is a creature who is both condemned and empowered to live in both of these worlds at once.

The Incarnation

IT is Karl Barth, who points out that when we come to this expression of the Creed, we run straight into something with a double meaning. Not that it is meant to confuse, but that it is of such a constituency that it can be dealt with only by resort to double meaning. For these words point directly to the event of "the Incarnation," but the thing concerning which these words speak is the great mystery itself, that Jesus Christ is the true God and true man. This second fact of the free gift of God's grace is self-revelation: "the word became flesh." The first is the form and manner peculiar to this revelation.

Now, it seems to me that we cannot rightly view particlar events concerning Jesus Christ apart from our whole estimate of him. And, this whole estimate must be formed from all that we can gather that he showed himself to be. It is in this relationship that we must weigh the Virgin Birth of Christ. For we must see it not simply as another birth, but as the historic entrance in time of that which was timeless, and of him who is eternal.

The statement "Conceived by the Holy Ghost" says frankly that the human existence of Jesus as distinguished from all other creatures, had its origin in God, and was, therefore, God's own existence. He was "begotten," not "made."

The words, "born of the Virgin Mary" says that God's own existence in Christ (without compromising that fact that here was the Creator of the heavens and the earth) also has a human-creaturely existence. And the two of them conspire to say, not merely that God and man are near, but that God and man became one, in order that forever man and God can be one, in him, who was so conceived and born. This, is seems to me, is in the nature of "good news." This is the gospel in miniature.

Now, it has often been asserted that the revelation of God, the Incarnation, the unity of Christ being as God and man, can be both represented and believed without recourse to the Virgin Birth. Though not a theologian and certainly not posing as one in this series of articles, I feel called upon to confirm that thesis. The story of God's redemption of fallen man does not depend, for its authenticity, for its validity, upon the historicity of the Virgin Birth. The vital story can be told without it, but it is also a well-established fact that it was not told without it. It is true that the gospel evidences are not overwhelmingly in favor of the Virgin Birth. Neither are they significantly against the holding of it. But, the more one comes to grips with the meaning of the Incarnation, and the significance of Jesus Christ, the more probable, indeed, appropriate, does this method of his entrance into the world become.

Karl Barth makes the point and a good one, namely, that in the story of Jesus' forgiving the sins of the man sick with palsy, and his subsequent command to him to take up his bed and walk, surely the power of forgiveness pronounced by Jesus could hardly be based upon the miracle of healing. Yet, this story cannot be read and adequately understood without this miracle. For the text goes on to say: "That ye may know that the Son of Man hath power on earth to forgive sins," the healing is wrought.

That is likely the relationship of the Virgin Birth to the mystery of the Incarnation. It advertises, dramatically, that which takes place. To quote Barth: "As miracle in general, and now as this special miracle, it is the watch before the door, drawing our attention to the fact that we are here concerned with the mystery, with God's free grace."

Scripture Teaching

IT is important to note that this scriptural passage, the passage concerning the Virgin Birth, did not say anything about a marriage between God and a woman. The expression "conceived by the Holy Ghost" is a statement that, as regards his human existence, Jesus had no father. It speaks, these passages, not about marriage, but rather about creation. It is precisely this creation that takes places in Mary. This is a reflection of God's grace, and freedom. Grace, in the fact that the miracle takes place in Mary; freedom in the fact that it is creation. So, God actually became what we are in order to exist with us, and for us. Not, however, to do what we being human do, but, precisely, to do what we fail to do, namely, his own will, and thus, in our place, in our situation, to be the new man. Before such miracle, a man of faith can only stand in reverence and awe. Skeptics will want to argue, but the man of faith will only say: "I saw a new heaven and new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away" (Rev. 21:1).

Indeed, how else could it be so clearly expressed?

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. What is neo-rationalism?
2. What are some of the "great exhibitions of man's own irrationality"?
3. What is meant by the Incarnation?
4. Do you think the doctrine of the Incarnation can be believed without belief in the Virgin Birth?
5. What does Bishop Hines call "the gospel in miniature"?
6. What does the Bible teach us about the Virgin Birth?

Rev. Samuel Entwhistle's Adventures

By THOMAS V. BARRETT
Chaplain at Kenyon College

"HERE COMES THE BRIDE'S MOTHER"

ISABEL ENTWHISTLE volunteered cheerfully as she stood with Samuel at the vestry-room window. "The wedding rehearsal will be a shambles. After all, Elspeth is a nice girl but her mother runs the garden club with a rod of indignation."

"I wish, my dear," said Samuel from the doorway, "that you would sometimes look on the sunny side of the street. I am sure I shall have no difficulty with Mrs. Hennery Hyphen Hatch."

"You will if you call her Mrs. Hennery Hyphen Hatch the way you always speak of her." Isabel smiled grimly. "Besides it's raining. There is no sunny side."

Dr. Gluck was nibbling on his moustache like a hungry rabbit on a wisp of carrot top.

"This person, Mrs. Hennery Hyphen What's-her-name," he spluttered with imploring eyes, "she would like 'O Promise Me,' 'Ave Maria,' and 'Moonshine and Roses'—on the organ! For a prelude! She told me over the phone."

"Can't you just humor her a little?" asked Samuel. "I think the best approach might be one of - of - discard one and draw one - ha -- ha."

"I would like to discard the whole pack," Dr. Gluck muttered gloweringly. "This soloist they have brought. She has a voice box that is filled with a gravel-like quality."

"Maybe she caught this bug that's going around," Isabel said helpfully.

"It is too rattling for a bug," Dr. Gluck snorted. "Moonshine and Roses!"

"That isn't as bad as the 'Sweetheart of Sigma Chi," Isabel soothed. "Irma Spink wanted that at her wedding."

"I will play only Bach," sniffed Dr. Gluck.

"I really just stopped by for the car, Samuel," Isabel purred. "You won't be using it during the rehearsal will you?"

"No!" Samuel said reluctantly. "But remember, wedding rehearsals do not take very long."

He went into the church to greet the Hennery Hyphen Hatch party. There were eighteen in all not counting Mr. Hennery Hyphen Hatch who didn't count very much anyway.

"Good afternoon, Mrs. Hennery Hy . . . Hatch," Samuel stuttered as Elspeth's mother advanced menacingly down the middle aisle toward him.

"Good afternoon, Mr. Entwhistle," Mrs. Hennery-Hatch boomed. "I wonder if we could move that pulpit thing out of the way for the wedding. You can't see a thing from that side."

Samuel gulped twice and finished with a brave smile. "I'm very sorry, but it's immovable. It's made of solid oak."

"What a pity," Mrs. Hennery-Hatch grieved momentarily at the idea of a solid oak pulpit. Then her large face brightened. "Perhaps a carpenter . . ."

"The pulpit," Samuel said shutting his jaws, "is not supposed to be moved."

"Oh." Mrs. H. Hyphen meditated a moment and veered off in another direction. "We shall want more candles; Some ribbon . . . There isn't much room for palms in there . . . You'd think when they build a church . . ." She wandered off toward the chancel and Samuel made a hasty retreat to the rear of the church.

He introduced himself to the rest of the wedding party which consisted of two lugubrious principals, a covey of bridesmaids, four boisterous ushers, three maiden aunts, a two year old flower girl and Mr. Hennery Hyphen Hatch who reminded Mr. Entwhistle of the flower girl, except that he was a little taller. There was, in addition, a manly female who turned out to be the bridal secretary from Starbird's Department Store.

"We have the music and the order of procession all planned," she announced. "And I do think it's a lovely church for a wedding."

Samuel Entwhistle called on all his resources of dignity. "We have a fairly clear form for all services established by tradition and the Book of Common Prayer," he announced in his preaching voice.

The Bridal Secretary looked confused. "Yes, of course," she agreed. "Now if you'll just step forward, girls and boys . . . no not you Susie . . . you come later. Pair off. And this is the way we walk." She modeled a forward movement up the aisle that reminded Mr. Entwhistle of a movie in which a sinister character with housemaid's knee was always creeping around a castle. The progress of the Bridal Secretary during the next ten seconds was imperceptible.

"I might suggest," Samuel said graciously, "the pace is a bit too slow. We don't want it—funereal do we?" He turned on his after-church-smile. Secretly he thought the Bridal Secretary belonged at Stapleton and DeKalb.

"Oh no, indeed; but solemn and majestic," the Bridal Secretary responded, lunging forward another three and a half inches.

"It's too slow," Mrs. H. H. H. hollered from the chancel steps, "and jiggly."

"I can't go that slow without teetering," said the bestman.

"You come in with me from over there," Samuel reassured him.

"It's too much knee action for me," said an usher. "My knee caps don't work right."

"I think it's lovely," the maid of honor added swooningly.

"Ah, friends, please," Mr. Entwhistle pleaded. "If you'd just line up and quicken the pace I'm sure it will work out very smoothly."

Fifteen minutes later the Bridal Secretary had been outvoted ten to one and had retired to the rear pew to sulk. Samuel wiggled a finger at Dr. Gluck, and the procession began.

On the first try they made the tenth pew from the front before they discovered that Susie had gone into overdrive and pulled up into second place. The effort proved to be too much for she stumbled on the heels of the first usher and bumped her nose on the carpet. After the wailing ceased, a second try came to grief halfway to the transept. Mrs. H. H. H. suddenly discovered that Elspeth was rehearsing her own part.

"Oh no! Oh my, no! Elspeth, dear, it's bad luck. You must just watch." Dr. Gluck kicked the Bourdon viciously and muttered impatiently until mother could persuade a tittering second cousin to walk with father. By that time one usher had disappeared, and Susie was half way up the rood screen. When the cast was reassembled, Mr. Entwhistle gave a brief resume of the procedure, and Dr. Gluck began again. From his place on the chancel steps, Mr. Entwhistle thought the procession resembled a serpent weaving slowly up a forest path. Samuel lifted his eyes to heaven.

"It is too slow," he suggested.

"It looks simply beautiful from here," Mrs. H. H. H. countermanded.

"You'll have to move over this way," Samuel pleaded with the third bridesmaid, "you don't leave any room for the maid of honor."

"If she moves, she's behind a pillar," the second bridesmaid put in.

"Papa you're on the wrong side," Mama shrieked.

"And do try to keep in step, Daddy," Elspeth quivered.

"If I move over here," complained usher number four, "I bump my head on this eagle. Can't we put him in some other nest?"

"That," Samuel interjected, "is the lectern. It would be easier to move you to some other—er—place. Once more please. And quicker."

"It was lovely as it was, I thought." Mrs. H. Hyphen spoke not only to Mr. Entwhistle and the other humans but included all angels, archangels and cherubim.

"Where is Susie?" Elspeth said.

"She's over by the white thing."

"The font," Mr. Entwhistle corrected. "Come back, my child."

At that point, the bestman was sent again on an expedition to retrieve the nomadic usher who was discovered in the basement having a "quick one" with Nelson. Mr. Entwhistle stole a peek at his watch, prayed for patience, wisdom and discretion, and allowed the fourth attempt to stand, even though Papa seemed incapable of handing over the second cousin to the groom without getting his hand caught in the groom's elbow. The whole sequence, Samuel decided, looked like an elementary demonstration of jiu-jitsu.

Since it was then almost six o'clock, Samuel was for terminating the ordeal, but Mrs. H. Hyphen insisted on practicing her own entrance three times to "get the feel of the aisle." After that the soprano with the gravel in her voice box was allowed to run over "O Perfect Love."

Samuel crawled home despondent. But on the morrow the sun was shining and he cheered himself with a verse from a psalm, "Blessed is he who going through the Vale of Baca makes of it a well."

He was horrified however on arriving at the church to find that the Bridal Secretary was in the sanctuary banking potted palms in front of the altar, and that four photographers were setting up equipment all around the pulpit.

After a courteous but, he felt, firm statement on the policy of the church in such matters, the shrubbery was lugged away from the altar, and the photographers agreed to retreat to a second line of defense and take pictures only after the service. Susie was found in the locker room of the gymnasium just soon enough to have her face washed for the sixth time and precisely at high noon the ceremony got under way. Samuel breathed a sigh of relief. The church did look beautiful. Too late, however, he discovered he had missed the photographer from the Beacon who had commandeered the Bishop's chair for his tripod and was waiting eagerly for news, crouched like a panther just in back of the altar rail. Samuel gasped; signaled but to no avail. Then bedlam set in to stay. The other photographers emboldened by their colleague's zeal began to encircle the congregation. The Chronicle man took possession of the font, the Tribune man lay down on the left side of the chancel steps, the Gazette news hawk followed closely on the heels of the bride, and the boy from the Examiner appeared on top of the organ pipes. To make matters still more horrendous Susie loitered on the way, and dropped ten paces to the rear of the procession. Mr. Entwhistle was finished with the betrothal before she came in a bad last. This so unnerved the best man that he dropped both rings, whereupon the whole wedding party bent down in unison as if by prearranged signal. The crack of skull against skull, Isabel Entwhistle said later, was a stunning and comic relief in the midst of an epic of tragic proportions. The ceremony wound up in a fine display of flash bulbs and clicking graflexes which quite obliterated Mr. Entwhistle's benign blessing, and furnished a fitting background to the Hollywood embrace of Elspeth and her supposedly timid spouse. Then Susie fell flat on her little face while trying to climb up the end of a choir pew and Mr. Entwhistle fled to the vestry room.

At the reception afterward, however, he put on his best after-church smile and even wished the bride and groom godspeed, though secretly he doubted whether any marriage so inauspiciously begun could come to any good end.

"It wasn't your fault really," Isabel said on the way home, "but it was the most repulsive ceremony I've ever witnessed. What are you smiling about?"

"Nothing," Samuel answered.

"You're grinning from ear to ear."

"I can't help it," Samuel replied petulantly.

"You look like Martha Raye. Close your mouth."

"It won't close—it's frozen that way. I've been smiling for two hours."

They drove on for a while in silence. "It must be heavenly in heaven," Samuel said smiling happily, "where they neither marry nor are given in marriage."

"You don't have to grin so idiotically about it," Isabel pouted.

Samuel kept grinning. "I think my dear, I am on the verge of an occupational disease. I am not only grinning, my face is twitching."

"Oh Samuel, you darling," Isabel breathed happily. "Let's go to Florida for your needed rest."

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

The Eight Deadlier Sins. By Hubert C. Libbey. Longmans, Green. $1.

A very direct little book on the Prayer Book sins: Blindness of Heart, Pride, Vain-Glory, Hypocrisy, Envy, Hatred, Malice, All Uncharitableness. These are framed between two excellent sermons on The Joy of God and The God of Hope. This is the Bishop of London's book for Lent.

Introduction to the Devout Life. By St. Francis De Sales. Translated and edited by John K. Ryan. Harper. $3.00.

This is a beautifully printed new translation of one of the classics of devotion (first published in 1609). The old translation, edited by Archdeacon Hutchings, has apparently been out of print for some time. Presumably the new translation is somewhat more literal—the old one was a little more Victorian, and it was even paraphrastic and abridged (e.g., the chapter on marriage was cut down considerably). This volume is a welcome addition to the collection of devotional classics which Harper and Bros. are publishing—though not, apparently, making a series of them.

Thirty Minutes to Raise the Dead. By D. R. Davies. Macmillan. $1.75.

Dr. Davies has taken his title from John Ruskin's challenging definition of preaching. These are B.B.C. sermons. The author's position lies somewhere between Niebuhr and Barth, and if one were to criticize anything about the book, it would be that so much time is spent (even the 30 minutes) in raising the dead, that there is no time left to tell the resurrectees what to do next.

Best Sermons, 1949-50 edition. Ed. by G. Paul Butler. Harper. $3.00.

This is a book of valuable content, marred by what seems to this reviewer a vainglorious and presumptuous title. It includes sermons by many men whose names will immediately be recognized as among the notable preachers of our age, and sermons by others less well known in many instances have an equally authentic message. But note how the sermons were selected. The editor sent out thousands of letters to preachers inviting each one to submit his "best" sermon. There are preachers who would not—and obviously some who did not—answer this sort of invitation. It is not the preacher himself who knows what a "best" sermon is. It is only God, who is interested less in the preacher's opinion than in what actually may have happened in the minds and the hearts of humble folk, to whom the real help may come—not from the sermon that was plumed as "best."—W. RUSSELL BOWIE.

The Best of John A. Hutton. Edited by Edgar DeWitt Jones. Harper. $2.00.

The Rev. John Hutton (1868-1947) was one of the great preachers of the Scottish church. This beautiful anthology (176 pages) contains much of his best writing—including several pages from his very important book, The Proposal of Jesus. This is a volume that will interest preachers, but it also ought to appeal to laymen who like good preaching, and also good exposition of the Bible.

Difficulties. Morehouse-Gorham. $1.40.

This book, subtitled "Questions on Religion with Answers by Prominent Churchmen," was published for the Mission to London, held in May 1949. Thirty-five real and searching questions on the Christian faith are posed, but the answers are pathetic. With almost negligible exceptions they are doctrinaire, dogmatic, and obscure; more serious, they fail entirely to either comprehend or meet the lay mind. A sad commentary on the Anglican Church, it is difficult to imagine a weaker presentation of Christianity to men and women seeking a solution of their spiritual problems. As a healthy antidote we suggest a similar book, "Something to Stand On," by Lewis L. Dunnington, published by Macmillan.—J.T.

Signs of Hope in a Century of Despair. By Elton Trueblood. Harper. $1.00.

In the fourth of his "little books," Dr. Trueblood has sought to show that the realistic appraisal of our contemporary situation which he gave in his now famous "Predicament of Modern Man" does not preclude the recognition that there are indeed "signs of hope" which foreshadow the possibility of a new age, in which Christian faith will once again have its place and part. The signs are four: the ecumenical movement, by virtue of which Christians of all varieties recognize that they are part of a single enterprise which is world-wide in its sweep; the emergence of a new theology, in which a realistic view of man's lot is coupled with a profound trust in the righteousness and love of God; the increasing participation of the laity in the life and thought of the denominations; and the development of "cells" or small societies of "redemptive life" in all countries and amongst all groups. Anglicans may be grateful that William Temple plays a large part in Dr. Trueblood's revaluation. This is a book which clergy and laity alike should read and ponder.—W. NORMAN PITTENGER

China Shakes the World. By Jack Belden. Harper. $5.00.

The author of Retreat with Stillwell has written an exceedingly interesting and convincing account of what has happened in China since 1946. Mr. Belden dates the Chinese Civil War as beginning in 1946, but this is much too late and is only a minor example of one evident weakness of the book: the issues involved in the struggle for China are oversimplified. But even so, the author knows what the issues are and he presents them in a lively fashion. One wishes that this book might be circulated among certain members of the U. S. Senate. It might divert their attention from Formosa to a more realistic view of the China situation.—A. C. L.

Call to Christian Action: By D. R. Sharpe. Harper. $1.50.

It was H. G. Wells who once wrote, "Imagine what it would be to live in a world gone suddenly sane." The reviewer thought as he read this book, sanity is sometimes restored by shock treatment. This is a deliberately shocking book, with sanity as its objective. It can only come as the Church re-adopts Jesus' answer to life—from which it has gone far astray. So the author implies, and to say that he "minces no words" is to put it mildly. In very few words, and in clear and unmistakable English, he sets forth what many have been thinking. His diagnosis of our civilization is sympathetic but as clean and relentless as that of a surgeon confronting a diseased body. The subjects of his chapters give clue to his thought: "Why does Protestantism hesitate; the Church must understand the social and economic causes of sin and misery; must bring the judgment of conscience upon society; must establish friendship for labor; must establish a world Protestant union."

To attempt to disparage his tenacious emphasis on the primacy of the social implications of Christianity today would be sorry quibbling. None can refute his main thesis that the "Kingdom of God is the most revolutionary concept of history." The product of a troubled but mature, devout and confident mind it should be read—and heeded.—J. T.

said: "This is not a 'stunt' service at all. It is merely an attempt to bring to urban areas what rural areas have always had in their harvest festivals. We have already had a 'harvest of the mines' service, and the next one, to be held in April, will be an industrial service, when I will try to decorate the church with appliances used in industry."

A few days before the Transport Service, the rector received a vote of confidence from his parishioners after twenty-eight members of his church council, who did not approve of special services, had resigned in protest.

UNIQUE ORDINATION IN VERMONT

★ John M. Thomas, who has been the president of four colleges, an officer of an insurance company, an author, and pastor of a Presbyterian Church, is to be ordained deacon in the diocese of Vermont on April 23. what a gap there is between the working people and the churches," said the speaker. "Last summer the Foundation sent 17 people to Europe to gauge sentiment toward the churches. Workers said they thought churches were a kind of museum and certainly not interested in their struggle."

CRIMINAL ACTION THREATENED

A recommendation that criminal action be taken against the treasurer of Logan County, Colo., for refusing to pay the salaries of two Roman Catholic nuns teaching in the public schools at Fleming, has been made by the attorney general of the state. The treasurer, W. F. Alexander, has refused to honor vouchers to pay the nuns, pending the outcome of a suit by a taxpayer who claims that persons in religious garb should not be allowed to teach in the public schools.

URGES TRAINING FOR POLITICS

Church colleges must train students for political leadership as well as for Christian service in other areas of life, Governor Youngdahl told a conference meeting in Columbus, Ohio.

PRESBYTERIAN GROUP HITS ECONOMIC STATEMENTS

Twenty-two board members of 2nd Presbyterian Church, Knoxville, Tenn., have rebuked the Federal Council of Churches for a stand taken by a Council group on social controls. Clifford E. Barbour, moderator of the Presbyterian Church in the U. S. A., is pastor of the parish.

Specific target is a report recently adopted by the Council's second national study conference on the Church and economic life held in Detroit (Witness Mar. 2). The material in the report which is objectionable to the 2nd Presbyterian officers reads in part:

"We seek the use of a price system which has been strengthened in its operation and corrected in its abuses through various social controls. Some of the most crucial controls are in the area of stabilizing incomes through regulation of the volume of money in the economy and regulation of government's taxes and expenditures . . . We cannot, for example, talk realistically in terms of restoring an unregulated, competitive price system in America."

Also criticized by the Presbyterian group was this portion of the report: "We recognize that the extensive use of taxation to reduce inequalities that now exist is a desirable procedure from an economic and Christian perspective."

CATHOLICS START COOP HOUSING

A cooperative housing project that will make homes possible for 250 lower-income families has been started by the people of St. Mary's, Roman Catholic parish of Bloomington, Ill. Members will achieve ownership by a down payment of $300 and $50 a month for 25 years.

OPPOSE ENVOY TO VATICAN

About 400 Methodist ministers and laymen took time out at a retreat at Hattiesburg, Miss., to send a telegram to the Secretary of State requesting that "no ambassador be appointed to the Vatican or to any other Church."

SENSATIONAL PROPOSALS STIR METHODISTS

George Stanley, prominent Methodist layman of New York, and the author of books on how to run churches, was the headliner at a dinner in honor of Pastor James L. Robertson of Richmond's Highland Park Methodist Church. He said that men and women should be segregated during services; that ministers should be paid piece-work, i.e., according to the number of people in the congregation. He also recommended symphony orchestras in place of choirs, and the ringing of the churchbell at regular intervals during services to attract late-comers. Services on Sunday, he said, should be from 11:30 to 3, and board members for churches should be elected every two months. He warned against eye strain from light reflected from the domes of bald-headed preachers, whereupon he presented Pastor Robertson with a toupee. At this point he pulled a pair of scissors from his pocket and cut the pastor's tie in two. At that point a white-coated "keeper" came rushing in and carried Mr. Stanley off.

A gag of course, with "Mr. Stanley of New York" actually K. V. Hoffman, associate editor of the Richmond Times-Dispatch.

VIDA D. SCUDDER
Churchwoman of Wellesley, Mass.

Congratulations on your March 2 number. I think it is one of the best examples of religious journalism that I ever saw. Some people may find it partisan but I don't think any clergy serving in China will do so, and I agree with you in the adjective "brilliant" for the article by Bishop Hall of Hong Kong. My Chinese correspondents among missionaries are perforce reticent but I think they are all excited and happy and relieved by the change from the old regime.

W. J. BARNDS
Layman of Lincoln, Nebraska

Since Lent 1948 I have been collecting pictures of bishops of the Church. I now have pictures of the 494 bishops consecrated since Bishop Seabury except:

R. W. Barnwell, Alabama, 1900-1902; F. T. Taylor, Quincy, 1901-1903; B. D. Tucker, South Virginia, 1906-1930; E. J. Knight, Western Colorado, 1909-1916, Maine, 1916-1940; W. C. Brown, Virginia, 1914-1927; W. T. Summer, Oregon, 1915-1935; F. T. Touret, Western Colorado, 1917-1919 Idaho, 1919-1924.

If any of your readers could give me pictures of these Bishops for my collection, I would appreciate receiving them at 2325 South 24th St., Lincoln 2, Nebr.

GEORGE TUNKS
Layman of Philadelphia

The February 16 number of The Witness was the best I have ever seen and I have been a subscriber for a good many years. I want to congratulate you for every article in it: the editorial on the Atoning Life; and the contributions of Mrs. Pierce, Bishop Hines and Clifford Durr.

MARY K. SIMKHOVITCH
Churchwoman of New York

The review appearing in The Living Church of February 12th of Professor Nash's great book "The Atoning Life", the Presiding Bishop's choice for Lenten reading, will be challenged by all those who knew Dr. Nash and who learned from him the basic law of love in every relationship, a law which alone meets the needs of the individual soul and all the exigencies of history. His vast learning, his ascetic personal life, his great gifts as teacher and preacher, his profound reverence, made a dent upon those who shared his friendship (and they were many) and gave them a sense of direction, a strengthening of purpose and an indelible and growing faith.

The controversies of the period in which this book was written (1908) were not the controversies of 1950. History has moved swiftly. Archbishop Temple would have understood Professor Nash's book. Would that these two great men were here now in our time of crises and judgement.

M. R. E. JONES
Layman of New York

If the other writers come up to the standard set by Mrs. Pierce in her article on the Peace Movement, your series this Lent will be very fine indeed. I have never considered myself a Pacifist, nor do I now, since I can think of occasions when I would go to war. I believe Fascism had to be crushed. Also were I a Chinese I would be on the side of the People's Government. But in spite of this, I think the world situation today, with its armament race which many mean the end of everything living, may very well compel all of us to be absolute Pacifists.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Providence Counciling Center Fills a Great Need

Grace Church Now Ministers to People Troubled in Various Ways

By CHARLES F. BROOKS
Assistant at Grace Church

★ The counseling center of Grace Church, Providence, has served several hundred people since it opened a year and a half ago. People have come with their difficulties from all over Rhode Island from Episcopal parishes and other denominations. Many have had no religious affiliation at all. Individual ministers have come to talk over problems of pastoral counseling. Ministerial groups have held conferences with the director, and the Rhode Island Council of Churches is considering methods to provide pastoral counseling.

Problems concerning marriage and divorce head the list. A national weekly, in a current series of articles investigating this subject, has startled itself, and its readers, with its findings. The underlying causes of divorce brought out in these articles are familiar to any counselor. The counseling center is concerned with root causes, hoping in individual cases, that the parties concerned can face them, and make a fresh start towards happiness.

Growing out of marital unhappiness, there is an ever increasing amount of children's problems. Tension and friction between parents causes anxiety and unhappiness in the child. Divorce divides the loyalty of the child and prevents him from developing a well integrated, confident personality.

Cultural Problem

In an industrial area such as Rhode Island, differences in cultural background often contribute to children's problems. It was found during the war that men from certain racial backgrounds could not face the gruelling requirements of war. Their parents coming here from Europe, beginning in poverty, tried to give their sons every cultural advantage. In so doing they often overprotected their children from the rigors of daily living. As these children reached maturity it sometimes prevented them from being able to assume their proper role in family life. In some cases the parent being used to the cultural patterns of Europe resisted the efforts of their children to assume American habits. The result often was the alienation and estrangement of parent and child.

In a community such as Rhode Island with its old tradition of Protestantism, and its present strong Roman Catholic population, religious differences seriously affect marriage. Even in homes where parents are happy problems concerning children arise. Our modern world is muddled and confused and its morals are lax. Parents desiring to do a good job with their children find influences outside the home difficult to contend with.

Because of the central location of Grace Church many people have read the signs outside the church inviting anyone to use the counseling center. They have brought in people with serious problems who have not known where to go, or to whom to turn. People considering suicide have been helped, and directed to channels which have reoriented their lives.

Unmarried Adults

The young unmarried adult runs into many difficulties. By talking with someone who is friendly and understanding he usually manages to make a good adjustment. All these problems are only a part of what comes regularly to the counseling center.

We could be asked what is it a church counseling center does which other agencies do not do. The reply is found in the pages of the New Testament. Jesus said, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world": and St. Paul says, "My grace is sufficient for you." These words were translated into action in the lives of the apostles. By the power of God, they threw off the shackles which seem to chain us. In the midst of trials and tribulations, as great as any we face, they lived lives free from guilt and anxiety, fear and worry. They triumphed over spiritual and physical difficulties.

It is not our purpose to "preach religion" to those who come to us. We take men as we find them. We hope that the final result of our efforts may be for the individual a greater awareness of the healing, forgiving, cleansing, life-giving power of God.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

FLETCHER PREACHES AT HOLY TRINITY

★ The Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, professor at the Episcopal Theological School, is giving a series of sermon-lectures at Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, on religion and civil liberties. The first was last Sunday when he spoke on Roman Catholic and Protestant opinions, next Sunday it will be on the orthodox view; truth rather than freedom, and the final lecture on April 2 will be on the liberal view that freedom leads to truth.

EVENING SERVICES BY LAYMEN

★ The men's club of Grace Church, Chadron, Nebr., is sponsoring the Sunday evening prayer services. The series "Current Movements and Christianity" is being used for the lecture each week, followed by discussion.

WINDHAM HOUSE EXPANDS

★ Windham House, graduate training center for women preparing for professional Church work, located up-town New York City, will be able to increase its program through the acquisition of the building next door, so that a new chapel, additional bedrooms and other needed facilities are provided. The Presiding Bishop dedicated the new building and the chapel on March 22. Mrs. Sherrill poured tea at a reception following the dedication service, and Mrs. Arthur M. Sherman, executive secretary of the Woman's Auxiliary, and Miss Mary E. Ladd, former director of Windham House, attended.

The additional building was made possible by a $90,000 grant to Windham House from the United Thank Offering. The House is supported by the National Council. At present there are 21 graduate students and a staff of three at the House. Students are from Vermont to the Philippines, Florida to India, all of them college graduates aged 21 to 41. Windham House has more than 300 alumnae serving the Church in various parts of the country and overseas. Windham House was established in 1928 by the women of the Church as a special thank offering in memory of the late Presiding Bishop Daniel Sylvester Tuttle.

REV. JOHN PAUL JONES URGES TOLERANCE

★ "Do we really believe we can lessen the danger of subversive ideas by refusing employment to people who hold them, or putting people in prison?" asked the Rev. John Paul Jones, pastor of the Presbyterian Church of Bay Ridge and president of the Brooklyn division of the Protestant Council, in a sermon at a community Lenten service in the Church of the Holy Trinity, Brooklyn. "Do we realize the danger caused by making people timid about all ideas and their discussion? Would it really be a wholesome atmosphere for a democracy to prevent people from knowing or studying ideas, customs or political institutions that happen to be disapproved by a majority at a given moment?"

Citing an earlier period in American history when extreme intolerance flared out against the Mormons, Jones said, "Now we look back with shame on an episode when public opinion lost all perspective and indulged in brutal actions out of all proportion to the ideas held by those attacked."

"Many people find it easy and patriotic today to indulge in being simply anti-communist," continued Dr. Jones. "When you ask them the things they are for, you find them at a loss. They don't know. In the final analysis it may well prove, when we all come before the judge of all the earth, that a communist, who may even be declared wrong in all his opinions, will nevertheless receive God's mercy because he felt indignation against injustice and cared passionately enough to try to do something about it. Too many Christians seem to expect to escape divine condemnation for what they have done simply because they have done nothing. Our real condemnation as Christians may well prove to be that we have been luke-warm about little."

"People of good will today must substitute something more vital for the present blind opposition and reliance on armed might. We are in a time of profound change, much of which is inevitable and cannot be reversed or checked. Change breeds fear and fear breeds resistance. The defense of the American way of life cannot be merely blind resistance to change. It requires a more adequate demonstration of our true strength that will make our good side more attractive to others. We must so live that other nations will trust us, admire us, and want to copy our ways."

The course provides for six discussion group meetings. Seven pamphlets are provided, and the course is a popular presentation of the material in "the Holy Scriptures," by Robert C. Dentan. The pamphlets are titled, God in the Bible, the make up of the Bible, the Ministry of Christ, the prophets still speak, Christ in the Bible, the beginnings of the Church, and a leader's guide.

KIMBER DEN'S WORK GOES ON

★ A communication has been received from the Rev. Kimber Den, just elected a bishop, informing us that his work with orphans, refugees, lepers and the blind will continue, regardless of his new responsibilities. He presents us with a budget for the Christian Rural Service Union, broken down under the following heads: medicine, $1,000; agriculture, $1,000; education, $720; social welfare, $1,080; evangelism, $360; administration, $1,000 (with no wage whatever for himself included); production, which means handicraft and shop work, $1,080, and $760 for emergencies. Thus he offers the very moderate budget of $7,000 for a phenomenal and many-sided work, covering a year's time.

The bishop-elect informs us that he is receiving generous support from people of other Churches, notably the Church of the Brethren, but that since the end of war-days, with its emotional appeal, contributions by Episcopalians have come to a virtual standstill.

"We need your continuous interest and guidance," he writes, "in this worthy cause."

If there are those among our readers who care to contribute to Kimber Den's work, please make the check payable to The Witness, writing "Kimber Den fund" in the lower left hand corner. Donations should be sent to The Witness, Tunkhannock, Pa. As soon as a sufficient amount has been received we will forward it to him, either airmail or cable.

DISCUSSION GROUP AT VILLAS, N. J.

BISHOP CRAIGHILL TAKES PARISH

★ Bishop Lloyd Craighill, bishop of Anking, China, from 1940 until his retirement at the recent General Convention has become rector of St. James, Anne Arundel County, Maryland, which includes St. James Church, Herring Creek and St. Mark's Chapel, Tracey's Landing. Bishop and Mrs. Craighill will occupy the commodious rectory of the parish and may be addressed at Lothian, Md.

St. James is a beautiful surviving Colonial parish church of a group founded in Maryland by legislative action in 1692 and supported at that time by a head tax throughout the community of 40 pounds of tobacco annually. Bishop Thomas Claggett, first bishop of Maryland was rector of St. James when, in 1792, he was elected bishop and was consecrated in Trinity Church, New York, becoming the fifth in the American episcopate.

COMMENT PROMPTED BY HUNTER ARTICLE

★ The article on Peace Cults by Dave Hunter (Witness, March 9) prompted a Chicago subscriber to send in a clipping from a local paper. It seems that the book by Gretta Palmer, "God's Underground" is often called "God's Underworld" by confused book buyers. Which reminded her of this classic in confusion: a customer went to a Boston bookshop and asked for "A Piece of My Mind" by Rabbi Sheen, confusing the book by the noted Roman Catholic priest, with the book by the late Rabbi Joshua Liebman, "Peace of Mind," whereupon the clerk inquired, "Do you want the Catholic or the Jewish version?"

METHODISTS DONATE A CHURCH

★ A good example of Christian brotherhood in actual operation has intrigued a number of Detroiters in the Joy Road-Southfield area lately. This section of the city is not a new mushroom growth, but it is only comparatively recently that intensive development has taken place. Some time ago, St. Bartholomew's Church, a parochial mission of St. Matthias', was established and eventually settled down to having services in a rented store building. The services were mostly conducted by lay readers, the most recent being Mr. Walter Keip, an able and experienced layman who has served in many diocesan missions.

Not long ago, St. Andrew's Methodist Church, in the same neighborhood, completed a fine new brick edifice next door to its former quarters, a small frame chapel. They had noticed the small store down the road where the people of St. Bartholomew's were worshipping until they could build their own church. So when St. Andrew's moved into the new building, the Rev. William D. Mercer of St. Andrew's offered the vacant chapel to St. Bartholomew's. The offer was quickly accepted, and nowadays at 11 A. M. on Sundays, both congregations hold services in buildings side by side, in perfect harmony, each group having accommodations adequate to its present needs.

Hayneworth, John Q. Beckwith, Thomas S. Tisdale and Henry Powers.

Pearce of the University of Alaska was hunting caribou, which was in season, when he was suddenly charged by the moose and he shot in self defense. He reported the illegal killing to the marshal who ordered the carcass sent to the hospital.

Real Partnership

ONE of the happier turns of thought in the field of psychiatry in the last few years has been the discovery that in the service of humanity the Church is not the mere handmaid of psychiatry, but a partner, and an experienced one. The eager intellectual humility of hundreds and hundreds of seminary students visiting and studying at mental hospitals scotched the idea that religion was harmful to mental health; and psychiatrists began to admit that it very possibly could be helpful; many have gone beyond that point of thought now and consider it essential.

A leader in this point of view is Dr. Hiram K. Johnson, of the Rockland State Hospital, New York. Some years ago he began to call in a group of the local clergy for consultations; and in him they met, to their surprise, a devoted churchman and an ardent student of liturgics. Among other surprising things they observed were the fact that most religious maniacs have had almost no religious training at all; and that some of the most anti-religious doctors were the most anxious to talk about it. Certainly one thing the doctors learned was that the clergy are not easily shocked.

As Dr. Johnson points out, the Church has a role to play which is of basic importance, and it should stick to it. While doctors and clergy should mutually encourage and instruct each other, what normal Church people need in the pulpits is not amateur psychologists, but professional theologians.

An example of the closer relationship of psychiatrists and clergymen is shown by the picture on the cover this week. It is a group picture taken at Rockland after a meeting in which representatives of both groups took part. Dr. Johnson is in the center with his hands crossed. Beside him, holding a book, is the Rev. Ernest Churchill, the rector at Pearl River, N. Y., who is now also Protestant chaplain at the hospital.

Also those who saw the prize-winning movie, The Snake Pit, will be interested to know that Juniper Hill of the motion picture is Rockland State Hospital where Dr. Johnson is acting clinical director.

"QUOTES"

THERE are many who possess farms and fields, but all their anxiety is to make a bathhouse to their mansions, to build entrance courts and servants' offices: but how the souls of their dependents are cultivated they care not. If you see thorns in a field, you cut them down and burn them; but when you see the souls of your laborers beset with thorns and cut them not down, tell me, do you not fear when you reflect on the account which will be exacted from you for these things?

Maybe You Agree

A FRIEND of The Witness has written to suggest an article on evangelism through Church periodicals placed in public libraries. What's more, he acts on his own suggestion by placing a subscription for his local library.

Naturally we like the idea, for getting people to read any Church magazine is an exceedingly tough job. So we suggest not only libraries but other places where people gather for relaxation and reading. One of our editors stayed over a week-end recently at a YMCA. The magazine table at this Christian institution was covered with magazines of all sorts, except there was not a single religious journal in the lot. This is equally true generally of clubs, doctors' offices and other places where people wait their turn to see the man behind the closed door.

So we hope many of you will act on the suggestion of our friend; send us $4 for a subscription for your public library, the YM or YW in your community, or any other place where you think it would do a job of evangelism. Or if a place does not come to mind, we will select one for you if you will send the check to The Witness, Tunkhannock, Pa.

281 & Urban Churches

WE note with satisfaction the definite attention which the National Council is now giving to the planning of thorough surveys of the conditions and needs for the Church's work in specific areas, as recommended by George Wieland of the home mission department. There is particular and pressing need for such surveys in the depressed areas of our large cities—as we noted and illustrated at length in an editorial a few weeks ago.

This work which the Church does—or, more often, fails to do—in the depressed areas (slums to you) of our cities is a work that can reveal to us more clearly, and even spectacularly, than anything else in the Church's ministry just what the real job of the Christian Church is. We can perceive here more simply than anywhere else what are the social implications of the gospel and get glimpses, close at hand, of the real enemies of Christianity, naked and unashamed. The heart and the method of our Lord's gospel is summed up in his parable of the sheep and the goats. "When saw we thee an hungered or naked or sick or in prison and ministered unto thee?" This is his picture of the nature of the Incarnation; to carry on where physical evolution seems to leave off—to make the unfit fit. The old Hebrew prophet's rhetorical question, "Can the Ethiopian change his skin or the leopard his spots; then may ye do good that are accustomed to do evil," becomes no longer rhetorical to those who have seen with their own eyes the unfit become fit and have had the great good luck to be among God's instruments in the performing of this miracle—as has every devoted worker among the folk of our urban slums.

Of course the average nominal Christian in today's world takes no stock at all in the notion that the eternal ever makes direct entrance into individual or community life—any more than did the frank, forthright theories of Karl Marx. Long forgotten by him are the authentic histories gathered by Harold Begbie a quarter-of-a-century ago in his "Twice-Born Men." Such a forgetting is, of course, inevitable in a world that has cut itself off from any vital connection with the spirit of the eternal and has ceased to measure its civilization by the standards of Christ; that has given greed a free hand in economic and industrial life and is still worshipping brute force as the arbiter of men's destinies. Such a world could not be expected to believe that God would be concerned with the direct re-making of men's lives, either spiritually or economically, for it is this very world and generation of ours that has filled our great cities with human wreckage beyond anything that the Christian West has ever known before. However—thanks be to God—there are genuine Christians and other men of vision and faith who still live in today's world of force and timid sophistication. And the Christian Church is still, in some measures, a going concern, bearing witness to the all-but-forgotten realities of the Spirit.

We conceive it to be the first duty of the Christian Church to salvage and redeem this wreckage of the bodies and souls of our Lord's children and to put the weight of her influence into every movement for economic reconstruction based on the Master's principle of the more abundant life for all classes and races without respect of persons or properties.

In all the great cities of the world today we see posed for us the central problem of the gospel in our generation—the insistent demand that the unfit shall be made fit to survive in this world and in the family our Lord lived and died to create. The human tragedies of our cities—which call out to the Church to do something about them—constitute the same problem that we see also in every suburban parish and rural area. But in the cities they are intense and concentrated and the picture they make is more vivid than it is in any other milieu of the world today. If we can realize just what is at stake, spiritually, in the lives of the underprivileged of our great cities and towns and see clearly what our Lord Christ would have us do about it, we shall the more certainly recognize our need to put first things first also in our parishes and in our scattered rural missions. There will then be less machinery and more evangelism; less temporizing and more moral courage; less concern with numbers and more intensive pastoral care and gospel teaching, to guide the souls and bodies of our people into a genuine fellowship with all nations and races and with our Lord in his Church.

Prepared for a Journey

By JOHN ELLIS LARGE
Rector of St. Andrew's, Wilmington

I DON'T know what paper it was scissored out of, because only the main paragraph of the whole clipping was mailed to me. But it was obviously part of a "funeral parlor" ad. (How I yearn for the old days when an undertaker was an undertaker and not a mortician possessed of slumber chambers!)

It was the following two sentences which made me feel a bit queasy. It is the kind of sentiment which will yet give me ulcers. Here we go: "We feel that we are preparing the loved one for a journey. Rely on us then, to do all that is humanly possible for the peace and comfort of the voyager."

If the dead friend was a Christian, then the "journey" is one for which he was preparing throughout his earthly life. The embalmer can clearly have no part in it at any point whatsoever. His part can go no farther than the physical care of the empty shell from whose tired confines the eternal spirit has already departed on the real journey. We can prepare the tenantless body for the trip from the Church to the graveside. The desire to do that is perfectly normal and understandable. And in that preparation, the funeral director can be of aid and comfort.

But his concerns and his powers end there. And as far as the mere body is concerned, our Christian concerns and powers end there also. To glorify the empty shell is sheer paganism. It's like wasting time glorifying the old house from which our beloved neighbor has already moved. True, the now-empty house has its lovely memories, but if the lovely friendship is to continue, our attention must be focused on the neighbor's new dwelling! And the contractor re-painting the exterior of the old house has no connection with your friend's present home. Neither, it follows, does the embalmer have anything to do with the heroic journey now being undertaken by the soul of your deceased friend—nor with the dwelling-place where that gallant soul shall be renewed and reclothed in a spiritual body!

At least, I'm glad that the undertaker in the ad can be relied on to do all that's humanly possible for the "voyager." The human things are blessedly gracious at any time. But at a Christian burial, our chief concern is for the divine possibilities. We believe that "with God all things are possible." That's why traditional Christianity has always had prayer for the dead. We love and care for the living and the dying at all times, but our chief concern at a funeral is to pray for the friend embarking on a divine journey as compassionately as we always used to pray for him back in the days when he embarked on human journeys. That's why the creed talks of "the communion of saints"—as well as of saints-in-the-making.

Funeral directors are a valid part of modern life. So are clergymen, I trust. But, just as I wouldn't presume to embalm a body, so do I wish that some of them would stop their pious uttering of presumptious nonsense about how they can prepare deceased "voyagers" for spirited "journeys"!

PSEUDO-SCIENTIFIC PSYCHIATRY: Ally, Competitor or Both?

By HIRAM K. JOHNSON, M.D.
Acting Clinical Director of Rockland State Hospital, Department of Mental Hygiene, State of New York

IT is frequently alleged that psychiatry is invading the field of religion and is attempting to take over some of its customary activities.

First of all it must be granted that this charge can never be brought against the psychiatrist when he is functioning as a purely medical specialist and where using rigorously scientific methods he has worked out such medical triumphs as the malarial treatment for paresis and the various shock treatments. But psychiatry is a broad term and also embraces the many psychoanalytic methods which have become so important since the age of Freud.

In defense of psychoanalysts collectively, one must face the fact of a weakness of the influence of the Church in certain areas during the past half century. This has produced a sort of vacuum into which a skilled and scientifically oriented counselor was bound to step, to diagnose, treat and if possible to heal the conflicts and despairs that dog mankind at every age. It is only by accident that many of his aims chanced to be good and that most of the symptoms he has attempted to treat; despairs, anxiety, apathy, hostility, vagaries within the sexual sphere, have since time immemorial been classified as bad and were the normal province of the religionist.

Again in defense of the psychoanalyst it must be affirmed that he has always at least tried to be scientific and has jealously guarded his scientific status.

The scientific method is concerned with the systematic observation of facts and the assimilation of these facts into flexible explanatory and working hypotheses. Value judgments and such terms as "good" or "bad," strictly speaking, should have no place in the vocabulary of scientific disciplines. The complication has arisen from the fact that the psychoanalyst is primarily a healer and therefore must consider neurosis bad and recovery good, and depending largely on his school of thought and training, will set up goals of the normal which he hopes his patients will achieve.

One feature of almost all schools of psychoanalysis, arising possibly from the circumstances of its origin, is the stressed importance of interpersonal relations, how the individual acts with people, how people, notably parents and key personal contacts during the formative period, have helped to shape him into what he is. When the psychoanalyst judges such personality traits as seclusiveness, suspiciousness and shut-in tendencies as bad and their opposites as good, he feels that such judgments are completely exhausted by interpersonal considerations which he regards as final facts not subject to further analysis.

Now it should take little effort to convince the thoughtful student of philosophy and religion that interpersonal attitudes, our attitudes towards people and the effect they have upon us, are not final facts but the resultant or at least the reflection of basic religious and philosophical attitudes. People and events are not ends in themselves but symbols of problems which are far deeper and fundamental, such problems as the meaning of life and the significance of man and his place in the cosmos. To be sure the exploration of such problems is not in the spirit of the age, and has little attraction for the average psychoanalyst who, like the patient he treats, is the product of his age. And yet such gropings will be present as long as man remains a human being, although in an unreflecting age they may be inchoate and even repressed.

Systematic Expression

SUCH problems, however, are important and inescapable and not mere philosophical bagatelles. No one is completely sound until such problems are ventilated and clarified in some sort of systematic expression. But should the psychoanalyst enter the arena of pure values, his status as a scientist becomes a transparent fiction. Today there are increasing evidences of philosophical refinement in psychoanalytic theory. It would seem that by clinical trial and error, by experiment and growth, psychoanalytic theory in the very near future will face these problems of value and Weltanschauung and at this point will breach the wall which leads to the proper area of religion. For higher religion is not only interested in the intellectual exploration of values, but incorporates them as living experience. Towards this end it has developed its own peculiar enterprises; prayer, sacrifice, meditation and other spiritual activities which are nuclear to the personality and which are traditionally its own and will always remain so. It is here that psychoanalytic practice will find itself in a methodological cul-de-sac which will ultimately limit its healing efficiency.

The truth of the matter is that psychoanalytic techniques today leave considerable room for improvement. Not infrequently they fail with the more severe neuroses especially in the older age groups. Schizophrenia, which fills more hospital beds than any other disease in the country, is notoriously refractory. Because of the limits of its applicability it would seem perhaps not unkind to say that present day psychoanalysis is prescientific rather than scientific and to place it at about the same level of development as chemistry during the eighteenth century when the latter was still encumbered with phlogiston and other theoretical impedimenta. The final test of scientific theory is whether it works or not. If theory is true it works, if it does not work failure must be faced and fundamental concepts must be overhauled and scrutinized. Psychoanalytic theory of course can be used to "explain" everything. But so could the phlogiston theory be employed today in chemical equations, or the peculiar motion of Uranus be described in Ptolmaic language by "explaining" that its epicycle moved in the wrong direction.

With these facts in mind there should be very little incentive for the Church to dilute its spiritual gifts or for its members to try to become analysts and to advance further in a secular direction. But rather than resent the psychoanalyst as a rival it would seem to be much more reasonable to try to understand his methods and goals sympathetically yet critically. From Freudian theory, for example, he will ascertain the solidly established fact that the core of personality is formed in childhood and that traumas or arrested emotional development during this period may lead to eventual trouble.

A Place of Religion

WHILE there are many other psychoanalytic approaches which have much to offer, none of them has more direct bearing than the concepts and method of Carl Jung who describes the religious instincts as "authentic functions of the unconscious mind." From his own clinical explorations, confirmed by the findings of anthropology and comparative religion, he has developed his extremely valuable concept of archetypes. These can be described as transcultural motifs, inherent patterns, latent but ready to spring into action, ineradicable impulses which continually strive for expression and normally find it in the religious practices of the culture. Frustration in their expression leads to neurosis or to some lay expression outside of the framework of the religion. Thus as archetypal in origin Jung explains such universal practices and beliefs as ritual washing, anointing, birth, death and puberty rites, purification rites, the concepts of the holy and the tabu, the pilgrimage, the sacred meal and countless others which enrich all grades of religion at every stage of development and form, as it were, its own peculiar poetry. It must be admitted that Jungian psychology provides effective scientific argument for the present day liturgical revival, for archetypal themes unquestionably underlie many of the sacraments and sacramentals of the Church. Here it will be recalled that the Church at the time of its triumph in Nicene times was very rich in this respect. Also from Jungian psychology comes the warning that the sacraments and sacramentals should be real living experiences and not quaint survivals. But archetypal themes, although universally used as vehicles of religious expression, give no clue as to the grade of the religion; whether low or high, primitive or advanced, savage or civilized.

Several times in the past few paragraphs the terms "high" and "low," "primitive" and "advanced" have been applied to various grades of religion. What is the purport of this in a scientific essay? It is realized that these terms are used, possibly somewhat presumptuously, in a rather special psychiatric sense and hence are in need of clarification.

This arises from some very curious questions raised in the nature of schizophrenia, the most baffling, the most resistant to cure and yet the most common of the functional insanities. Although there are many in between stages, the fully developed schizophrenic picture is seen as an ugly travesty of some sort of religion with a senseless mosaic of archetypes all centered in megalomania and a lifeless retreat from the outside world. The outstanding symptoms of this disease are megalomania and emotional rigidity, or the inability to feel with people. Now the exact opposite are the Christian concepts of humility and selfless love. As a matter of fact, if one were to write down the outstanding symptoms of schizophrenia in one column and in the other column write the exact opposite so as to obtain the converse, or as it were, the mirror image of the disease, one would end up with something that in many fundamental ways was curiously like Christianity. For not only does the Christian experience contain the exact opposite, the antidote as it were, to megalomania and absence of empathy, but also the rest of the disease syndrome. Thus one can contrast the disorganized schizophrenic expression of archetypes with the Christian organizedness around a Trinitarian frame of reference; schizophrenic dereism with controlled spiritual activity; the characteristically weak will with a scheme for the hierarchical control of instinct and flexible devices for the handling of frustration; emotional insecurity with faith; chronic anxiety and despair with hope; the feeling of the loss of vitality with infused grace; paranoid symptoms with theological simplicity; animism and a chaotic awareness of demonic and numenous influences with an organized awareness of a God-creature relationship; depersonalization, or the feeling that the personality is being lost or is fragmenting with a sense of having found the real self.

This comparative study is interesting but very puzzling. Possibly relevant is Tertullian's phrase uttered many years ago, "omnis anima naturaliter Christiana."

Church Resources

IN conclusion it must be emphasized that in dealing with mental illness of all grades of severity, although it may profitably learn from outside sources, the Church has resources which are uniquely its own and for which there can be no substitute. The early Church regularly and apparently successfully treated mental disorders. A prayer for the energumens is found in the anaphora of the Clementine liturgy and it is believed that this was normal for the liturgical worship of the period and was a carry over from Apostolic times. The mentally ill, or energumens, were worked with by specialists in minor orders, lists of recoveries were kept, and the patients were not admitted to the sacraments until their recovery was certified. The perusal of early Patristic literature gives one the impression that mental illness was indeed rife amongst the pagan populations of the period. Reference to energumens may be found as late as the Council of Elvira.

In dealing with the neurotic, the emphasis should not be on externals but on an organic assimilation into the life of grace. In the words of that great Anglican, Father Frost, "The Christian life is not a human imitation of a life external to itself, but a participation in that divine life upon which human perfection depends and in which it rests." All this of course centers around the mystery of the Incarnation, the heart of the Christian religion. Or as St. Augustine put it; "Factus est homo ut homo fieret Deus."

In such matters as in all others what is desperately needed is a return to the full practice and tradition of the Nicene Church, the vernacular Church of the early Patristic period, a full and literal acceptance of the Nicene Church which it would seem at the present time has been weakened by humanism, secularism, and the lifeless projections of neurotic personalities and wide departures from primitive doctrine and practice.

The Meaning of the Creed

The Sixth of a Series for Lent

By JOHN E. HINES
The Bishop Coadjutor of Texas

"SUFFERED UNDER PONTIUS PILATE, WAS CRUCIFIED, DEAD AND BURIED"

THE story of Jesus—apart from the fact of the resurrection—is not a story of success. It is not the kind of story that the average author would write in his effort to portray the righteous deserts of heroism and greatness. You see, expecting the Messiah of God, men saw instead an imposter who could not even justify his own claims. He does not conquer, he is defeated. He has no success, or, indeed, such as he has melts quickly under the intense heat of critical pressures. He did not achieve any aims. Indeed, he does not appear to have striven for definite aims. Even at the height of his activity, he was not spared the cruelest of experiences, in that the crowd which one day hailed him with "hallelujahs," cried out the more, the next day: "crucify him!" Even his closest disciples deserted him, in his most critical hour, leaving him to bear the burden of ridicule and malevolence alone. In the most ingenious manner, his prophecy relative to himself, makes its appearance upon the stage of history, "The Son of man must suffer many things, and be rejected, and killed!"

That is the fact, the very disturbing fact, which this article of the creed recalls, when it says, "suffered under Pontius Pilate." For that was the business of his life. It is not an accident, this suffering. It is not an extraneous element introduced from we know not where. Rather is it (this suffering) the consummation of the meaning of his existence on this earth, bringing to the light of day, that which Jesus could so well see for himself as a true and present reality.

Contrary to some popular belief, the Christian creed does not single out Pontius Pilate simply as a man who was guilty of the horrible crime of putting our Lord to death. That does not read history aright. He is not the "scape-goat" which the generations since his day have seized upon as a means of minimizing their own guilt. Rather is Pilate a symbol, and a symbol of something mightily important in historic Christianity: it is the element of time. It is the claim of the Christian faith to the temporal revelation of God for all humankind. This is Christianity's way of proclaiming that what happened to Jesus Christ happened at a definite and assignable time and that it is connected with time which is ours, too. It was into this era that God sent his Son to suffer for the sins of men. For, such an age had nothing else to say to the "only begotten of the Father," other than suffering and death. It had no other sentence that it could pass. Suffering, not because he was impure, but because he was too pure. Death, not in spite of his innocence, but because of it, because he was the only "innocent one of his age and of the ages to come."

Meaning of His Death

DEATH is always a great instigator of questions on the part of mankind. Job, inquiring, "If a man die, shall he live again?" is but one of the innumerable inquiries inaugurated by the fact of death. But the death of the Lord of life who, as men sometimes assume, ought rightly to be above death, brings even more important questions to our lips. When St. Paul writes in one of his letters that "While we were yet sinners, Christ died for us," it must mean nothing or else it means everything. It cannot be of casual important that the "king of life" dies. It must be ultimately decisive. When St. Paul says, "Christ died for us," what does the word "for" mean? Christianity certainly has said that it means "for man's advantage," this death; but did it also mean "in the place of men"? Was Christ's death a substitute for the death that all men expect to face? If, in his death, he made an atonement, of what did the atonement consist? Did the Lord Jesus offer to God some satisfaction which the sin of man made necessary? Or, did the atonement consist merely of showing sinful man how much God cared for him, loved him, so that, as a result of the demonstration of this love on the cross man would thus be aroused and repentant and would, in response, cleanse his own life of its sinfulness, and so be at one again with his Father.

Let me say that Christian theology struggled for centuries with these same questions. All of the so-called theories of the atonement start from one inquiry as to the meaning of Christ's death. I shall not undertake to try to interpret them here. As a matter of historical perspective, the Church has not given a hard and fast answer to these questions. I venture to say that no doctrine has given rise to a wider range of opinion than the doctrine of the atonement. And, there is none on which the Church has been slower to condemn opinions as being heretical than this same one. As a real measure of truth, someone has suggested that "It is the fact of the atonement that saves us, not the holding of this or that opinion about it." But, it also follows that if "Christ died for men," it ought to mean a great deal for Christians and, it will mean very little unless the Christian has some idea as to what is implied in those words.

In attempting to gather more understanding for ourselves as to the meaning of Christ's death, we must revert to those two strategic experiences of human life: sin and suffering. Now, suffering is not always the end result of sin, but it so nearly is that it is virtually a safe assumption upon which to go, provided we are aware that such suffering is not always the result of the sin of the individual sufferer. Again, it is well for us to remember that suffering, or the punishment which involves suffering, is the just consequence of sin. Recall the words of the penitent thief, "We indeed justly are in the same condemnation for we receive the due reward of our deeds."

The Value of Suffering

YET, suffering is precisely the profound catharsis, or can be, of all of man's experience. It possesses powerful purifying graces, in that that person who accepts punishment for sin in the right spirit, finds that the suffering has a real power over his sin. By such an experience, the human conscience is purged, and the power to resist temptation is strengthened. Further, when it is voluntarily accepted, suffering has real suasion. We look upon the spirit of self-sacrifice as being something particularly noble, like Shakespeare's "quality of mercy," blessing both him that gives and him that sees. So that these forces operate in the death of Jesus, bringing to our consciousness that which the old hymn more adequately portrays: "When I survey the wondrous cross, on which the Prince of Glory died, my richest gains, I count but lost, and pour contempt on all my prides."

To that extent, the view of the broken man on the cross works in sensitive men its alchemy of redemption. But there is much more to the picture of God and man than that. Beyond all this, there is still the need that man should be set right with God, that something should be done to set right forever all the harm which has been done the relationship between God and man. For, it is not merely our individual sins that alienate us from God, it is the sin of man, it is the mass guilt of all human beings under God's sun. It is the deeper guilt of the whole human race, which weighs like the horrible burden it is upon the life of man. It is here that some great satisfaction must be made. It is here that man is most helpless. It is here that Christ gave to men the supreme assistance that they need.

It will not do for men, of this modern day, to recoil from the idea of a settlement with the justice of God in this world. It is pure sentimental fiction to attempt to face the crucifixion other than on the basis that forgiveness is costly. When man sinned, someone paid. It was ever thus. It is so, even today. The price of reconciliation between rebellious man and his Father, God, is an awesome price, so awesome, indeed, that man cannot possibly pay it. It is paid by God, himself, this price, even as the price of reconciliation between prodigals on the earthly level and fathers on the earthly level, is always paid, not by the prodigals but by the fathers.

Nothing, it seems to me, is more important than to take the New Testament teaching on the matter as a whole and whole includes at least these elements:

Sin, always calls down the wrath of a holy God, and deserves punishment.

There was need for some great act of satisfaction to God made by man, some act or reparation, something that would show man, not only as penitent, but as willing to suffer the penalties which past sins deserve.

God's wish was not to destroy the sinners, but to forgive and save them, while revealing himself as a God who cannot treat sin as though it were anything but the worst of all evils.

So God gives his Son to become incarnate to be the life of perfect obedience to God's will, to submit to that which is not his due, to endure willingly the death of the cross which is the symbol of the due reward of sin and thereby show God's wrath against sin, to stand where sinners should stand, doing for man and as man, that which man has lost the power to do for himself.

Now, the way is clear for God to give man that which will not destroy God's holiness and will not compromise his justice.

Now, we, man, can plead a reparation, an atonement, which, in his sickness, man could not manifest.

Now, the "old Adam's curse" is destroyed by the intervention of the new and perfect Adam.

Now, the words of another hymn become powerfully symbolic:

> "Look Father, look on his anointed face,
> And only look on us as found in him;
> Look not on our misusings of thy grace,
> Our prayer so languid, and our faith so dim,
> For lo! between our sins and their reward
> We set the passion of thy son, our Lord."

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. Was Jesus accepted in his day as a great hero?
2. What does Pontius Pilate symbolize?
3. Why was Jesus crucified?
4. What is meant by the word "atonement"?
5. Discuss Bishop Hines' statement that suffering possesses powerful purifying graces.
6. What is the relationship between sin and suffering?
7. What does the author mean when he says that the death of Jesus does for man what man has lost the power to do for himself?

Talking It Over

By W. B. SPOFFORD

IT is strange how uncritically excited some people get over events in eastern Europe. At the moment it is the new textbooks used in the public schools of Hungary which are said to interpret Christianity from the viewpoint of Marxian materialism. Thus a book for high school freshmen calls Christianity "the greatest and most important socio-religious movement of late antiquity, which grew steadily as the Roman Empire declined." It says that the roots of Christianity went back to the Messianic faith of the Jewish people, according to which God intended to establish a kingdom on earth in which there would be no rich or poor, but in which everyone would be blessed in equal degree. Jesus is presented as one who preached the good news to the poor and oppressed and "turned to the poor with passionate love and threatened the rich with inexorable wrath."

Wealthier classes joined the Church later, since in the beginning the Christian way of life with its primitive Communism had brought members into conflict with the ruling class and so with the state. When it eventually became evident that all attempts to prop up the old religion and the old order of society were in vain, "the number of Christians increased year after year, and new believers were recruited not only among the slaves and the poor, but among members of the middle class as well. However when members of the wealthier classes penetrated into the ranks of Christian congregations, not only their way of life had changed, but Christian doctrines as well. Wealthy Christians had become convinced more and more that they must respect the state and cease to fight against the prevailing, though unjust, social order. Rich people began to use peace-mindedness and long-suffering, preached by Christians, in their own interest." Finally, the textbook says, the emperors of the declining Roman Empire began to see an associate, rather than an enemy, in Christianity. Gradually, Christianity as an organized Church "became a faithful supporter of the oppressing organization of the ruling class for many centuries."

It seems to me that what these critics of the Hungarian school books need to decide is not whether they are based on Marxian materialism, but whether they are true. Our experts in seminaries and at Greenwich, Conn., might be assigned this task and, if they discover what I suspect they will, permission might be obtained from the government of Hungary to translate these books for use in our church schools.

In any case, as near as I can judge from the news reports of the text books, it is Church history as I was taught it years ago at Berkeley Divinity School by the late Billy Ladd.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

The Great Redemption. By Chester Warren Quimby. Macmillan Company. $2.50.

The able writer of several useful books—one of them a life of Paul—gives us here an expository commentary on the Epistle to the Romans. Although the book shows acquaintance with the best writing on the epistle, the writer does not attempt to make a contribution to scholarship, but rather tries to make the great religious messages of Romans more intelligible and available to the contemporary general reader. He has already demonstrated distinguished gifts for this sort of work, and the present book is another example of his skill. It will be helpful to many readers.

—JOHN KNOX

Let's Read the Bible. By Kenneth Clinton. Macmillan. $2.00.

In an age when general knowledge of the Bible can no longer be taken for granted and Bible-reading is something of a lost art, any book which suggests interesting and attractive methods of scripture-study is to be welcomed. The present book is no exception. It provides an itinerary which leads the reader through "beauty spots," through typical life-situations with which the Bible deals, through the great questions it answers, and the great characters who appear on its pages. It would be easy to adopt a superior attitude and criticize this book for the breeziness of its style (suggested by the title), its constant use of popular homiletical cliches, and its failure to come to grips with the real world-view of the Bible, which is so startlingly different from that of our modern world. And yet surely the great problem is just to get people to read the Bible. If that can be done, the word of God can be depended upon to speak for itself. Such a book as this will undoubtedly help many to discover the pleasure and stimulation of Bible reading.

—ROBERT S. DENTAN

On Being Your Best. By G. Curtis Jones. Macmillan. $2.00.

This brief collection of radio addresses has been given a wonderful send-off in the foreword of Edgar DeWitt Jones. The essays are simple and practical and short. Some of the illustrations and stories are very good, but it seems to me there are far too many quotations and illustrations and not quite enough of the author's own thinking to tie them together. It reminds me very much of a fruitcake with all fruit and nuts and no cake. In spite of the author's cleverness and his flare for antithesis, the layman should find most of these essays to his taste. The content of the book is not heavy and makes no pretence of being. It is for quick reading and temporary inspiration.

—JAMES W. KENNEDY

A Firm Faith for Today. By Harold A. Bosley. Harper. $3.00.

The dean of the divinity school at Duke University, soon to occupy the Methodist pulpit in Evanston, Illinois, made famous by Ernest Fremont Tittle, gives us in his new book a reworking of sermons and addresses delivered during the past ten years. This might imply a certain disunity, but on the contrary the book is a closely knit study of the major beliefs of the Christian Church, interpreted through the eyes of one who announces himself a "liberal." They are marked by Dr. Bosley's usual felicity of utterance, wide reading, and penetrating insight.

It is, of course, a question which the reader must answer, whether "liberalism" in Dr. Bosley's sense, can really deliver the goods. One notes a considerable strengthening, on the author's part, of his Christian convictions; in earlier volumes he was sometimes more tentative, more hesitant, than in this work. Perhaps the explanation is in his foreword, where he acknowledges that he is much more of "a churchman" than he was ten years ago. In any event, the discussions of belief in God, Christ, the Holy Spirit, the Church, the Bible, man, forgiveness of sins, the Kingdom of God, immortality, etc., are always interesting and illuminating. This reviewer would say, however, that it is not at all necessary to subscribe to the "neo-orthodoxy" that Dr. Bosley so much dislikes to feel that classical Christian faith has more to say, and sometimes something else to say. We can profit from this book without feeling that it tells the Christian story in the way in which, say, our Prayer Book presents the gospel of Christ and life in his Church.

—W. NORMAN PITTENGER

The Origins of Modern Science. By Herbert Butterfield. Macmillan. $2.50.

These brilliant lectures represent the beginning of the new course on the history of science at Cambridge University—an attempt to bring science into closer relation with the humanities. One almost wonders, these days, why anyone should be interested in science—which has been prostituted by promoters on one hand and by militarists on the other, and now threatens to destroy all life on the planet. Little half-men have got hold of the ultimate secret of matter and their proposed hydrogen bomb is too diabolical a weapon to contemplate without stark horror. But the prostitution of science by others is no reason for blaming science itself, and it is possible that it may be redeemed. The way forward may be via the past. And this fascinating book deals only with the origins of science in the modern world (1300-1800 A.D.), not its present state. The author is professor of modern history at Cambridge.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

HUNGARIAN LUTHERANS DECLINE RESISTANCE

Eight top-ranking leaders of the Lutheran Church in Hungary have sent a message to "our Lutheran brethren in the west" declaring that they "cannot take responsibility for starting a so-called Church resistance" in the country. Inspired by charges of Lutheran leaders in the U. S. and elsewhere that the Hungarian Church has failed to take a strong stand against the state, the message declares that the Church should not start a "political struggle in this country" and it challenges the belief that there "cannot be true Christianity in the eastern hemisphere." The Church in Hungary, they state, is growing in its spiritual work and influence.

NEW PRIMATE IN SWEDEN

Yngve Torgny Brilioth, former bishop of Vaxjo, has been named archbishop of Upsala and primate of the Swedish Lutheran State Church by the king. He has been chairman of the faith and order commission of the World Council of Churches since the assembly in 1948. He is to visit America this summer when he comes to attend a meeting of the Council's central committee to be held in Toronto, July 8-15.

BISHOP RELEASED IN POLAND

Bishop Kazimierz Kowalski, R. C. bishop of Chelmno, was released on March 5 from house arrest, but tension between the Polish government and the hierarchy is said to continue. He had been ordered confined to his episcopal residence on February 14 while state officials investigated charges that he had illegally attempted to remove a priest from his parish for supporting the government. He was also accused of terrorizing other priests who supported the government.

POPE URGES PRAYERS FOR NEW ORDER

The Pope has called upon R. C. bishops throughout the world to start a crusade of prayer for a new order based on "truth, justice and charity." He also urged priests and laity to join in combatting anti-religious forces which are "working very hard to destroy the very basis of the Catholic religion and the Christian worship." Obviously referring to the iron curtain countries, he spoke of "sacred ministers, even though bearing high rank," who are "either removed from their seats, exiled or jailed, or so hindered that they cannot exercise their sacred ministry in elementary and university teaching as well as in publications."

MORMON MISSION HEAD ORDERED TO LEAVE

Government authorities in Czechoslovakia ordered Wallace Toronto, head of the American Mormon mission in that country, to leave by March 18. He is the last Mormon missionary in the country. The work has been turned over to some of the country's 250 Mormons.

ARCHBISHOP GARBETT URGES LESS CONTROL

The Archbishop of York, Cyril F. Garbett, on March 9th urged a loosening of control of the Church of England by Parliament. He held that the only alternative is a complete break between Church and state. He did however state in his new book titled "Church and State in England" that he was opposed to disestablishment since he thinks this would be considered by other nations as "a national repudiation of Christianity."

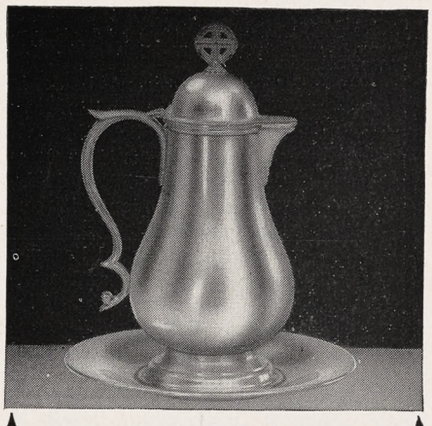
ADVENTUROUS RELIGION IN BRITAIN

Religion in Britain has become much more "adventurous" during recent years in its effort to meet modern social needs. This is the conclusion reached through a survey conducted among Methodist pastors. The report indicates however that there are many things on the minus side; smaller congregations; less Bible reading; smaller proportion of men and young people at services; parents are careless about their children's religious life. Reasons given for the trend away from the church were a growing secularization of life, more attention to radio, movies, television and the auto, than to the church.

CATHOLIC GROUP LAUNCHES PRO-RUSSIAN MOVEMENT

A pro-Russian movement, described as a positive approach to world communism, has been launched in Ottawa by the Catholic center of the University of Ottawa. The purpose of the movement is to foster friendship for the Christian people of the USSR.

AUSTRALIA CULTURE DECLARED LOW



Many Australians follow a peculiar "religion" which has a horse for a sacred image and the form guide for a sacred book, the Rev. W. J. Robbin told a Methodist conference in Sydney. "Australian culture is at a very low ebb," he declared. "Last year Australians spent 13 pounds a head on liquor and threepence on music. In

CHURCH SHOWDOWN LIKELY IN CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Two new attacks on the hierarchy of Czechoslovakia by minister of justice Alexej Cepicka intimates that a showdown is approaching between the bishops and the government. Speaking at a press conference the minister stated that a "last warning" had been issued to the bishops to renounce their obedience to the Vatican and to reach an agreement with the government. Later the minister sent an open letter to Archbishop Joseph Beran of Prague accusing him of "working for a long time to spread disruption and incitement." The letter also charged that the Church's hostility to the government was demonstrated by "illegal circulars and pastoral letters."

PROFESSOR GIVES ADVICE ABOUT TEACHERS

"Get rid of the screwball Sunday school teachers," Wayne Oates of Louisville Baptist Theological Seminary urged clergymen attending the institute on pastoral counselling of the Church Federation of Indianapolis.

"I've found all kinds of fouled up pathology among screwball Sunday school teachers," he said. "At the most crucial period of children's growth, we often leave their religious education to the least professional and least competent. What we need is mentally healthy Sunday school teachers." Prof. Oates cited a church in which he found a junior department headed by a paranoid with strong delusions of persecution, and a class of boys taught by a manic depressive. "I'm not giving you my diagnoses," he said. "I'm giving you the diagnoses of their doctors."

As for the ministers themselves, Oates said they must learn better how to mix with people and to use the professional skills of others if they are to be successful in meeting the needs of their communities.

"To reach the unchurched," he said, "the pastor must convince a person he's not trying to twist their arm or put them on the spot. It is wise to create a man-to-man relationship of friendship first. We must have faith in the unchurched person. Perhaps we'll be surprised at how much he knows about religion."

LUTHERAN DPs DEDICATE THEIR OWN CHURCH

DPs from Latvia dedicated a new church March 10 at Senatobia, Miss. It is believed to be the first church owned by DPs in the U. S. It was built from a former church, with the congregation contributing 2,000 man hours of labor and $3,500 in cash. There are 406 men and women who are members, scattered over an area of 1,000 square miles. High Lutheran officials and Latvian diplomats attended the dedication.

MENTAL ILL NEED HELP ON DISCHARGE

Clergymen of St. Joseph, Mo., were asked recently to spearhead a movement to educate the public in its obligation to re-accept persons released as cured from mental hospitals. The request came from officials of a state hospital who said "society is out of step with science in the problem of treating and reclaiming the mentally ill." Doctors of the hospital said im-

Muriel Streibert Curtis—Wellesley College

CHURCH MERGER UNLIKELY

Voting in the United Presbyterian Church and the Reformed Church indicates that the merger of the two churches is unlikely at this time. The plan for union was approved in 1949 by the assembly of each denomination, but with a three-fourths vote favorable by the presbyteries and the corresponding groups in the Reformed Church required. The vote at present is running under the required 75 per cent.

DISARMAMENT CONFERENCE URGED BY CLERGY

A committee of the Protestant clergy of St. Paul, Minn., has urged President Truman and other government officials to call a world-wide conference to seek "universal world disarmament on land, sea and air." The statement was passed unanimously at a meeting March 13 of the social study and action committee of the ministers' association.

BAPTIST KEEP HAMMERING ON AN ISSUE

If persistance can do the trick the U. S. "embassy" at the Vatican will be closed and no further diplomatic representative sent there. There is hardly a day that The Witness does not receive information about some group of the Baptist Church making such a demand of the Secretary of State. The most recent was issued by the executive committee of the Georgia Baptist convention.

WHO IS INTERESTED?

Priest thinks practice of love with active demand full justice near by as well as far away provides sole unmistakable evidence real religion. Long involved in struggle by and for expoited, segregated, persecuted persons. Resigned 6-year Church post 1949, serious illness. Health now restored, assisting in great city. Profoundly engrossed increasing social activity, which continues as formerly non-salaried, but bishop writes this activity makes priest difficult to place. Anxious to maintain long-time integration priestly-social function. Is there parish needing priest, U. S. or Canada, with labor membership predominating, or bishop wanting such work developed? Salary to cover subsistence two persons will exceed present income. Interested only if controlling majority demands direct application of Christ to man's living conditions, regardless by whom obstructed. Write Box 180

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

A. G. BUGBEE
Layman of Montrose, Cal.

I have read the March 2 issue, with Bennett's article on Communism, your editorial comment, and Bishop Hines on the creed. Will you please tell us untutored laymen just what is the meaning of "dialectical materialism" and broadly what you mean by Christianity. Also must we "fellow travelers" accept the two historic creeds even including quibbling interpretations about their eastern phraseology?

ANSWER: We are also untutored, but we think dialectical materialism means progress through the meeting of opposing forces. The first paragraph of the article by Bernard Iddings Bell in The Witness for March 16 we think is an excellent definition of Christianity. To live up to that definition would entitle a man to call himself a Christian, quite apart from his opinion about the creeds.

ELDRED JOHNSTON
Ass't at Christ Church, Dayton

A year and a half ago I came into the Episcopal Church and during that time I have come to regard The Witness as a source of real inspiration and encouragement. The editorial commenting on John Bennett's article on Christianity and Communism (March 2) was exceptionally courageous and enlightening. And we sure need light in this middle age.

JOHN F. DAVIDSON
Assistant at St. George's, New York

Your last issue (March 2, 1950) is certainly a 'honey!' It may have been partly that I was laid low for a few days and had time to read it properly; but as objectively as I can estimate it, it was an unusually good number. I particularly liked the way you handled John Bennett and the Communist issue. I also greatly enjoyed Bishop Hall's article and was amazed at his remarkable and prophetic thesis. This sermon should be distributed widely as a basis for provocative thinking on the part of all those interested in the Far East and its importance today.

But "corruptio optimi pessima," Bishop Hines' article (and also other sections of the issue) is partly wrecked by amazingly poor punctuation; it is, of course, impossible to know at what stage this crept in; but I challenge you, sir, to make sense of the following (p. 14): ". . . resulting in the Phariseeism, which, God, because it is not a real goodness, must always reject. No, Christians mean more, when they say 'God' than is indicated by creation and moral order." This is surely a classical example of the pepper-pot at its most vicious. See also the last two lines of the same column.

Your stuff is normally so good that it is surely a great shame to see it spoiled too often in this way. Power to your elbow.

JOHN J. HARMON
Clergyman of Rochester, N. Y.

I was much impressed with your editorial on Christianity and Communism in the March 2 number—so much so that I want back copies of your numbers for Lent and a year's subscription.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Unity on Local Level Urged By the New Commission

Presbyterians Invited to Resume Meetings On the Basis of Convention Report

★ The new commission on approaches to unity, appointed after the recent General Convention, had its initial meeting recently at the diocesan house, Cincinnati. Bishop Stephen E. Keeler of Minnesota was elected chairman, succeeding Bishop Robert E. L. Strider, of West Virginia; Bishop Harwood Sturtevant of Fond du Lac, vice-chairman; Dean Alexander C. Zabriskie, secretary.

Highlights of the meeting were transmission to the similar commissions of the Presbyterian and Methodist Churches full copies of our commission's report to the General Convention of 1949 and the action of the Convention thereon, together with the full text of the resolutions of the Lambeth Conference of 1948, with an invitation to them to give their reaction to the same, especially to the statement on faith and order in harmony with the Lambeth Quadrilateral. It was resolved also to invite the Presbyterians to resume conversations with us on the basis of the report, and to seek to bring about conversations with the Methodists.

Chief discussion of the session centered around "public relations," ways and means of bringing to the thoughtful attention of the clergy and laity of the Church, activities, plans, and objectives of the commission in the hope of creating a widespread interest in the whole question of Christian reunion, and the implementation of the Convention report, particularly on the local level.

Publications toward this end will start with a "Brief" similar in size and format to others produced by the Forward Movement, to be written by Canon Gilbert P. Symons, on the Christian urge and command to seek the unity of Christendom. This will be distributed by the Forward Movement this summer, and will be followed shortly by a larger booklet of 32 pages, for popular reading with more documentation, material on the history of the movement, some theological considerations, the methods of practical, local efforts toward mutual understanding between ourselves and interested Churches.

In addition it is planned to produce program material for adult study groups, and finally a book of authoritative material for clergy, students and lay leaders. Consideration will also be given to the production of a pamphlet explaining the Episcopal Church for general distribution to Presbyterian and Methodist groups, with the request that they produce similar material about their respective Churches for the use of our people.

The commission felt it to be especially important that the substance of its report to the General Convention be brought to the attention of the interested membership of this Church in order that they might be aware of steps already achieved, the implications and objectives of Christian reunion in world and national scenes, and particularly that future deputies to the Convention be fully informed. It is recognized that any action of future General Conventions must spring from a large body of public opinion if it is to be constructive.

Toward this desired end it is hoped by the commission that many dioceses and parishes will cooperate with the suggestions adopted by the recent Convention and that there will be created many "pilot groups" undertaking local conversations, services and meetings along the following lines:

(1) That congregations of the Episcopal and Presbyterian churches worship together occasionally, "except at celebrations of the holy communion," using regular form of service of the host parish, and where possible that social hours should follow such joint services with opportunity for fellowship and friendly discussion. Bishop Gibson was made chairman of a special committee on the subject.

(2) That Episcopal clergy meet from time to time with Presbyterian clergy, or form clerici in local areas for discussions of polity and theology.

(3) That our seminaries bring problems of Church unity to the attention of candidates for the ministry.

(4) That Woman's Auxiliary, laymen's leagues, and youth groups be encouraged to meet with similar groups of other churches.

(5) That summer conferences include courses on the subject of Christian reunion in their curricula.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

REPORTS SO FAR ARE GOOD

★ Dioceses all through the country are receiving reports from parishes about results of the one world in Christ campaign. Many such reports are incomplete, as are most of the reports sent to the National Council from diocesan headquarters.

Definite assurance has been received that Northern Michigan, West Missouri, East Carolina, Kentucky, North Dakota, Arkansas and Kansas have exceeded their goal.

There is a rather long list of dioceses which had notified the National Council, prior to March 12, that they had accepted their quotas. These include Albany, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Los Angeles, Idaho, Nebraska, New Mexico, North Carolina, North Texas, Northern Indiana, Oklahoma, Olympia, Oregon, Sacramento, Salina, South Dakota, Southern Ohio, Southwestern Virginia, Springfield, Tennessee, Virginia, West Texas.

At National Council offices, the statement was made that "the reports naturally come in slowly, due to the time required for dioceses to hear from parishes and missions, but so far practically all the reports are good, and decidedly encouraging."

ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL REOPENS

★ The restored section of St. Luke's Hospital, Tokyo, was opened March 1. The destructive fire occurred on December 17. Mr. Henry Budd, liaison representative of the National Council in Japan, wrote that the accomplishment of the rebuilding in two and a half months meant extremely hard work for all concerned, and especially on the part of Mr. Kanbayashi, mission architect. "When you remember that all the time the rebuilding was in progress, four to five hundred outpatients were being cared for daily, you can imagine the inconvenience under which each group of workers operated—the medical staff in the midst of the building, the builders with the patients and staff all about."

Mr. Budd told also of a simple "family-reunion-sort-of ceremony dedicating the building, with prayers by Bishop Makita." "The St. Luke's family," Mr. Budd said, "numbers somewhere in the neighborhood of 150 and I have never anywhere seen such a close-knit group with such a fine, devoted spirit."

The day after the reopening, the hospital had 850 outpatients.

NEW YORK PLANS YOUTH RALLY

★ The annual youth rally of the diocese of New York will be held at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Saturday, April 16th.

MARC A. NOCERINO, formerly of St. Louis, is now assistant at Grace Church, Manchester, N. H.

A MISSION FOR THE MARINES

★ Twelve chaplains located at Camp Le-Jeune, N. C., "world's largest amphibious training base" for United States marines, arranged a Lenten preaching mission for the 20,000 troops and dependents stationed here. Episcopal priest Frank F. Smart Jr., is division chaplain and the cooperating chaplains included men of the Methodist, Congregational, Lutheran, Nazarene, Northern Baptist, Southern Baptist, Disciples of Christ and Bible Presbyterian Churches.

Layman Kenneth I. Brown, president of Denison University, Granville, Ohio, was chosen as mission leader. His topics were: "The psychologist's question: who are you?," "The eternal God's question: are you for or against me?," "The jailor's question: what must I do to be saved?," "Mrs. Job's question: hast thou still thine integrity?," "Jesus' question: lovest thou me?"

Chaplain Smart explained that the purpose of the mission was to "combat religious indifference and ignorance." The chaplains prepared publicity materials, arranged a program of house to house calling by teams of picked laymen, and utilized press, radio, screen and bulletin boards to advertise the meetings. One method which proved successful was to have unit chaplains address the men about the mission at meal formations.

President Brown, in addition to the preaching mission sessions, spoke over the local radio station at Jacksonville, N. C., for five successive mornings, and had one evening period. He spoke to students of the camp high school, and discussed vocational choices with the senior class.

"That the mission was a success is the unanimous opinion of those who were responsible for it," Smart concluded. "The chaplains themselves benefited tremendously. It was a little amusing but none the less a valid achievement of the mission, that President Brown himself was amazed to learn that chaplains of diverse backgrounds work together in a common effort in the military service. Thus we learned much from him, and he learned at least a few things from us."

ST. FRANCIS HOMES' NEW OFFICES

★ New offices of the St. Francis Boys Homes and the Educational Service Institute were recently opened in a large residence in Salina, Kansas. The institute, headed by Wilbert J. Mueller, psychologist and a vestryman of the cathedral in Salina, screens the in-coming boys and in the developing of a "guided growth" program for each lad. St. Francis is one of the first agencies in the country to concentrate in the field of handling delinquent boys while keeping them in public life. The Rev. R. H. Mize Jr. is director, assisted by a staff of twenty. There are two units, one at Ellsworth and one at Salina, each providing for twenty-four boys.

CONSECRATION IN BRAZIL

★ The Rev. Edmont Machado Krischke was consecrated Bishop to be head of the newly-formed Missionary District of Southwestern Brazil on Sunday, March 12, at the Church of the Crucified in Bage.

This was the first consecration to be held in Brazil in two years, and the service was attended by large numbers of local people and visitors from Rio de Janeiro, Porto Alegre, Rio Grande and Pelotas. From the early celebration of the holy communion, with Bishop Athalicio T. Pithan as celebrant, crowds completely filled the church. By 9:30 a. m. the parish house, where a public address system was installed, was filled to overflowing, with people who could not see, but nonetheless desired to hear the service.

Bishop-elect Krischke had as his attending presbyters his father, the Rev. George U. Krischke and the Rev. N. Duval da Silva, a brother-in-law. Bishop Pithan was litanist and preacher, while Bishop John B. Bentley of New York, vice-president of the National Council and director of the overseas department, was a co-consecrator and presenter, with Bishop Pithan.

The chief consecrator, acting for the Presiding Bishop, was Bishop Louis C. Melcher of Central Brazil. The musical setting for the Veni, Creator Spiritus was written by the Very Rev. Orlando Baptista, master of ceremonies, and was sung by Bishop Melcher. The new bishop was vested in his episcopal robes by his father. Bishop Krischke's family gave him his episcopal ring, and the clergy of the district gave the pastoral staff, made in Brazil, as was the ring, of Brazilian metals and amethyst.

Bishop Krischke has named Santa Maria his see city, and plans to make the Church of the Mediator there his cathedral.

SUBSTANTIAL GAINS BY CHURCHES

★ The Episcopal Churches increased its membership, in the last 25 years, by 39%, going from 1,139,192 communicants to 1,583,928. Contributions to the Church last year totaled $65,850,868, which represents a 68% increase over the 1925 figure of $39,047,394. The figures were based on a study made by the United Stewardship Council.

Other gains were as follows, covering the same period: Southern Baptists, 3,574,531 to about 6,000,000 and $37,359,614 to $155,606,414. United Lutherans, 856,180 to 1,355,912 and $18,372,097 to $41,622,978. Methodists, 6,570,141 to 8,651,062 and $138,015,852 to $195,435,168. Presbyterians, 1,828,916 to 2,330,136 and $57,241,511 to $86,085,965.

One of the difficulties of such a report, of course, is that different Churches have different ways of defining "member." In the Episcopal Church it is generally a confirmed person, so that the membership would be about a million more if all baptized persons were included. Many Churches in giving out figures include all baptized persons.

BISHOP EMRICH of Michigan is giving "Talent Money" to Mrs. Kenneth Webb of St. Martin's, Detroit, as Vicar J. H. Morris beams. Fifty members of the parish received $10 in November which was returned with increases this month to help build a new church

FEDERAL COUNCIL URGES FAITH

★ Faith rather than fear constitutes the best hope for world peace in this era of superweapons, declared the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches, meeting last week in New York. They were split on the question as to whether or not the H-bomb should be manufactured, but the committee did endorse the recent appeal of the World Council which called upon all nations to make "a gigantic new effort for peace" (Witness, March 9).

The committee supported the American Legion in a proposal to establish a "clearing house for information" on subversive individuals and organizations, but it suggested that such an agency should also defend civil liberties, demand equal opportunities and equal justice for all, regardless of race, national origin or creed. Likewise it called for the strengthening of American democracy by bringing its practices into increasing conformity with its historic ideals.

The committee unanimously approved a resolution opposing the appointment of a personal representative of the President at the Vatican.

JAMES E. MINDS, vestryman of St. James, Los Angeles, is one of the outstanding laymen of the diocese. He is an attorney and is a member of the board of missions of the diocese

ENGLISH CUSTOM OBSERVED

★ An ancient English custom known as "Mothering Sunday" was observed March 19 at All Saints, Rehoboth Beach, Delaware. Portions of a large fruit cake baked by women of the parish, carefully wrapped in individual servings, were distributed by Rector Charles R. Leech to all present at the morning service. According to tradition, on Mothering Sunday congregations visited the mother church and placed an elaborately decorated plum cake on the altar as an offering of respect and devotion.

BRITISH CANON ARRIVES

★ Canon George W. Briggs of Worcester, England, arrived in New York on March 22. He is a noted musician and author, being especially identified with church music. He is here primarily to consult with his publishers, Oxford University Press, but will also preach at three seminaries, Berkeley, Cambridge and General.

ALLAN ROHAN CRITE HAS EXHIBIT

★ Allan Rohan Crite, churchman-artist of Cambridge, Mass., had an exhibit of his work at Columbia University, March 25-30, sponsored jointly by the department of religion and the school of painting and sculpture. Mr. Crite's drawings have appeared several times in The Witness, the last being in the Christmas number.

DISCUSSION GROUP AT DUNDEE

★ They did it in a different way at St. James, Dundee, Illinois. Each Tuesday evening in Lent people gather for supper which is followed by a discussion group. The charge for the series is $4, with tickets sold in advance. The series on Current Movements featured in The Witness is used, and there is also a speaker at each meeting; Charles Leonard, head of St. Charles School for boys, speaking on juvenile delinquency; a member of the organization speaking on Alcoholics Anonymous; Prof. Kermit Eby and Lawyer Owen Fairweather speaking on differences between labor and management; Chad Walsh, the author of one of the articles in The Witness series, speaking on nationalism; Dean Wilber Katz of the law school of the University of Chicago speaking on internationalism. The rector of the parish is the Rev. Murray W. Dewart and the chairman of the department of religious education for the parish, who also had a hand in setting up the program, is Mrs. John Farrar. The membership of the parish is 120, and these meetings have averaged about fifty.

BISHOP GOODEN VISITS NICARAGUA

★ Bishop Gooden of the Panama Canal Zone is on a long trek in the jungles of Nicaragua, visiting the missions among the Misquito Indians, sailing out to Corn Island, 40 miles off the coast, and visiting at fruit plantations. He will also visit the populous city of Bluefields, and will hold services for the Anglo-American colony at Managua, the capital.

Nicaragua is the north-western boundary of his district and the farthest point reached on this trip will be about a thousand miles from his headquarters in Ancon, Canal Zone. The southern boundaries of the district are Venezuela, Brazil, Peru and Ecuador. The present trip covers about three weeks, with travelling done in everything from six-motor planes to dug-out canoes.

IT IS ONLY A RUMOR

★ The story is going around the east that the diocese of Long Island is contemplating the founding of a theological seminary of its own. Efforts by a Witness reporter however were not able to move it out of the rumor stage.

HOTEL OWNER TO ENTER MINISTRY

★ Homer C. Carrier, a 42-year old hotel owner and civic leader in Litchfield, Minn., is giving up business to enter the ministry. He is now in charge of missions at Pine Island, Kasson, and West Concord, as a lay-reader. He was at one time the supervising manager of a chain of 21 hotels. He is to take special training at the University of Minnesota under the direction of Bishop Keeler and the board of examining chaplains.

ST. MARTIN'S FORUM

★ The first of a series of forums will be held Sunday evening, April 16th, at St. Martin's Church, Harlem, New York (not April 2 as reported last week). The speaker will be the Rev. W. B. Spofford Sr., who has been asked by the committee to speak on what the Church has done and is doing in the field of social action. The second forum will be on April 30 when the speaker will be Scott Nearing, economist, sociologist and lecturer, whose subject will be the economic outlook in the U. S. today. The third meeting will be on May 14 when Mary van Kleeck will speak on science, religion and social progress. Miss van Kleeck recently retired as the director of industrial studies of the Russell Sage Foundation, is a fellow of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, and for many years has been a leading figure in the Episcopal League for Social Action. The speaker for the meeting on May 28th has not yet been announced.

It is the purpose of those in charge of these forums to deal with cultural, economic and international problems of different peoples and nations and to attract to them people of various races and nationalities. If these four meetings in April and May prove to be sufficiently popular it is the plan of the rector of St. Martin's, the Rev. John H. Johnson, and the committee to start them again in the early fall with a series that will run fortnightly through the winter.

LENT MITE BOXES are placed in hollow cross by the children of the Good Shepherd, Reedley, California

BISHOP OLDHAM VISITS JAMAICA

★ Bishop Oldham, retired bishop of Albany, was in Jamaica during February. He was there on vacation but he took the opportunity of identifying himself with the work of the Church by preaching in several churches. Another visitor was the Bishop of Dover, England, and both he and Bishop Oldham gave addresses at the synod of the diocese. Both also took part in the installation of Princess Alice as the first chancellor of the University College of the West Indies.

LARGE CONFIRMATION AT ST. THOMAS

★ Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania confirmed 140 persons on March 19 at St. Thomas Church, Philadelphia, a record for the diocese. It brings the total presented by Rector Jesse F. Anderson over a five year period to 472. Instructions covered a period of six months, with sessions every week.

CHURCH AND STATE RELATIONSHIP

★ The Rev. Anson Phelps Stokes, for 15 years a canon of Washington Cathedral and for 20 years the secretary of Yale, has written a three volume work entitled "Church and State in the United States," which will be published by Harpers on May 10. It is said by the publishers to be "the first attempt to cover in a thorough and impartial way the 160 years of constitutional Church-state separation" and is said to provide "a new approach

The Victorious Path

CHRISTENDOM turns again during the coming week in the contemplation of the final state of the earthly life of its Lord. Therein, from the first, Christians saw the power of God working for salvation. To all appearances wickedness and death triumphed; but that was a deceiving episode soon reversed when they failed to maintain their empire over the Son of man. In the death and resurrection of Christ the forces of evil were met and broken. That victory was a new liberating power over sin and death, available to work in the lives of men. St. Paul, characteristically, calls upon Christians to carry the power of that verity into practical living: "Wherefore . . . be ye stedfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain."

That is the basis of the present Christian claim that there is a word of God for a world in desperate need of it. The most deplorable feature of modern life is the continuing widespread and open revolt against moral and spiritual ideals which forty years ago, if imperfectly apprehended, seemed capable of translation into actuality. In all ages there have been conspicuous examples of cruelty, injustice, and tyranny. But the sinister feature of modern times is that otherwise civilized men do not see these things as evil. Men who control the political destinies of nations scoff at the ideals of humanity, justice, and liberty; substitute propaganda for truth, and do so amid the applause of multitudes. This shadows and menaces civilized life after a second world war to preserve these values.

The world in which Christ lived, died, and rose again was an age of despair. Little of the surviving literature reflects any hope, while the religions which were influential started from the axiom that the world was made by or was under the rule of the powers of evil. Pessimism is morally barren in proportion as it is sincere. The danger is real that again it may dominate thoughtful minds. To Jesus and the New Testament writers, the world of their day was not the best of worlds in which things necessarily progress from good to better and best. Yet they do not deny that the affairs of the world have worth. They bid men not to renounce the world but to overcome it. But—and this is the essential message—they proclaim that victory mainly consists in the way men fight the battle. To men of good will, and especially to the follower of Christ, the world always presents a challenge, and if the world is in a bad way the challenge only becomes the more emphatic.

The things of the spirit do not exist apart from persons, and in their realization there is always striving and tension. Most things are by most people valued in proportion to their cost; but spiritual qualities, humanity, justice, liberty, truth, may not only cease to be valued, they may easily cease to exist, if and when they cease to cost. They exist only where men are prepared to make sacrifices to realize them. The material and the spiritual, the temporal and the eternal, are not independent or separable; the one is made actual only in and through the other.

To follow Christ is to accept the fact that the good is only to be attained and conserved through sacrifice and struggle. When the word was made flesh the eternal was revealed and fully in a continuing conflict which culminated on a cross. That was the necessary way and there is no other. But it is divinely sealed as victorious.

"QUOTES"

I GO about the world
Telling all the rich
And all the happy and all the comfortable,
"There is a man upon the cross."
But they all say,
"We are sure you are mistaken:
There was a man upon the cross
Two thousand years ago.
But he died, and was taken down,
And was decently buried;
And a miracle happened
So that he rose again,
And ascended into heaven,
And is happy for evermore."
Still I go about the world, saying,
"There is a man upon the cross."

Below the Belt

EVERY time Christians meet these days, whether it is Lambeth, Amsterdam or San Francisco, pronouncements are made that the Church has the answer to the problems that face our world. They tell us that Christians must outdo Communists in meeting the demand of people throughout the world for deliverance from poverty and racial discrimination. Yet generally when Christians band together to further the goals set by their official leaders, they are branded as "reds" or "pinks" and efforts are made in high places to silence them.

The most recent instance is the current campaign to put the Methodist Federation for Social Action out of business. It was instigated by the Reader's Digest, in the business of cracking down on anyone who presumes to criticize, even mildly, the status quo. The article to raise the storm was called "Methodism's Pink Fringe" and was written by one of the highly paid editors of the paper, Stanley High. It has had the effect the Digest wanted. Boards of Methodist Churches have passed resolutions about the "sinister encroachments of Communism parading under the name and banner of Methodism" and from the South come pronouncements that the Federation preaches "racial doctrines repulsive to the South."

The fact is that the Methodist Federation, over a long period of years, has been in the forefront of Christian forces seeking to preserve civil liberties, further racial brotherhood, prevent war and establish economic justice. If to stand for these things justifies the label "red" then bishops attending the Lambeth Conference; delegates to the Assembly of the World Council; deputies and bishops attending our General Convention, can be similarly labeled. The only difference—and we suspect this is the big difference—is that the Federation has effectively implemented the official pronouncements, whereas official Church bodies, too frequently, have merely talked.

We are confident that Methodists generally will stand back of this unofficial organization, of which they have every reason to be proud.

ALCOHOLICS ANONYMOUS: Ally, Competitor or Both?

By RICHARD S. M. EMRICH
The Bishop of Michigan

IT is impossible in a brief article to do justice to that fine group known as Alcoholics Anonymous, an organization founded by alcoholics to bring men that power which would enable them to overcome the devil of alcohol in their lives. The group contains real Christian insights by which men have been raised from the dead to newness of life. It deserves the hearty support of everyone, for it has done work which should have been done by the Church had the Church not watered down its proclamation of the word and indulged in a false respectability.

Two things are needed for the good life: first, the knowledge of what is good, and second, the power to do the good when it is known. Every alcoholic, because of the tragedy of his life, knows better than we do that he ought not to drink as he does: the problem of his life is one of moral power. It is to this problem that Alcoholics Anonymous directs itself, and the achievements of the group can help us to have a clearer understanding of some neglected aspects of our Christian faith. Alcohol is treated as a spiritual problem, and in this brief article we will mention the five most important of the twelve steps to moral power. For those who wish to read further, I suggest the book, "Alcoholics Anonymous," which is a book of living religion.

Need for Honesty

THE first step to moral power is honesty. The alcoholic must stand before the group and say in effect, "My name is John Doe, and I'm a drunk." There must be no more blaming of one's condition on the government, on an unhappy marriage, or other outside difficulties. The man desiring a cure must begin by being honest with God, with his fellowmen, and with himself. It is confession taken seriously, a cry for help, a humiliating honesty. If a man must die to rise again, surely here is that death when a man says, "I'm John Doe, and I'm a drunk." This is the first and absolutely necessary step, for how can a person be saved until he knows that he is the problem, and that he, like others, needs salvation?

The second step is the recognition that this habit cannot be broken by oneself. With Christianity, Alcoholics Anonymous contends that man's health is not in himself, but that we come to ourselves by looking up and receiving from beyond ourselves. Our health consists in the right relationship to God. John Doe is asked to turn his life around. He has been living with his back to God: now he is to turn his face to God. To be proud and independent is to be false. Life begins with God. He is both the source and the goal of life.

I met one day a member of Alcoholics Anonymous who in a vivid story told of this fundamental change in his life. For five years he was drunk, and he used to wake in the morning saying, "Good God! it's morning again." Now he says, "Good morning, God!" St. Augustine's words would be understood by many members of Alcoholics Anonymous, "O Thou Love which art ever burning, and never quenched. O Charity, my God! Kindle me I beseech Thee. Thou commandest me to be continent: give me what Thou commandest, and command what Thou wilt."

Other Demands

THIRD, since wrongs continue to darken the soul, and wrongs corrected are like shades lifted to let in God's light, the members of the group are asked to correct in themselves other faults than alcoholism. They are to pay their debts, apologize to those whom they have wronged, and realize that alcohol is just one revelation of a selfish existence. God, as each man understands him, is taken seriously. He is not there to cure an alcoholic of his problem so that he can continue a fundamentally selfish life. God's light must come into every corner of life, for only then can John Doe become the sort of person who hates his former state. Let every reader of this article remember that every fault corrected during this Lenten season permits more light to enter the soul.

Fourth, the group stresses the need of fellowship. "Don't try to go it alone." An alcoholic must attend meetings regularly; and if he feels himself terribly tempted, he is to call a friend in Alcoholics Anonymous and spend the evening with him. Apart from fellowship, men are cut flowers that wither. God comes to us in and through fellowship.

Here, then, light is thrown on the Church in a fine manner, not primarily as an institution or an authoritative and legal body, but a fellowship of those who turn their faces toward Christ. The fellowship of Alcoholics Anonymous should be such a little thing compared with the fellowship of the Church, but one sadly notes in many of our churches a failure to understand the meaning and deep purpose of the fellowship in Christ. It was Bishop Stephen Neill at General Convention who stated that the Church should have the best fellowship on earth, but that actually it often has the worst.

Place of Service

FIFTH, moral power comes through service. A member of Alcoholics Anonymous must always stand ready to go to the assistance of another unfortunate person. In doing and serving they are themselves strengthened, for God gives his spirit to those who fight his battles, and not to armchair critics. John Doe is put to work as soon as possible after he enters the group, and not just for the good of others. Good works are the fruit of faith, but it is also true that faith grows as we work. We venture out with faltering steps in God's service, and he gives us the strength for our needs. How seldom in the Church do we ask men to do real work which would enable their faith to grow.

The Christian Church can see in Alcoholics Anonymous a group that is achieving power through great Christian insights. In our lives as Christians we, too, could rise to newness of life if we would confess our sins in sincerity, turn our faces to God, be loyal to the fellowship, and venture out in Christ's name. Alcoholics Anonymous will never have the precision of thought which exists in the Christian tradition; it remains deliberately very general in its theological language because it ministers to every alcoholic just as he is. It should be remembered, however, that some theologians are precise in their thought but do not live with God.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. What is the first step required of alcoholics?
2. Discuss Bishop Emrich's statement that "man's health is not in himself".
3. Do A. A.'s demand of members anything besides that they stop drinking?
4. What part does fellowship play with them?
5. Does your parish provide fellowship? Discuss ways of providing more.
6. What place does service have with A. A.'s?
7. Does your parish require service from you? Discuss.
8. How can we, through the Church, rise to newness of life?

Talking It Over

By W. B. SPOFFORD

APROPOS of the attack on the Methodist Federation by the Reader's Digest, through the article by Stanley High, there is a little story which sheds light upon that journal (see editorial). Some years ago the late Channing Pollock wrote an article which it published on "Why I Don't Go to Church." The Digest offered a prize of $1,200 for the best answer.

Some weeks later I received a letter from Stanley High informing me that 15,000 manuscripts had been submitted and that after reading them with due care, the prize had been awarded to Mr. Roger William Riis. Mr. High enclosed an advance copy of the prize-winning essay and said: "I felt that you would probably wish to give it some editorial attention and, also, that you would wish to present the offer of reprints to your preacher-subscribers." In other words, a plug for the Digest.

The editorial attention I gave the matter pleased neither the owner of the journal, Mr. Dewill Wallace, nor Mr. Riis. For my comment was that Mr. Riis was a special staff writer of the Digest and that it seemed a bit odd that such a prosperous journal should pick one of its own staff for the prize from among 15,000 entrants.

Copies of my "Talking It Over" which I sent to these gentlemen brought a quick response. Mr. Wallace sent the longest telegram I ever received, telling me that Mr. Riis was an author of note and "is the worthy son of his illustrious father, Jacob A. Riis," and that Mr. High "was formerly a clergyman—who has been a frequent contributor to the Saturday Evening Post."

Mr. Riis was more personal in his response. He came to my office, fit to be tied—or more literally, ready to smack me in the nose, which he threatened to do. My answer of course was that knocking my block off would hardly prove the truth or falsity of my piece, and what about that? He contented himself by leaving in a huff.

Later that day I met him at a meeting of a committee on which we both served. He had cooled off—in any case he took a different line. He told me what the Digest job meant to him; that he really believed he served good ends by writing for it; and he rather strongly implied that he would be fired if I printed my little story. So I said, "OK, forget it."

And I meant just that. But I kept the numerous documents: the telegram from Mr. Wallace, and various letters from Mr. High and Mr. Riis, tucking them safely away in a safe deposit box. And since Mr. High and his journal have now seen fit to attack a courageous Christian organization and everyone connected with it, including my friend, Jack McMichael, who is in my book one of the top young Christians of our day, I feel justified in digging out the papers and telling this little story which sheds at least some light on the way this millions-circulation monthly functions.

To complete the story I ought to add that this incident prompted the Digest to give a second $1,200 prize the following month—this time to a person who was not a member of its own staff. So if we didn't accomplish anything else, we were instrumental in getting money into the pocket of some person who doubtless needed it more than Roger William Riis.

The Meaning of the Creed

The Seventh of a Series for Lent

By JOHN E. HINES
The Bishop Coadjutor of Texas

"ON THE THIRD DAY HE AROSE AGAIN FROM THE DEAD"

DO you remember what one of our most famous physicists said when Dr. Einstein first announced his "theory of relativity?" "I hope it isn't true," he said, "for if it is, we shall have to re-think the whole of physical theory!" You see, he was afraid, and for precisely this reason: for him and for men, physical theory had suddenly assumed a brand new dimension. It was a new view of time and space and energy. And, it was revolutionary.

So, also was the resurrection of Christ. And we must take the measure of it, if we are to understand why it is the decisive and fundamental factor in the Christian faith.

The resurrection was significant, with the mark of finality, because, to these people of the first century, the "natural order of things had been broken to pieces under their very eyes."

They had learned, through their magnificent Psalms, and elsewhere, how all nature in its delicate and seemly order, had moved upward from level to level, from plant and fish and bird, to beast and man. And, out of this crowning event of creation, man, God had selected "his people," they, themselves, for special spiritual training. Furthermore, it was "out of Zion," out of this very people, that prophecy has decreed that there should come at last the very crown of human growth, the consummation of man's hopes and aspirations—the man, after God's own heart, the anointed one.

At last, he had come! He was there in flesh and blood: the hope of Israel, and the desire of all the nations. It was Jesus of Nazareth! They had lived intimately with him, had these people, though confused by him. They had committed their souls to him, though they had also betrayed him. They had even "watered his way to the cross with their tears," so profoundly moved were they by his approaching destruction.

Vision Shattered

THEN they had to stand by, powerless, impotent, while their vision was shattered and their hopes crushed. All that seemed to them to be gracious and good in man, had gone under, beneath a tyranny which they could not suppress. Worse still, God had given them no sign. There had been no rescue, no deliverance, no "coming down from the cross" to confound his persecutors. The "silence of the grave" had closed over him, whose very word was life.

Then came the dawn. Strange news: "They have taken away the Lord out of the sepulchre, and we know not where they have laid him!"

And Peter, running to see for himself, and that other disciple, outrunning Peter. And the empty tomb, and the grave-clothes, lying, and the Lord standing in their midst saying: "Peace be unto you. Why are ye troubled? Behold my hands and my feet, that it is I, myself."

It was with this vision of the risen Lord that all life stood upright again for those who "believed."

It was not the mere comfort of knowing that Jesus, himself, was alive again, and beyond the reach of death. What was even more important was that God's purpose had not been broken. His will had held true. Even the pain and agony and misery and death, had all been leading up to this prepared end. They had worked toward the risen man, the Messiah.

Now, it would be a mis-reading of the gospel evidences, and a gross mistranslation of the Christian faith to assume, as too many have, that the good news of the resurrection means that there is no death. Nowhere (to my knowledge) does the New Testament say that. Certainly, St. Paul did not believe that. For in that same 15th Chapter of First Corinthians, he is specific: "For Christ must reign, till he hath put all enemies under his feet. And the last enemy that shall be destroyed is death."

It is true that, for St. Paul, death never simply means the "cessation of the life process." For him, death means sin, for sin is a condition of death by virtue of the fact that it is alienation from God, who is life. Yet, it is also true, that death is a fact, which has to do with the physical world, in that it puts a term to all that man pretends and to all to which the natural man attached both confidence and security.

In Dr. Tillich's book, "The Shaking of the Foundations," he relates how, in the Nuremburg war-crime trials, a witness appeared, who had lived for a time in a grave, in a Jewish graveyard in Wilna, Poland. It was the only place of any security, in which he and many others, could live after they had escaped the gas chamber. During this time he wrote poetry and one of the poems had to do with the description of birth. For in a nearby grave a young woman gave birth to a baby boy. At the delivery the eighty year old grave digger, wrapped in a shroud, assisted. And, when the new-born child uttered his first cry, the old man prayed: "Great God, hast thou finally sent the Messiah to us? For, who else than the Messiah himself can be born in a grave?"

This true story is also a parable which any Christian would do well to read in connection with the creed's insistence that Jesus rose from the dead. For the grave digger is himself a symbol of the dialectic which unites the things men see and the things for which they hope. Decades of digging graves had crystallized for him, this digger of graves, the sombreness of man's finiteness and the inexorable fact of death. But centuries of spiritual striving had created in him something stronger, the hope of deliverance for the people of faith.

Birth Out of Death

THE death and burial of Christ were the removal from this earth of his whole personality. Death shall mean the same for us. The women, the high priests, the soldiers, the blocked tomb were all witnesses to this fact. But the old grave digger of the parable is witness to even more profound fact, namely, "that only the Messiah can bring birth out of death." The "new" life would not be new unless it came from the completed end of the old. Jesus, himself, seals this with his reassurance, "Because I live, ye shall live also." Therefore, I beg of you, as Christians, do not allow anyone to pervert the faith of the resurrection by telling you that it means that death is nothing. For, they have not so known Christ.

At the same time, neither is it true to say that the good news of the resurrection means the mere survival beyond the grave. That, too, is to misunderstand. As a matter of fact, immortality, if by that we mean simply "survival," is not always "good news."

For men who have murdered the image of the uncorruptible God within them, who, like the hypocritical Pharisees or like Dives in the parable, have placed themselves on the far side of an impassible gulf. For them "immortality" is not "good news," but very bad news for, as St. John's Gospel puts it: "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth. They that have done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation."

No, these two points of view, namely, that the gospel of the resurrection means that there is not death, or that it means merely immortality of the soul, make nonsense of a gospel which reiterates that the only way to life is to die, here and now; that we must be buried, precisely that, buried in Christ's death (that is the mighty symbolism of baptism). St. Paul's observation is still pertinent when he says, "Thou foolish one, that which thou sowest is not quickened except it die."

So, this natural life of ours cannot be infused with a new life until we die. "Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption." Does that mean we are marking time until the end of this earthly existence? Not at all! The Christian life is a continual dying that it may, by God's grace, become an eternal living. We must die to self that we may live to that which is not self.

We must die to our natural attributes, which are the result of man's "fall" to pride and to lust and to pretensions to power and to ego, that we may live in the glory of a mercy and grace, which we cannot command, but which freely restores us. The Epistle to the Colossians is luminous in this matter when it says: "If ye, then, be risen with Christ, seek those things that are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. For ye are dead, and your life is hid with Christ in God. When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." That, it seems to me, is the Christian hope of immortality. That is the gospel of the resurrection. Not survival, but triumph! Not that death is nothing, but that "death is swallowed up in victory."

The True End of Man

SO the great creed was built up, which stretches itself out to embrace the entire drama of man from creation to the end of the world. That drama has found its supreme solution. Given the resurrection from the dead, all human life becomes intelligible. So long as you stop short in the natural man, in man as a creature of the earth, you have no coherent account you can make of him. He waits for no satisfying end. He finds no adequate fulfillment. His end is confusion.

It is only by the addition of a super-natural outlook that natural man shows that for which he is really meant. It is only by seeing this life on earth, so incomplete, and as a school for another life beyond the grave that this earthly life takes on consistency and reality. Only by looking beyond death can death itself become intelligible.

If you have ever stood in the great quadrangle of Duke University, by night, and directly in front of the superb gothic chapel (which stands at the head), you will likely have seen a strange sight: Flood lights, expertly placed, are thrown upon the chapel tower, sometimes flinging (when the sky is overcast) a vast "shadow-tower" above it.

This, is seems to me, is a parable of human experience, if we take it in reverse.

For the best of our life here is only the broken reflection of life which is above, and from whence cometh our help. So that the words of the Second Corinthians are prophetic:

"We know that if our 'earthly house' of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

1. Why was the resurrection significant?
2. What did people of his day think of Jesus?
3. Does the resurrection mean that there is no death?
4. What did death mean to St. Paul?
5. Does the resurrection assure us of life after death?
6. What does Bishop Hines mean by "this natural life cannot be infused with new life until we die"?
7. What is the Christian hope of immortality? Read the passage from Colossians.

PRIEST OR PASTOR?

ONE day the rector was asked by a shopkeeper, "Are you a priest or a pastor?" Judging the inquirer by his lights it seemed as if he meant to distinguish between a Roman Catholic priest and a minister of one of the Protestant denominations. Romanists frequently make this distinction. Priest to some people seems to have a sinister meaning. It connotes to them a man who stands before an altar and prays for the people, both in their behalf and in their stead. Well, what of it? Do not even the Protestants so? A pastor is one who shepherds his flock and who knows them by name and although he knows their foibles he loves them just the same. Both functions are not only the legitimate functions of a rector of a parish but the avowed duties if he takes his ordination vows seriously. Let us not shrink from names used properly. When we mean "priest" let us say "priest" and when we mean "pastor" let us say "pastor."—Raymond E. Brock.

On Church Going

By FREDERICK W. KATES
Rector of St. Stephen's, Pittsfield, Mass.

WHY don't Protestants, other than the faithful minority, go to church? Discounting the commonplace excuses generally offered for not attending public worship as being at best lame and feeble alibis for not performing one's known duty, what are the real reasons back of the poor attendance at Protestant services of worship?

One real reason, we would suggest, is that Protestants don't think attending public worship is important. That is obvious. It just doesn't make any difference to Protestants, apparently, whether public worship goes on or not. That public worship is a corporate act of putting God first in our national life and, therefore, is important if we intend to keep God at the center of our national life doesn't seem to occur to those many Protestants who are terrifyingly casual about their church duty. What is important to us we attend to. That we do not, except for a faithful few, attend public worship is eloquent evidence that to the great body of Protestants public worship isn't important.

Lack of Discipline

A SECOND real reason why Protestants as a whole do not get to church, no matter what else they'd rather do, is that we have not been trained to attend worship or else believe we've committed a serious sin. Whatever leads them to attend church, our Roman Catholic neighbors do go to church. And their example shames us. We may not like the things they believe and do, their Jesuit tactics, their Vatican politics, but, like it or not, they are strong and waxing stronger while we limp along handicapped because two-thirds of our nominal membership seldom gets near the church except on Christmas and Easter or when some spectacular event is scheduled or to ask a favor or get a hand-out.

We haven't been trained to attend public worship or believe we've committed a grave sin against God. Maybe so, and maybe not. The minimum duty of a churchman is the same for Protestants or other Christians by whatsoever names they may be called. Every churchman is committed to a threefold pledge: to attend the worship of God in his church every Sunday, to say his prayers, and to give and labor for the extension of Christ's kingdom. We have been taught this, or the clergy are unpardonably remiss.

Our trouble is that we in the Protestant Churches haven't enforced this minimum rule of conduct by threats of excommunication, damnation, hell-fire, and discipline. It would be regrettable indeed if we have to resort to such measures, but meanwhile our public worship is far from the majestically inspiring experience it could be if a good majority of those who claim to be members attended.

It's a sad thing for America that present-day Protestants, descendants of people who came to these shores above all things to enjoy freedom of worship now interpret freedom of worship to mean the liberty not to worship at all. And it will be a sadder day if public worship is not kept up enthusiastically by the free will and volition of Christians who want to go to church rather than who go because of some fear or threat.

Need to Arrest Trend

IT'S high time we who are clergymen and we who are parents arrest this trend of making church-going an optional requirement of the Christian life. Our generation is reaping the pay-off of generations of casual and easy-going indifference about church-going, and the spiritual impoverishment of our people and nation is glaring testimony of the tragedy and folly of our course.

The final reason why so many Protestants do not go to church is simply that they don't want to go. They are glad to accept all the blessings the good Lord gives them, but they feel no obligation to offer to God something in return. To receive gifts from anyone without expressing one's thankfulness is to be guilty of rank ingratitude. To neglect participation in corporate worship is not only to weaken one's personal faith, to reduce the influence and witness of the Church, and to encourage atheism and worldliness, but in the end it will contribute to the loss of all liberty whenever a dictator arises to fill the vacuum in our souls.

This is, in truth, a serious matter. If church-going is not important to you and if you are not training by word and example your children to consider it important, you are casting your vote to close the doors of the Protestant Churches of America, to forfeit the liberty we now enjoy, and to turn the nation over to whatever sinister forces or individuals can then readily take command.

Either American Protestants get back to their churches, or we'll have a generation of heathen barbarians on our hands who will make Hitler and his fiendishly foul gang resemble cherubic choir-boys at a Sunday-School picnic. Either the public worship of Protestant America waxes enthusiastic and popular again, or we'd might as well admit our spiritual bankruptcy and quit deceiving ourselves that we want America to continue being a Christian nation of free men.

Sexual Laxity

By REV. ELDRED JOHNSTON

Assistant Minister, Christ Church, Dayton

IT'S a common American boast, spoken or implied, that our morality is higher than that of most nations. We ridicule the French, the Russians, the Italians, the Mexicans for their moral laxity. Yet there is abundant evidence that sexual habits in America are approaching the license which characterized Roman civilization in the period of its greatest decadence.

America needs a prophetic message today—clear, sharp, and to the point: "Sexual laxity is a violation of the law of God and is therefore a certain and speedy way to unhappiness."

I see three basic causes for the widespread libertinism of our day:

One, Hollywood, thrill magazines, and popular novels have sold the masses of people the idea that the sexular experience is purely physical. This is a fallacy. Such an experience is interwoven in the heart and soul and emotions of the person. It has to do with loneliness, selfishness, heartaches, boredom, and the hunger for love and ambition. Hollywood would have us think—(pardon; let me start that again)—Hollywood would have us feel that it is simply a momentary physical fling. The truth is that one act of sexual abuse can wreck a life—or two—or three!

Two, married men have allowed themselves to be caught in a whirlpool of activism: business, social, recreational, political. They are too busy to live—too busy to respond to the normal influences of life. In their homes and families are many opportunities for happy and satisfying experiences. But they think they have no time for them, so they grab cheap and hurried physical experiences outside the home. That is why they remain unhappy and dissatisfied—because their experiences are physical and nothing more.

What one really is after in the sex experience is the fulfillment of the desire to be wanted and loved and needed. This can be found supremely with one's wife and children—but it takes time and effort.

Three, we have divorced religion and sex. We have turned over all sex discussion to the pulp magazines and Hollywood. We have implied that sex is only to be mentioned in a whisper, shamefaced manner. Absurd! Let it be proclaimed (yes, even from the pulpit!) that God created this thing for a noble purpose; and when used in the way he intended it brings happiness; and when misused or abused it brings inescapable unhappiness!

In fact, secular psychology notwithstanding, religion offers the only basic solution for this problem. Religion refuses to allow us to use another person as a "thing." Every person is a sacred personality of infinite worth. Religion rejects the double standard of morals. A man having relations with a low woman drags his body and soul down to her level. Religion alone can give one the power to conquer. Do we really want strength? Then we must remember that there is one who wants us to be strong even more than we want it! This one can and will help us the very moment we decide with all our heart to let him enter and rule our entire life.

Immorality is not inescapable, for God is on the side of all who sincerely desire to rise above it. And he who walks with God walks on the only road to complete happiness.

Church People Are Funny

IT makes me laugh to hear a faithful non-attendant at church services explain his absenteeism with the same old line about not enjoying unfamiliar hymns. When asked what hymns he would like, always comes the same answer, "Well,— 'Onward, Christian Soldiers'." And there the list ends. I ask you, isn't it a bit funny for one to join with fervor in the singing of "Onward, Christian Soldiers" when, so far as he is concerned, there is nothing onward about it, and as a Christian soldier he is missing from roll-call about fifty times out of fifty-two?

Realizing fully that it is the tune and not the words that appeals to most of us, I still think it is a good idea to mean what we say, even when we sing it. Why doesn't someone write some new words to that good old tune so that the "mighty army" of sloth may put truth as well as tune into their singing? Such, for instance, as:

Backward, Christian slackers, Sliding to the rear,
At our post of duty
Once or twice a year.

Reply Requested

By PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

Rector of the Ashfield Parishes

THERE are messages to which there is no reply requested. To others some response must be made. The Gospel belongs to the second type. Here it comes over the wire: "God loves you and sends his very self to you." Only ten words, but what a telegram from heaven!

Some folks getting it think: "Isn't that nice! I wonder if I'll like what he brings and will wish to do what he suggests." They look the gift horse in the mouth before deciding to accept it. And when they find some items which are hard to take or "too idealistic," they let the gift remain stored away in the attic for possible future use, in some dire emergency or just before death.

Others think: "Someone is fooling with me. God does not mess around with things in this world like telegrams. He is concerned only with spiritual matters." So they toss the message away and never recognize him at all.

Still others think: "Is it possible! I must certainly keep on the alert by prayer and thanksgiving so as to see him in everything that comes to me. And I must find some way to return such a gift. Why, I must give everything that has come to me for his use! I never expected to see him in this world! What news! I wonder if the rest of the family and the neighbors know about this. I wonder how I can get the news around the world!"

Only ten words. What is your reply?

Seeing It Through

By WILLIAM P. BARNDS

Rector, St. Matthew's, Lincoln, Nebraska

ONE summer in my youthful days I became interested in taking German lessons. I talked with an old college professor friend of mine and he agreed to tutor me in the language. He was wise with the wisdom of experience and he said something like this: "If your enthusiasm doesn't lag, you will learn some German." I soon discovered what he meant because it was one thing to think how nice it would be to be able to read German, but it was quite another thing to learn to read it!

Enthusiasm is wonderful and we can thank God for it; but more than enthusiasm is required if a task is to be completed. This applies in a real way to Church work. It is easy enough to arouse considerable enthusiasm for raising a Church budget, but it requires persistent work, careful attention to details, and a certain amount of bull-dog tenacity to complete the task so enthusiastically begun.

Many a project fails just because people do not have the willpower to see it through to the end. Many a new group is organized in parishes in answer to real needs. An enthusiastic beginning is made, but when the hard, inglorious work of building it up arises, people are unwilling to pay the price of the hard work involved.

There is simply no substitute for persistence and unremitting attention to details if a worthwhile job is to be done. Often the difference between success and failure is just a matter of staying with a project. It is easy enough to start on a Church job; the important and crucial thing is to see it through.

Trivial Religion

By H. ROSS GREER

Rector of St. Andrew's, South Orange, N. J.

"WHEN people tell me, 'I do not believe in missions,' I am tempted to answer, 'I shouldn't think you would, for the apparently superficial emphasis that many Church people put on their religion suggests that they probably would not care to share with others anything so trivial. Only where convictions based on deep faith exist, is there a strong interest in and devotion to the missionary cause'," Bishop Washburn of Newark said recently.

The religion of some people is a thoroughly trivial thing. It's cheap. Some patronize the Church and talk about "the little Church." Some regard their contributions, meager as they often are, as a sort of insurance apparently thinking, "If there is a God, he won't forget that I did my bit. I'll edge in somehow, if there is a hereafter."

The sincere desire of people who are serious about their religion is expressed in the words of the spiritual—"Lord, I want to be a Christian in my heart." To achieve that desire a changed heart will be necessary in more cases than we like to admit.

Changed hearts avoid an-hour-Sunday, best-clothes-religion, and seek to love God first on all days and in all ways and to love others for the love of God and to serve God's children whenever and wherever able to serve them.

Some who profess and call themselves Christians do the Christian religion more harm than the Society for the Advancement of Atheism.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

As a Mighty Stream. By Julian Morgenstern. Jewish Publication Society.

Studies in the progress of Judaism through history, by one of the finest scholars, one of the noblest spirits of our day. Dr. Morgenstern recently retired as President of Hebrew Union College in Cincinnati, and the trustees of the College asked him to gather together these papers for publication in his honor. The book will help Christians to understand how a modern liberal Jew looks upon religion and life, and how he holds a friendly and sympathetic attitude toward other religions without yielding up loyalty to his own.

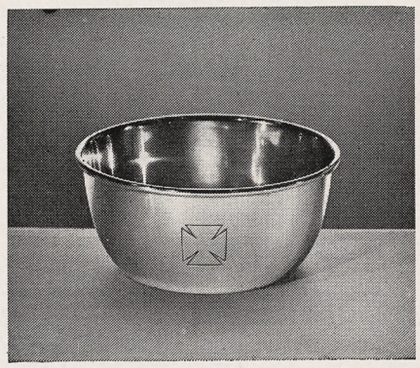
Religion and the Rise of Western Culture. By Christopher Dawson. Sheed and Ward, $3.50.

This is the second volume of Dr. Dawson's Gifford Lectures, Vol. I appearing last year as "Religion and Culture." The whole series of lectures are an elaboration and demonstration of Lord Acton's theme that the heart of culture—a culture, any culture worthy of the name—is religion. Dawson is one of the universal minds of our time; he is like Toynbee, and knows everything that has ever happened in human history! And like the Anglican Toynbee, the Catholic Dawson is a man of faith, and believes it is not too late to get back to the living fountains of cultural vitality—though we be far gone from them. A noble book.

One Man's Testimony. By Norman Goodall. Harper. $1.50.

A fascinating autobiographical statement of faith by the successor to William Paton of the International Missionary Council. The author has kept the faith in spite of the disillusioning experiences of two World Wars—in 1914-18, he was with the Artistis Rifles. His faith is a deep earnest Bible-nurtured confidence in God and his power to save.

The Westminster Study Edition of The Holy Bible. Westminster Press. $10.00.



The very least one can say of this book is that it is the most beautifully printed annotated Bible ever published. It is on thin paper, with large clear type, printed in paragraph form with paragraph sub-heads, and brief notes at the foot of the page—and it even has a concordance and an atlas. The maps in the atlas are from the larger Westminster Atlas. There are in all 2,014 pages, so that at $10.00, speaking only in quantitative terms, the book is the bargain of the year!

The introductions are clear and relevant, though brief. The point of view is more or less conservative, although modern historical and literary criticism are taken for granted. As is often the case, the writers are more conservative in the New Testament than in the Old. The introductions tend to be theological, and their theology is "confessional" (i.e. conservative Reformation theology). The church is, for example, the New Israel—a perfectly Biblical conception. In the New Testament, the sub-headings tend to be homiletical and picturesque rather than analytical, though this criticism is by no means applicable to all of them.

No publishers at the present day are doing more than the Westminster Press to open up the Bible to our generation. It is to be hoped that many more Episcopalians—as well as other Christians—will become regular Bible readers as a result of the publication of this magnificent book.

Zwingli and Cranmer on the Eucharist. By Cyril C. Richardson. Seabury-Western Theological Seminary. 25c.

Dr. Richardson's M. Dwight Johnson Memorial Lecture at Seabury-Western is a magnificent critique of Dom Gregory Dix's position. He holds that Dom Gregory is right in the main, and that Cranmer's Eucharistic doctrine was essentially the same as Zwingli's. Cranmer likewise was a nominalist in his Eucharistic theology, though a realist on the Doctrine of the Incarnation. It is a first-rate contribution to the theology of the Anglican Church in the Reformation Period.

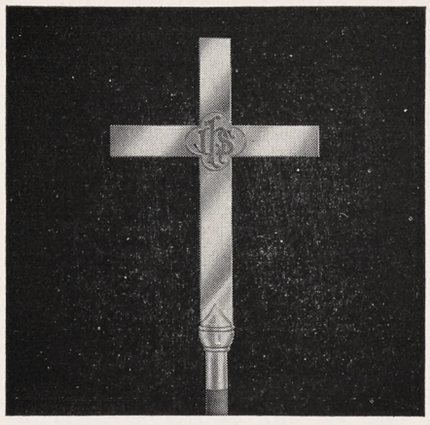
MR. HARPER PROPOSES A CHANGE

★ The Rev. Ralph M. Harper, rector of St. John's, Winthrop, Mass., has written a letter praising Tom Barrett's "Here Comes the Bride's Mother" (March 16). At the same time he thinks he has a better ending, which is as follows:



They drove on for a while in silence. "It must be heavenly in heaven," Isabel said, smiling happily, "where they neither marry nor are given in marriage. But there is one compensation on earth—the wedding fee."

"Yes, dear, you would remind me," said Mr. Entwhistle, "I forgot to give you the envelope."

Isabel opened it eagerly and read:

"Dear Reverend:

Just before the wedding my tailor took me aside in the robing room and whispered that the constable had a court summons unless I at once made a part payment on the $400 I owe him. So, Reverend, I made a decision to fork over all I had and let my father-in-law foot the bill for the honeymoon. You, I am sure, will be glad to forget the wedding fee. Surely you cannot disagree that in this instance honesty is the best policy."

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

WORLD COUNCIL HAS REAL GROWTH

Increased interest is being displayed in the World Council of Churches, in spite of attacks in some quarters, reported Henry Smith Leiper, associate general secretary of the international agency, at the meeting of U. S. member Churches held at Buck Hill Falls, Pa., March 22-23. Mr. Leiper was unable to be present because of illness. The Council is composed of 155 Churches in 44 countries.

The attacks, the report said, have come from "misinformed economic conservatives, by openly hostile and destructive fundamentalist critics, as well as by Communist sympathizers who regard the Council as the tool of western imperialism and capitalism."

RUSSIAN CHURCH LEADERS GREET STALIN

The bishops of the Russian Orthodox Church, headed by Patriarch Alexei, have sent a message to Stalin hailing him as "the teacher and friend of the workers," under whose leadership "racial, national and religious equality is insured."

EQUALIZE FUNERALS IN FRANCE

Bishop Jean Weber, R.C. of Strasbourg, France, has decreed that funerals will in the future be the same for everyone regardless of social or financial position of the family. The only exceptions will be in the case of celebrities whose work warrants "a certain pomp" as a tribute to their achievements.

SEES CHRISTIANITY SURVIVING IN SOVIET ZONE

Bishop Otto Dibelius of Berlin, speaking in the French zone of Germany, said that "a hardened Christendom is developing in the Soviet zone which justifies great hopes for the Church in the future." He also warned leading churchmen that the Church must not commit itself "either for the east or the west in the party-political struggle."

AUSTRALIAN CHURCH LEADERS COOL TO VATICAN PLEA

Church leaders in Australia declared that they are not prepared to enter into reunion discussions with the Roman Church on the basis of "absorption" into Roman Catholicism. One of the spokesmen was Anglican Bishop William Hilliard of Sydney who said: "We are ready to confer but only on a sincere basis of union without the sacrifice of principles." The moderator of the Presbyterian Church and the president of the Wales Methodist Conference took the same stand, with the latter declaring that "no Protestant Church would repudiate its great Reformation principles."

CHURCH ISOLATIONISM DECLARED DOOMED

Ecclesiastical isolationism, like the national variety, is doomed according to Bishop John Dixon of the Church of England in Canada. "If Christians cannot exhibit brotherhood, secular churches spring up which witness to fellowship if only on a national plane," he said at a service for Protestants of all denominations in Montreal. "The very word 'communion' is being taken away from us by the disciples of Marx who find in it a secret of a life of corporate solidarity."

VATICAN REPRESENTATIVE LEAVES PRAGUE

Monsignor Ottavio de Liva, last remaining Vatican representative in Czechoslovakia, left Prague by plane on March 20 for Rome. He had been ordered out of the country for alleged subversive activities. Meanwhile leaders of other Churches in the country took the oath of allegiance to the state at a formal ceremony.

SOCIAL WORK SCHOOL IN GERMANY

Aided with $50,000 from American Lutherans, an Evangelical school for social work has been set up in a castle near Betzdorf, Germany. It will provide special training for clergy and laity engaged in all types of social activity.

WAVE OF RIOTS IN AFRICA

Religious workers among Johannesburg's Negro population report a new wave of rioting in native towns near the city. The Rev. H. Leach of St. Alban's mission for Negroes said that "it is a regular thing nowadays for non-whites, colored and natives, to be insulted and assaulted by young men who appear clearly to resent the presence of non-whites at all. The object of their attacks on natives seems to be based on nothing more than the fact that these people are not white. This attitude causes a burning resentment among non-whites. The younger Negro people, impatient of the wise counsel of their elders, have reached the stage where they demand immediate retaliation. Frustration is relieved by action."

MINISTER SEEKS OFFICE ON FREEDOM ISSUE

Campaigning on a "freedom of religion" issue, the Rev. Glenn D. Miller, Methodist of Mountain View, Cal., seeks a place on the city council. He said the action of the council in denying a permit for the construction of a Mormon tabernacle induced him to enter politics. He maintains that any denomination has a right to organize and establish a place of worship.

FOREIGN STUDENTS VISIT VILLAGE

Bertha, Minn., a village of 600 persons, was host recently to 42 foreign students attending the University of Minnesota. They came from 21 countries. It was their first look at life in rural America. They toured farms and the village's business places, attended meetings of farmers groups, went to a folk dance and attended churches.

CONTROL OF MAN SEEN AS REAL PROBLEM

Effective means of controlling men is the crucial problem in international affairs, according to Andrew C. Cordier, assistant to the head of the UN. Addressing the laymen's movement for a Christian world order in New York, he conceded that "the prevailing sense of pessimism appears justified on the basis of radio and newspaper reports" but added that "these accounts do not properly evaluate the hard facts of life. They do not, for example, assess the power utilized by the prophets, the power contained in the Psalms, or in the life of Jesus". He said that the UN had demonstrated successfully that moral pressure could be employed in solving international disputes.

SEVEN-DAY FAST FOR PEACE

About fifty persons connected with Churches are to go to Washington to start a "seven-day fast for peace", which will start tomorrow, April 1, at midnight and be continued until Easter morning. Leaders are A. J. Muste, director of the Fellowship of Reconciliation and a Presbyterian minister, and Dorothy Day, editor of the Catholic Worker.

Some 1,460 business firms in Buffalo, N. Y. have been urged to cooperate in a more reverent observance of Good Friday. in class". He also reported cases of children suffering emotional upsets from watching programs unfit for them.

SEES U. S. HEADED TOWARD POLICE STATE

Robert W. Searle of the Protestant Council of New York, stated in an address in that city that he sees "a move toward police state methods" in legislation governing control of atomic energy information. He also said he was disturbed by some government regulations concerning loyalty tests. He declared that "any man who sticks his neck out on any issue, racial for example, or international, can be a suspect."

ERNEST R. BROMLEY GOES TO JAIL

Ernest R. Bromley, Methodist minister of Wilmington, O., was jailed on a charge of resisting arrest during eviction from his two-room apartment. He maintains that he and his wife and baby were evicted because of his campaign against segragation in the schools. The owner of the apartment said that he was evicted because of his association with Peacemakers, a pacifist organization, and because of his refusal to pay federal income tax, which he did not pay since such a large part of the national income is for war purposes. Mr. Bromley, while living in Wilmington, has no church at the present time.

MINISTERS ASK TAX ON DIVORCES

A proposal to impose a tax of $25 on every divorce granted in Arkansas, was approved by the ministers of Rogers, Ark. It would bring the state about $240,000 if it became law.

RICHMOND NEGROES REFUSE TO BE SEGREGATED

Members of the 62 Negro churches in Richmond, Va., took no part in an eight day preaching mission held in that city, since the segregation law permits them to attend meeting with whites only if they sit in a reserved section. The mission was attended each evening by about 5,000 persons. Speakers during the mission were Franklin C. Fry, president of the United Lutheran Church, who deplored the middle class nature of Protestant Churches; George A. Buttrick, Presbyterian of New York, who said of the present social order: "Mend it and we won't have to defend it." Another speaker was Ralph W. Sockman, Methodist of New York, who was optimistic about peace. "Goodness has been crucified many times but it manages to survive. We have liberty only through discipline. God has not empowered man to set off a chain reaction to destroy the world."

NURSES REJECT BEQUEST

The visiting nurses association of Hartford, Conn., has turned down a bequest of $5,000 since the use of the money is limited to Protestant patients. Spokesman for the group declared that it "is contrary to the principles of the organization."

BAPTIST OPPOSE AID TO CHURCH HOSPITALS

The Baptists are opposed not only to federal aid to schools connected with Churches, but oppose also any grants to Church hospitals. This decision was made at a joint conference held in Washington attended by representatives of the Northern, Southern and National Baptist Conventions. The decision was based on the historic position of Baptist Churches on the separation of Church and state.

GROUP REFUSES TO PAY WAR TAXES

A group of 48 men and women, including eight clergymen, in various parts of the U. S. refused to file income tax returns as a protest against "bomb building" and war. Some refused to pay that part which "corresponds to the percentage of the national budget now allocated to war preparation", while others refused to pay anything on the ground that "the major activity of the federal government is war."

JOHN KREMER
Layman of Overbrook, Pa.

Send extra copies of March 9 as I want to give them to a priest who has discussion groups of young people. My, what the Church owes to Dr. Bell.

DAVID C. HUNTINGTON
Retired clergyman of Waterford, N. Y.

Dr. Bell's thought-provoking article on the Church calls for a rejoiner. After all, does not the fashionable church serve a purpose anyway? It helps its own church members to remember and recognizes God. In it they can keep the first part of the summary of the commandments. What Dr. Bell deplores in churchmen is the neglect of the second part of the summary i. e. loving one's neighbor as much as he does himself.

The Rev. Charles Kennedy's Lenten sermon here was a brilliant answer to the objection that church services were "dull." Now allowing that they seem dull, why is it? Because in following the Church year, there is an endless repetition. People are never "stung with the pleasure of a sudden thought," a la Milton. Church members have been receivers and not givers. They become as dead, as the Dead Sea, which receives but never gives. Just as soon as a person has been converted, he should plan to convert others, either in the church school, or by cooperating in starting a mission in a new suburban district, or by giving a tithe to the church treasury. I remember a new vestryman asking the others how much he ought to give. The warden said "one dollar." I was young then and afraid they would think me a crack-brained idealist, so did not raise that amount to a tithe. Had I done so I might have saved his life by helping him to think that he was of some use in the world. It might have prevented him from committing suicide, which he afterwards did. It is always needful to remember and recognize God in the family, in the Church, and in the nation. "The nation which forgets God will go down quick into hell."

My idea of the Church is that every church should be a rescue mission. If it becomes a rescue mission, bringing the rich and poor together (like Nelson's church in Cincinnati) when the old aristocrats die off, there will still be a congregation of potential aristocrats, gathered from the slums (this is the only practical method of slum clearance—any other method will fail). Baalam said "Let me die the death of the poor" for by his expressed wish he was buried among them.

Lastly, ought not every church to become the mother of churches? Planting them in outlying districts as Dr. Smith of Buffalo did. Lay-readers could conduct Sunday schools and services in localities convenient to the population. When studying in New York someone told me that Grace Church had ten millionaires in the congregation. With all that wealth I wondered how many churches Grace Church would be able to found, should all those rich men give a tithe to the Lord. Did they regard the church as an object of charity or as a charitable institution itself? As an object of charity it is patronized and contemptible. As an institution to help the body as well as the soul and an agency to bring the world to Christ, even the business world might be induced to respect it.

CULTURAL MEANING OF THE BIBLE

Louis Wallis's THE BIBLE AND MODERN BELIEF explains from a novel scientific point of view the significance of the Bible as a factor in your inherited cultural tradition. The book emphasizes that the ancient Hebrew people never had a Bible; that the Hebrew nation passed out of existence, leaving only a single remnant—the tribe of Judah, from which is derived the name Jew; and that the Bible which we have was actually created by Judaic scribes, working in the Babylonian Captivity and after.

The Chairman of the Department of Semitic Languages at Harvard, Robert H. Pfeiffer, writes:

Dropping everything else, I devoted the day to this fascinating new volume. I like it immensely. It shows the deep conflict between Ephraim and Judah and the efforts of ecclesiastical Judaism to play down and even eliminate the contributions of Ephraim to the advance of Biblical religion. Both Jews and Christians owe Louis Wallis a debt of gratitude for this illuminating volume.

Professor Isaac G. Matthews, of the Crozer Theological Seminary, writes:

The "Tabernacle in the Wilderness" is, for the first time, shown to be what scholars have suspected—a priestly fiction. Yet all the essentials of religion are conserved.

STORY OF THE WEEK

World Council Program Needs Much Broader Base

Bishop Angus Dun Says the Episcopal Church Lacks Ecumenical Consciousness

★ Bishop Angus Dun of Washington underscored the need for bringing the program of the World Council of Churches into "the main channels of the Church's life" and to clergymen and laymen on the local level. In an address before the meeting of the conference of USA member Churches of the World Council, Bishop Dun also outlined another major task facing the Council: "to actualize on the continents, in countries, in neighborhoods the measure of unity we have formalized in world terms and at top levels."

He pointed out that delegates to the 1948 Amsterdam Assembly of the World Council pledged themselves "to stay together;" yet, he added, "how hard it is to commit a whole Church to an on-going responsible relationship that will truly engage its whole life." He cited the Episcopal Church as an illustration, observing that "my own Church is as yet tied into the World Council, and likewise into the Federal Council of Churches, on the periphery of its life rather than at the center. I am sure "that my own Church needs to think and to act in fresh ways if it is to carry through within its own structure and life the commitment it has made in joining the World Council. Others must say whether this is true of their Churches."

Bishop Dun asserted that nothing has done more in recent years to develop "ecumenical consciousness" than the widespread participation of congregations and individual Church members in contributing to inter-Church aid. But he said he could not be optimistic "about the speed with which we can nurture an informed ecumenical consciousness among our people."

"Will for unity" is not enough, he said, because it can be "frustrated and blocked by failure to take seriously the fact that a Church has a body and habit patterns."

The Episcopal leader said the first World Council Assembly agreed to carry forward together the work of the two world movements for unity in faith and order, and in life and work; to facilitate common action by the Churches, to promote cooperation and study, to promote the growth of ecumenical consciousness, to establish relations with denominational federations of world-wide scope, to call world conferences on specific subjects, and to support the member Churches in their task of evangelism.

"In still broader terms," Bishop Dun continued, "it can be said that our Churches have undertaken to look towards one another; to carry forward a serious and dynamic conversation with one another about our differences in faith, in message, in order; to move as near to one another as our consciences will permit."

These objectives, he said, raise two questions: "How can our Churches be brought to gear into that commitment at the centers of their life?" and "How can our commitments be put to work in the much publicized 'grass roots'?"

As an answer to these problems, the bishop quoted the message of Amsterdam as expressing "our best conviction when it says, 'Our coming together to form a World Council will be vain unless Christians and Christian congregations everywhere commit themselves to the Lord of the Church in a new effort to seek together, where they live, to be fit witnesses and servants among their neighbors'."

GROUP PRAYS FOR PEACE

★ Organized by a group of world war veterans at a meeting in Manchester, N. H., in 1948, a prayer-for-peace movement has spread to many parts of the United States and to other lands. More than 750 organizations have adopted the practice of having daily prayers at noon, asking that the nations of the world shall be led into the ways of peace. Organizations concerned with the movement include churches, business and industrial organizations, and civic groups.

Interviewed by Comtesse Alain de Pierrefeu, one of the leaders of the movement, Presiding Bishop Sherrill stated his belief that such prayer, offered by Christian people everywhere is certain to be of value, and expressed the hope that this plan will be adopted by many members of the Church.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

ELEANOR ROOSEVELT GETS AWARD

★ Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Episcopalian, received the annual award for social justice, made by the Religion and Labor Foundation. She was cited as a "valiant fighter in the people's cause, champion of justice and fair play, never wavering in democracy's defense."

Prof. Kermit Eby of the University of Chicago, formerly a labor leader, told the meeting of the Foundation, held in Cincinnati, that there were two methods of dealing with our problems, the political and the religious. With the latter, he said, we "stand on principles only at the times when principles do not conflict with our desires." A religious solution means "being willing to live for what we believe and willing to sacrifice our lives for it." He cited Jesus and Gandhi as examples.

UNIVERSITY PARISH OFFERS LECTURES

★ A series of lectures were offered on Wednesday evenings in March by professors at the University of Syracuse, held at Grace Church which serves Episcopalians at the university. There were also lectures on the creed by Rector Walter N. Welsh, and one on politics and economics by the Rev. Laurence Hosie, director of the local council of churches.

CHANCEL CROSS IS DEDICATED

★ A chancel cross made of ebony, walnut, oak and teak, which is thirteen by seven and a half feet, was dedicated last Sunday at St. George's, New York, by the rector, the Rev. Edward O. Miller. His sermon was on the history of the cross as a Christian symbol, and he stated that there were 400 known forms of the cross and forty are used in Christian worship. "The earliest form," he said, "was the plain Roman cross on which Christ was crucified and which we now have probably in its exact dimension in St. George's."

The cross was presented to the parish by Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce and Mrs. Lucius Wilmerding.

MISSION HELD IN RALEIGH

★ The Rev. Daniel A. McGregor, formerly the head of the department of education of the National Council, and later a professor at the school of theology, University of the South, is conducting a Holy Week mission at the Church of the Good Shepherd, Raleigh, N. C. His theme is the gospel and the needs of man.

ELECTED PRESIDENT OF URBAN LEAGUE

★ The Rev. John Baiz, rector of Christ Church, Warren, Ohio, has been re-elected president of the Urban League of that city, this being his third term. The first president was also the rector of Christ Church, the Rev. Rudolph E. Schultz.

HOW ROBIN CHEN WAS ELECTED

★ A letter from Alice Gregg from Shanghai tells of the procedure in the recent election by the Chinese Church of Bishop Robin Chen to be bishop of Anking.

On the first morning the chairman explained that the election might be by nomination from the floor, or that it might be under the direct guidance of the Holy Spirit, each delegate writing the name he chose on his ballot. This latter was favored. The election took place after lunch. We sang, Come Gracious Spirit, Heavenly Dove, and the Rev. Hunter Yen led us in prayer. Two lay delegates passed out the clergy ballots, and two clergy delegates passed out the lay ballots. Two tables were brought in each with the big red sheet for us to sign with Chinese brush. A hush fell as the four with the ballots stood ready to give the results. The lay spokesman said, "Mr. chairman, number of clergy ballots, 14; for Ch'en Chien-chen, 14 votes." Then Arthur Wu said, "Mr. chairman, number of lay ballots, 22; for Ch'en Chien-chen, 22 votes." In a moment the room was full of people wiping their eyes and blowing their noses.

CONSECRATION IN IOWA

★ The Rev. Gordon V. Smith is to be consecrated bishop of Iowa on April 20 at St. Paul's, Des Moines, where the bishop-elect has been rector for seven years. The Presiding Bishop will be consecrated, with Bishop Whittemore of Western Michigan and Bishop Roberts of South Dakota as co-consecrators. Mr. Smith will be presented by Bishop Randall of Chicago and Bishop Keeler of Minnesota, with the Rev. Phineas Casady of Berkeley, Calif., and the Rev. LeRoy Burroughs of Ames, Iowa, the attending presbyters. The sermon will be delivered by Bishop Nebraska and Bishop Mallett of Northern Indiana will be the litanist.

COUNCIL OFFICERS VISIT VIRGINIA

★ The Presiding Bishop gave a comprehensive survey of the work of the Church to the faculty, students and other members of the Virginia Theological Seminary, March 16. He spoke of the great opportunity which the world of today presents to the Church for courageous and relevant leadership.

The Bishop's address was followed the next day by a series of talks by three officers of the National Council to the senior students on specific aspects of the Church's program.

The Rev. John Heuss outlined the work of the department of Christian education, revealing both the educational weaknesses and needs of the Church and told of the developing program by which these needs are to be met.

The Rev. George A. Wieland, director of the home department, spoke of the needs and progress in the domestic mission field, in college work, rural work and in work among the Negroes.

Mr. Robert Jordan gave an interesting account of the inception and development of the one world for Christ program. He also spoke of the various ways in which the Church seeks to make its life and work known.

FOOTBALL STAR LEAVES TRINITY COLLEGE

★ Dick Aiken, sophomore, who was a real factor in bringing the Trinity College football team through last fall unbeaten and untied, is leaving college this month to do church work in Nevada. He plans eventually to enter a theological school, but says that he is anxious to get some first hand experience before making us his mind.

YOUNG ADULTS MEET IN ARIZONA

★ Arizona's contribution to the survey of young adult organizations and programs, now being made in the eighth province, was focused at a series of meetings in March at Tucson and Phoenix. Thirty-one faculty and student members attended a conference of young married couples at the Episcopal student center, Tucson, arranged by the Rev. John W. Ellison. A meeting of the "Young Marrieds" club of Grace Church, Tucson, was planned by the Rev. Jerry Wallace. At Phoenix, members of St. Anne's group, Trinity Cathedral, contributed their ideas. At the latter meeting Dean Carman was able to point out that questions asked by young mothers and wives present had been, or would be, answered in the comprehensive program which was being carried out in that alive parish.

WOMEN'S WORK FOR PEACE

★ Mrs. Lakshmi Nandan Menon, native of India who is connected with UN, was the speaker yesterday at a meeting of the women of the diocese of Newark, meeting at the cathedral house. Her subject was how women can work for peace. At present she is chief of the section on the status of women of the department of social affairs of UN.

DECISION RESERVED ON MELISH CASE

★ The appellate division of the supreme court of New York reserved decision March 29th on the appeal of the Rev. J. Howard Melish against his ouster as rector of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn. The case, submitted after two hours of verbal debate, was based on Justice Steinbrink's decision last spring upholding the legality of Bishop DeWolfe's dissolution of the pastoral relationship. Attorney Theodore Kiendl, representing the vestry which petitioned for the ouster, maintained that their action was precipitated entirely because of the outside activities of the rector's assistant and son, the Rev. W. H. Melish, "which has caused dissension in the congregation detrimental to the parish."

Lawyers for the two clergymen, as well as a committee of the parish, R. H. Weissman and William Mason Smith, argued that the vestry which petitioned for the ouster had been repudiated by 70 percent of the congregation, thus nullifying its petition. They argued further that at no time was a bishop authorized to rule on the dissolution of the pastoral relationship except at the request of either the congregation or the pastor. They also maintained that the case should not have been considered by Justice Steinbrink since the vestry had not exhausted its ecclesiastical remedies.

Chancellor Jackson A. Dykman of Long Island, representing Bishop DeWolfe, countered with the contention that there was no provision in canon law for review of a bishop's decision. He declared that it was fundamental to the Episcopal Church that the power descends from the bishop to the congregation, adding that in this case the bishop's action on the standing committee's report must be "the ultimate judgment."

A date for the decision on the appeal was not set.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH LEADS IN RELIEF

★ It is so seldom that the Episcopal Church is at the top of a list for good works that we hasten to present figures of contributions in 1949 to Church World Service. Our Church contributed $459,477. Southern Presbyterians were second with $314,761; Disciples, $231,092; Lutherans, $142,525; Northern Presbyterians, $132,190; Evangelical and Reformed, $129,434; Congregational Christian, $99,428; Methodist, $82,293.

CONSECRATION DATE FOR KIMBER DEN

★ The Rev. Kimber Den will be consecrated Bishop of Chekiang on April 25th at St. John's Cathedral, Shanghai. A letter from him, dated March 9, reached The Witness March 28. "This new call came to me as a very pleasant surprise," he writes, "and I have accepted it most gratefully and humbly as a call from above. I do not deny at all the great honor and dignity bestowed upon me with this new call to the episcopal office. But, as you know, that high office of the Church is always inseparable from great responsibilities and incessant toil for the cause of Christ's kingdom. It makes me tremble with fear when I think of the magnitude of the task of that great diocese of Chekiang, which is the oldest and largest one in China under the Anglican Missionary Society. By God's grace I believe I may find strength in him, the source of all power and I take up this great call as an adventure of faith. I need all the prayers of all my good Christian friends in America for more wisdom, vision and courage to meet the challenge ahead.

"Please don't forget me for I am the same old Kimber Den, a humble brother of yours in Christ. Even after our move to Hangchow, the see city, I'll still continue to support all those social welfare works, such as the leprosarium, blind school and the Kiangsi Rural Service Center, and they will have my personal attention. The Marcia Spofford Memorial School at Lotus Pond Village especially will continue to have my persinal attention."

It has been some months since The Witness asked for contributions for the great work of Kimber Den, due to the impossibility of getting funds to him in China. It is now possible to do so, therefore if there are those who care to make contributions please make checks payable to The Witness, writing Kimber Den Fund, in the lower left hand corner, and mail to The Witness, Tunkhannock, Pa. Contributions will be sent him as frequently as the total justifies.

ARCHBISHOP CRITICIZES VATICAN DECREE

★ Recent instructions on Church union discussions issued by the Vatican were criticized March 28th by the Archbishop of York, who said that they will "cause great disappointment to those working for Christian unity." He described the Vatican instructions as "restrictive rather than permissive."

"It would be difficult," he said, "for visitors from another world reading these carefully guarded permissions to understand that they concern discussions, not between Christians and militant atheists, but between those who believe in the same God and Savior."

Archbishop Garbett criticized what he declared was the assumption that "submission to Rome is the only reunion which the Roman Catholic Church can contemplate."

THE MARCH 12TH BROADCAST

★ Quoting a high official of a broadcasting company, Robert D. Jordan, director of the department of promotion of the National Council, said that the radio hookup arranged for Presiding Bishop Sherrill's address Marsh 12 was the largest ever used, except for special broadcasts by the President of the United States.

The broadcast was carried by 680 radio stations in the United States, Hawaii, Alaska, the West Indies and Central America. In addition, more than 300 electrical transcriptions were sent out, and for the use of tiny isolated missions and places where radio reception is poor, more than 500 phonograph records of the address were shipped. The radio address was carried by stations belonging to all four of the national networks.

It is impossible to estimate accurately the size of the listening audience. Based on the number of orders for supplies that were received and shipped by the National Council's Department of Promotion, it is believed that 4,500 parishes and missions were equipped with radio receiving sets to hear the address during the regular church service.

It is too early to make even a preliminary report on the amount of the offering. A number of parishes have written and wired that they are "over the top." The first reports from dioceses conveying the assurance that they are sure they have reached their quotas came from Rochester, Northern Michigan, East Carolina, West Missouri.

CONVOCATION OF CENTRAL BRAZIL

★ The new missionary district of Central Brazil held its first convocation in Sao Paulo, at Trinity Church, February 14-17. Twenty-five lay delegates and alternates were present and 19 stayed for the entire four days. Bishop Louis C. Melcher, in his convocation address, called for a missionary spirit to be pursued through larger confirmation classes, increased self-support, and the opening of new work. The laymen present pledged their full support to this program.

The convocation devoted considerable time to consideration of a program for youth, deciding to "give special attention to the organization of the Uniao do Mocidade Episcopal in parishes where the national program has not been used."

The convocation asked the bishop to hold clergy conferences and to send out regular instruction on the doctrine, discipline and worship of the Church. "In view of the interest on the part of the laymen it was requested also that lay conferences be held."

RABBI PREACHES AT UNION SERVICE

★ Rabbi Sidney S. Tedesche of Union Temple, Brooklyn, was a preacher last week at one of the noonday services held at Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, and sponsored by the church federation of the city.

"In these days of catastrophe," Tedesche continued, "it seems small consolation to be reminded that other periods have been marked also by catastrophe. But we must remember that, in spite of recurrent crises and wars, great advances have nonetheless taken place. For the average man life has been lengthened twenty years. Health has been improved. Labor has been lightened by science, and leisure increased. These are the other side of the coin. Our problem is whether the gift of time has made us happier, more contented, or better men. Indeed, with the juggernaut of destruction threatening to roll once

The Easter Faith

YEAR after year Easter always means hope to men of despair. It speaks in a very personal way to those who stand bereft and stunned in the presence of death. It speaks to those who suspect the game is nearly up and ask, What's the use? It speaks to all of us today living in a world which may not be for long. In the midst of our pessimism and talk-talk of bombs and self, the year comes round again to spring and God keeps faith with us as for a thousand-thousand times before. The very feeling of spring stirs the human heart with fresh hope. But ours is more than a celebration of nature's annual miracle and the revival of her brightness. Our hope should be quite pathetic and wistful were this all that Easter meant. Ours is a hope surpassingly more personal and reassuring. Ours is hope and trust in the one who made the earth so fair, and brought again from the dead his Christ for us men and for our salvation.

In a world obsessed by the futility of human devices, Easter celebrates the omnipotence of God. This does not mean that God can do anything. He cannot make a square circle. He cannot make man with freedom of will and then force him to choose the good. He is not a magician! The omnipotence of God really means that nothing, literally nothing, can ever finally thwart his purpose. Though we refuse the Christ and crucify him on the cross, God is not mocked. Christ remains the one way to the kingdom of our heart's desire, peace on earth and good will to man. He stands triumphantly across the years of time, not dead and buried, but risen and victorious, the one whom we must heed or perish in the strife.

Easter comes this year as we talk of the destruction of the world and build up stockpiles of desolation. The vitalities of the universe are in our hands, and we tremble when we contemplate the future. Well may we fear man's evil, but on such a day as this we take heart in the invincible faith of the Christian ages. At the heart of all created things there is a spiritual meaning once revealed so convincingly in Christ. This shall not fail whatever man may do. We believe in the omnipotence of the love of God which was in Christ, that though the heathen rage so furiously nothing shall finally thwart God's will and purpose. Let men boast and warn of their capacity to annihilate all human life from the face of the earth. We doubt not the possibility of fearful catastrophe, but man's pride and evil must also reckon with the Almighty who has not made the world in vain. The last word is his as it was after Good Friday. On a similar day when the earth was dark and hope was low, there dawned a morning when the sun rose high and life had vanquished death.

"QUOTES"

THE Resurrection makes strong demands upon faith. We live in a world dominated by science, in which law reigns from center to circumference of our vast universe. People say, "Dead men do not come to life again," and there is an end of it. And yet what a desolate world ours would be if the gates of death closed upon us forever! It would be a world where we would have to accept the presence in high places of envy, hatred, cruelty, avarice, and tragedy. It would be a world in which Christ would be forever dead and God would be defeated. Jesus and death do not belong to each other. Death is death. Jesus is life, eternal life. In the presence of Jesus we become alive to God.

— FORWARD-DAY-BY-DAY

Easter Evening

ON Easter Evening we are standing between the greatest tragedy of human history and the greatest hope of human life: between Good Friday and Easter Day.

The questions arise in our minds at once, why was the one necessary? How can the other be true?

Of course we would rejoice to rise from the dead if it didn't seem so impossible! But how can we hope for such beatitude when we are surrounded by such injustice?

These two great mysteries—the mystery of darkness, the mystery of life—meet in the twilight of Easter Evening when the body of Jesus is lying still, wrapped in the clothing of the dead and, we are told, his spirit is in the place of departed spirits, telling them that the doors of their prison shall be opened.

It all reads like a fairy tale to those who believe that the material world is the only substantial fact in life and who think that a belief in the supernatural is a foolish superstition which should not engage the serious attention of those who walk by sight and not by faith.

Of course it all depends on our viewpoint. If in looking at life we find that it is merely a process which is solely dependent upon physical sight and logical conclusions, then surely nothing can be required of us but physical exercise and mental gymnastics, but if the life of Jesus Christ reveals to us a more excellent way, then surely it is not to be explained by these processes.

To Jesus death is such a grim reality that he shrinks from it more than the ordinary man, but while it is the last enemy of man, it can be overcome and so he commends his spirit into his Father's hands as one who confidently expects that God will overcome it.

And the curious thing is that when men accept this view of things sincerely, they find the fruits of the spirit, love, joy and peace.

Current Movements and Christianity

SECULARISM AND HUMANISM: Ally, Competitor or Both?

By GEORGE F. THOMAS
Professor of Religious Thought at Princeton University

THERE can be no question about the danger of secularism and humanism in our age. Together, they probably constitute the greatest contemporary challenge to the Christian faith. This is obvious enough in the case of Russia, whose leaders have openly championed secularism in its most militant form. It is less obvious but not less true in the case of America. We have not officially repudiated our Christian heritage and adopted secularism as our national ideology. But our loyalty to the Christian faith has been seriously weakened and secularism has become much stronger during the last few generations. The tragic events of the last decade, it is true, have shaken the blatant confidence of a great many Americans about secular humanism and some of them have returned to Christianity as to the rock from which they were hewn. But secular humanists have not been routed. The intellectual and social forces that produced their shallow creed are still operative. And Christians are still too confused in their thinking and divided in their strategy to take full advantage of their new opportunity.

If the Church is to be more effective than it has been in its struggle against secularism and humanism, it must understand more clearly what they are and how they have arisen. Secularism is primarily an attitude or temper of mind and only secondary a theory. It is the attitude of the man who acknowledges only the things and values of the natural world. He may not deny the reality of supersensible things and values—indeed, on Sundays he may even profess belief in and devotion to them—but he does not really regard them as important, indeed, he usually ignores them altogether in his thought and conduct. Whether he is conscious of it or not, he lives by a naturalistic philosophy and ethic. He is not only in but of the world. This world is all and it is enough.

Creed of Humanism

MOST secularists are also humanists. Like all humanists, they have a high view of man and a profound faith in his capacity to direct his own course by reason. But their humanism has little in common with either classical or Christian humanism. They regard man simply as a part of nature. True, they assert the uniqueness of man. Man possesses intelligence and is able to transmit his culture with the aid of words and other symbols. The humanist may even speak of the human spirit and its values. But to him man is essentially a product of the evolutionary process, a highly complex animal; and his unique capacities and spiritual values bear no relation to a supersensible, spiritual reality. Man may be the highest product of nature; but he does not have the dignity of a being made in the image of God.

Secularism and humanism are only different sides of the modern world view that began to develop at the time of the Renaissance. This world view has been characterized above all by three things: a pre-occupation with the task of understanding and mastering nature by means of the scientific method; an obsession with the production and enjoyment of material goods; and a profound confidence in the rationality and moral possibilities of man. Though modern thinkers such as Pascal and Carlyle had pointed out the limitations of the scientific method, practical materialism, and romantic optimism about man, it was only after the first world war that the superficiality of this modern world view was widely understood. The second world war revealed with startling clarity that science could be the source of great power but could do nothing to teach man its proper use. It also demonstrated that men could fall to depths of evil that had never been suspected by modern humanists.

As a result, the Church has a unique opportunity in our time to confront disillusioned men with the claims of the Christian faith. What should be its strategy?

Christian Strategy

FIRST, the Church should patiently but firmly expose the idolatry of man and his reason which has confused modern thought, reminding man that he is not the creator of the world but a finite and dependent creature. It should show him that the modern humanist's insistence upon the absolute autonomy of man is an expression of pride. It should warn him that, while his reason is one of his noblest faculties, it is fallible and needs to be illuminated by faith. Above all, it should shake him out of his moral complacency by pointing out to him his sin of self-centeredness and his dependence upon divine grace to overcome it. The primary problem of man is not ignorance or error with respect to what is right but the power to do what he knows to be right. Christianity asserts that he gains this power only by uniting himself in faith with God and letting the love of God in Christ take possession of his will. In the same manner, he attains the freedom he seeks; for perfect freedom comes not from the assertion of the autonomy of man's will but from the surrender of his will to God in service.

The Christian answer to secularism is also clear. Since secularism is based upon the illegitimate extension of the scientific method beyond its proper domain, Christians should point out the nature and limitations of the scientific method and reassert the claims of other methods of knowing such as prophetic insight. When the pretensions of the scientific method are deflated, the argument for philosophical naturalism fades away. Then the assertion of faith, based upon religious experience, that there is an invisible, spiritual Being that transcends the natural order is more likely to be heard. It is also necessary to emphasize again the transitoriness and hollowness of the material values that are so prized by modern man and to insist upon the primacy of the spiritual in life. In this way, the shallowness of the secularist's assumption that only things and values of the sensible world are real or important can be shown.

Good in Humanism

SECOND, the Church must avoid the temptation to attack indiscriminately the whole modern outlook. There is much that is good in humanism. Its fundamental principle, the dignity of man, is an integral part of the Christian faith, though it is based not upon man's inherent worth but upon his relationship to God in whose image he was made. Christians also assert the rationality of man, though they are more aware than humanists of the way man's finitude and sin narrow and distort his vision of reality. They can even agree that the insistence upon the autonomy of man is valid as a safeguard of his freedom of thought and conscience. After all, the greatest achievements of modern man, e.g., religious liberty, political democracy, and liberal education, have sprung from his belief in the individual's capacity for independent thought and action. Indeed, religion itself is strengthened rather than weakened when this belief is taken seriously, provided it is accompanied by a recognition of the dependence of the individual upon the religious community for guidance and help.

Even secularism has something to teach the Church. It reminds Christians of the inadequacy of a purely other-worldly religion which has nothing to say about the implications of religion for life in this world. An other-worldly religion will always invite the hostility of political and social liberals because of its indifference to social injustice, and other remediable evils of earthly existence. Moreover, the naturalistic philosophy which is implied in most secularism calls attention to the fact that man is not a pure disembodied spirit but that as an animal species he is part of the natural order and must adapt himself to the conditions and submit to the limitations of all creatures. It makes him aware that his spiritual life and values are deeply affected by his body and by the natural environment. As Archbishop William Temple says, "spirit arises within and as a part of an organism which is also material, and expresses its spirituality, not by ignoring matter but by controlling it." While the great religions of the East, especially India, "seek to affirm the supremacy of the spiritual by the denial of reality to the material," Christianity is committed to a belief in "the reality of matter and its place in the divine scheme." (Temple, William: Nature Man and God, pp. 477,478).

Thus, Christians must gladly accept the elements of truth in secularism and humanism. They must give full credit to those whose devotion to science and its practical applications has done so much for human happiness. They must not fear to make common cause with humanists in opposing social and other evils that impoverish the earthly life of man. Christianity has always been willing to adapt itself to new truth. On the main issue, however, there can be no compromise. Christians are committed to the belief that the things and values of the natural world in space and time point beyond themselves to God as the ultimate ground of all existence and value. They do not believe, therefore, that a world view based upon the scientific method alone can ever be adequate to the whole of reality. Nor can they ever be persuaded to substitute devotion to the ideal ends of human life for the worship of God and the service of his will.

Humanists in Churches

THIRD, the Church must realize that the secularism and humanism against which it struggles are almost as prevalent among its own members as in the world outside. Christians have no right to be self-righteous in their condemnation of the modern spirit: they are under its spell no less than unbelievers. Their worship, corporate and personal, is all too often lacking in depth and sincerity because their faith is weak. When they are outside the walls of the church, their thinking is based upon the same assumptions and their conduct is governed by the same motives as the thinking and conduct of others. To such an extent has the modern church compromised with the world that the business activities and the racial attitudes of Christians are seldom distinguishable from those of non-Christians. Even in their recreational preferences and sexual standards they are deeply influenced by secularism. Parents who make a serious effort to educate their children in Christian truth and worship are very rare. It is obvious, therefore, that the Church will never be able to overcome secularism in the world until it has cast out the secularism that has crept into its own house.

Needless to say, it must also purge itself of humanism. As men's faith in supersensible reality and value has weakened, their sense of dependence upon a higher power than their own selves has faded out. More and more, Christians have accepted devotion to ethical and social ideals as a substitute for the service of God and have assumed that they could realize their ideals without the aid of divine grace. This tendency cannot be reversed merely by exposing the error upon which it is based, a naive and romantic optimism about man. It is necessary, above all, for Christians to deepen and purify their faith in God by spiritual discipline. For it is only as man recognizes vividly the power and goodness of God that he can see his own weakness and sin. Secular humanism can be weakened by pointing out its inadequacy as a world view and way of life; but it can be destroyed only by faith in God and surrender to his will.

QUESTIONS FOR DISCUSSION

1. What is meant by secularism?
2. Do you consider this world enough?
3. What is humanism?
4. How does it differ from Christianity?
5. What are the three characteristics of humanism-secularism?
6. What should the Church do to meet the challenge?
7. What is wrong with other-worldly religion?
8. Have the group discuss their own recreational preferences and sexual standards. Are they secular or Christian?

Invitation to Communion

By ANGUS DUN
The Bishop of Washington

HOW good it would be if in the invitation to you of other Churches to share in this holy communion there were no shadow of a suggestion of hospitality shown to strangers. How good it would be if this were without any question simply brethren in Christ's one Church gathering at the table of the common Lord as brothers in one household in a time of great need.

There are things that separate us and we have not yet found the way to oneness. But there are deep things that unite us. The holy love of God in Christ, that spending, cleansing, seeking, pardoning love, has broken through to us within our separate households. Around him and his life given for us and to use we can unite. Together we face our one world with all its enmity and fear and faithlessness. And to all of us the same humbling word comes from the Lord; "Ye are the light of the world."

So as a kind of foretaste of the oneness the One Lord seek for us, whether or not we seek it for ourselves, we gather here around this table, which is also altar, place of fellowship and place of offering.

Out of our common past there come to us the words of the book we all treasure, "In the beginning God" and nothing else. And God made all things and man in his image, sharing with man even a little of his own creative power. And, at long last, man, by his cunning, has entered into the secrets of the most high and fashioned for death and for chaos what was meant for life and beauty and the glory of God.

The H-Bomb

FACING the dread of this ugly thing that man has made, we turn to another using and transforming of the world's common stuff. We turn to one bearing the common flesh of our humanity, the very love of God come down to seek us in our lostness. He took bread and blessed and break; he took the cup and blessed and shared. Then presently he gave his body to be broken on a cross that the love of God might break through to us in our wrongness, and cover our wrongness and lift us out of it.

Some of us call this other way of using and transforming the common stuff of the world a sacrament. Against a bomb we hold up a sacrament.

In penitent thankfulness we lift his gift of himself up before the Father. "Look, Father, look on his anointed face, and only look on us as found in him." We open hands and hearts in faith to receive him, that he may dwell in us and we in him. Through him and from him we seek light for ourselves and for all his people and for mankind stumbling in darkness.

The Meaning of the Creed

The Eighth of a Series for Lent

By JOHN E. HINES
The Bishop Coadjutor of Texas

"I BELIEVE IN THE HOLY GHOST"

OF all the postulates which the Christian Church has put forth, the one which people are most likely to take, without critical investigation and, consequently, the one which they least understand is "belief in the Holy Ghost." It seems so nebulous, this belief, so unnecessary, so difficulty to place, so hard to "nail down to realities," that many Christians have refused to come to grips with it at all.

Perhaps that is what one of our scholarly-priests means when he says that he finds that he preaches his worst sermons on the great feast-days of the Church's life. Why? Because the great feast days stand for, and reflect, the fundamental doctrines of the Church's faith: Christmas, the Incarnation; Easter, the Resurrection; Pentecost, the Holy Spirit. How inarticulate most of us become, when such an occasion presents itself.

Yet, it is precisely these mighty concepts that give the Christian faith its vitality, as well as its validity. They were not conjured up out of academic flights of fancy. They are the product of a profound experience, these mighty doctrines. They are not intellectual schemes, which were dreamed-up to fit the vagaries of human behaviour. They were the end-result of that behaviour, observations by eye-witness or by participants.

As a matter of actual record, the doctrine of the Holy Spirit did not particularly occupy the attention of the Church's theologians until his deity was challenged by the followers of Arius, in the fourth century. As that great controversy developed, it soon became apparent that belief in the Spirit was vitally affected by belief in the Son: the Arians, who denied that Jesus Christ was "of one substance with the Father," began to say that the Holy Spirit was little more than "the influence of Christ's example, a gift to men, a thing created, in no sense an essential reality in the eternal life of God, himself." It was Anthanasius who answered, in effect, that "If Christ, the Son of God, be indeed of the very substance of the God-head, and no less divine than the Father, himself, then, the Holy Spirit, through whose agency the divine Son is conveyed into the lives and hearts of the faithful, cannot be less divine than he whom he conveys, and is, therefore, also very God of Very God."

They had, on their side, "Athanasians," not only logic, but also the sense of the scriptures and of Church tradition. So that, when the second general council met in Constantinople, the Church rejected Arianism, and, in reaffirming the Nicean Creed, sanctioned a second form of the creed which read:

"And I believe in the Holy Ghost, the Lord and Giver of Life, Who proceedeth from the Father and the Son, Who, with the Father and the Son together is worshipped and glorified. Who spake by the prophets."

How Doctrine Developed

both the Old and New Testament, finally becoming the heritage of the Church. As we can see from our reading, the thought of the "Spirit of God" is the first theological thought of the entire Bible. In that magnificent account of the creation of the world in Genesis, while all was yet unformed chaos, we read that the "Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters." As a matter of record, the expression in the Old Testament, that is most common, is "the Spirit of God" or, the "Spirit of the Lord."

The phrase which is so familiar to us, "the Holy Spirit" occurs in only two passages: (in the 51st Psalm) "Take not thy Holy Spirit from me," and in the 63rd chapter of Isaiah, where we read that the House of Israel "grieved his holy spirit." So, the "Spirit of God" is very common, and in historic accounts, stands for the life of God, which, going forth as a divine energy, is directed toward man, filling man with its own power. Actually, there is no department of human life that lacks traces of the working of this Spirit: physical endowments, intellectual ability, craftsmenship, all of these things can be referred to the Spirit. We see that same Spirit more clearly in the "inspiration of the Prophets" and as "resting upon the Messiah, also."

However, when we pass from the Old Testament to the New Testament, we find an immense development taking place. If there is one thing that we can say of the New Testament, in describing it, we can say that it is a book of the Spirit. From the very birth of Christ onwards, the whole Christian dispensation is a dispensation of the Holy Spirit. When we read the synoptic gospels (Matthew, Mark and Luke), we find the idea of the Spirit beginning to take both "form and color" which it does not have in the Old Testament, and which gives increased power to the "self-revelation" of God. Looking at the early ministry of our Lord, we find that his birth, baptism and temptation, are all intimately related to the presence and working of the Holy Spirit. Such significant acts of power as the "casting out of demons" are a proof of the activity of the Spirit. When Jesus prepares his disciples for similar experiences which will lie before them, it is always because the Holy Spirit will speak through and for them, that they can put from them all anxiety as to how they will bear themselves in the great crisis of their lives.

This impression of the working of the Spirit is even deepened in the Acts. If you wish a clear basis, an historical basis, for the "doctrine of the Holy Ghost," it is to this book that a man ought to turn. Close to the very beginning stands the experience of the great day of Pentecost, in which the outpouring of the Holy Spirit is a flame which has since lighted history. And, throughout the Acts, there is a profound feeling that the Church, and her leaders, are being guided, controlled, inspired, and energized by the intimate and direct working upon them of the Holy Spirit. There are those vivid events, such as Philip's meeting with the Ethiopian eunuch; or Peter's journey to see Cornelius; or the journeys of St. Paul, and in each of them, the decisive word is spoken by the Holy Spirit. The same is true of St. Paul's writings. In these writings, the major theme is the wretched state of man who, knowing and desiring the good, yet finds himself unable to practice it, for the "law of sin" is stronger in his members than the "law of God," which is in his heart. Yet, however great is that fact of his, and man's wretchedness, there is still a greater fact: the "freedom from this unharmonized life, which freedom God has opened to man through Christ." And, the very moment, when St. Paul passes to the "exposition of this freedom," the whole sweep of his thought is filled with the presence of the spirit, so that the "new life" appears to him as the life of the Spirit.

More Than Impersonal

IT is important for us to realize that this Holy Spirit to which Paul points, is something more than just an impersonal source of energy. Belief in the Spirit is belief in personal life and not impersonal energy. When St. Paul speaks of the Spirit as "bearing witness with our spirit," and "as making intercession for us," intercessions which are beyond our power, then we see that we have passed beyond the stage where the Holy Spirit can be conceived of simply as some form of energy working in man, and leading him on toward God. And, in such a verse as we find in 2nd Corinthians, "the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit," it is logical to assume that St. Paul has ascribed to the Holy Spirit attributes which associate him with, but do not simply make him identical with, God and Christ.

Thus, Christian thought holds perilously, but in perfect balance, the paradox of God's transcendence, as well as his immanence. Christian thought recognizes the operation of the ever-proceeding Spirit in all the glories of nature, in every durable work of art, in every discovery of knowledge which enriches civilization and enlarges human life. But, above this even, Christian thought holds in highest reverence as the supreme operation of the Holy Spirit, that which he is perpetually doing in the sphere of Christian experience, itself: namely, the "sanctifying of the elect of God" reproducing Christ in Christians.

Frankly, were it not for this power of the Spirit, Christianity would be the despair rather than the hope of men. For, in the person of Jesus Christ, we see revealed a perfection at once human and divine, but which, nevertheless, remains forever unattainable by weak and sinful humanity. Were it not for the fact that (to quote St. Paul) "the Spirit helpeth our infirmities," we could do little more than view from afar "the glories of the fact of Christ."

Profound Passages

ONE of the most profound passages in all of the writings of St. Paul is his insistence, in the 8th chapter of the Romans, that "the Spirit beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God." Why is that necessary? Simply because our spirit gives us no such reassurance, and no such guarantee. For the spirit of man is that of our "natural mind, and our natural thought, and our natural will," and these cannot give us certainty that we are "the heirs of all the ages." For despite the fact of man's creativity, despite man's similarity with God, who made him, despite all of these things that often betrayed man into pretending to that to which he should never pretend, the truth of the matter is: Man's spirit is bound to human flesh and human flesh, as Dr. Tillich reminds us, is hostile to God. But when the Spirit beareth witness with our spirit, that we are God's children, then, something new has come. Here is the introduction of a new reality, a new being. This is a Spirit which is distinguished from our spirit, yet, able to inform our spirit, so that it is, at once, beyond us and within us. Dr. Tillich feels that the whole message of Christianity is contained in this one statement. For, says he, "Christianity overcomes law (by this he means the unattainable moral law which is a demand upon every responsible human being) by the certainty that we are the children of God." Surely, he adds, there is nothing higher than this. For, though we are in the flesh and subject to its cleavages, to its disastrous betrayals, we are, at the same time, in the spirit, too, which means that we are in relationship with the ultimate meaning of life. What a tremendous realization this is when we view it through St. Paul's eyes and through his thinking. For, to him, to be Christian means "to have the Spirit" or "to be possessed by the Spirit." For no man calleth Jesus Lord, save by the Spirit and it is the Spirit that enables us to cry "Abba"—Father.

Perhaps it will help us to a better understanding of the whole Christian position, if we can lay aside some of our pre-conceived ideas, and recognize that, as far as the New Testament is concerned, the Holy Spirit is henceforth and forever a corporate, rather than an individual possession. It cannot, in its purest working, be separated from the body, through which it acts, and that body is the Church. When Jesus made the promise of the Holy Ghost to them who were his closest followers, after he had gone from the earth in physical form, he made it in connection with the feeling of the unity of their fellowship. So that he was virtually saying to them that the Spirit would come, but only when they made it possible through their corporateness. This, then, is the lesson of Pentecost, whereby the Holy Spirit created the new society, the "fellowship of the redeemed." This is the reason the sacraments of the Church are efficacious and necessary, because they are the vehicles of the creative agent and the shared gift which guarantee the redemptive character of the "new society." This is why the most profound area of prayer is corporate prayer rather than individual prayer, for the prayers of the group are a guard against the vagaries and selfishness of the lone individual. This is why "schism," either by an individual or by groups, is such an offense against God, because it scatters and mangles the body, through which the informing Spirit does come to men. This is why "belief in the Holy Catholic Church" stands in the same context with the mightiness of the forgiveness of sins, the resurrection of the body, and the life everlasting. This is why a poet, like T. S. Eliot, is so near the heart of Christian truth, when he says:

"What life have you if you have not life together
There is no life not lived in community
And no community not lived in praise of God."

So we come to the end of this series on the great creed of Christendom. It may seem strange that it was written so long ago and yet, is still repeated in the churches of our modern world. Strange, because much has happened since its writing, and significant events have come to pass. However, it would do us well to consider that none of these changes has wrought alterations in the basic truths, which this creed does present. True, the Ptolemaic astronomy has given place to the Copernican. The power of beasts of burden has had to bow to the power of steam and electricity. Men walking have become men running, yea, even flying. The ingenuity and curiosity of men have even divided the atom.

But, these things have merely altered the scene upon which the faith has entered, they have not altered the faith. As a matter of fact, they cannot alter the faith, for it was once and for all delivered to the saints, it was once and for all revealed to the children of men, and men do but reflect the insight of both yesterday and today, when they say, with St. Paul:

> "For I am persuaded that neither death nor life nor angels, nor principalities nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus, our Lord."

The Awful Wonder of Easter

By GILBERT P. SYMONS

WHEN the Spring moon grows full again and after it that first of all Sundays comes, there will rise up from all over the land the sound of bells and of choirs and congregations singing, "Jesus Christ is risen today. Alleluia!"

Well for us if we believe it and live in it. The more we do so the louder may we sing. I would not dampen one note of it all.

But in this dark Lenten night another mood has seized me. My soul desires the almost impossible—to forget the habit of twenty centuries, to drop away the gold-encrusted vestments of tradition, to go back to where Easter was new out of the hand of God, awful, stunning, a wonder like the dawn of the first day.

Men have lived long upon the earth. At rare times you and I sense them all. By the call of the blood we can reach back through forebear after forebear to the ultimate primitive peering fearfully from his cave. How long the chain of ancestry is, God only knows. But long it has been, and through all the length of it has beat one rhythm: birth, struggle and death; birth, struggle and death.

Sin has been with us all the way—that we have been taught, and that we can well believe. But besides sin there has been something else. George Frederick Watts depicted it in his solitary pathetic figure crouching upon the globe, sounding the one remaining string of his lyre. Shall we call it hope? or the still small voice? or the intimation of God? or of immortality?

Greater Than Creation

BUT for all the hope, all the sorrowful turning away from sin, all the brave, kind deeds, all the lifting of a tear-stained face to the sky—for all that, at last came the great silencer. The lyre's last string broke, and man for the millionth time sank back in death, poor brave dust to mother earth.

Little by little in later times intimations blew about that man need not forever die: there were legends of immortals, the fable of an island somewhere—a sweet tale that made the eye brighten. Philosophers reasoned about it; poets fancied, and prophets made oracles; but it was all tenuous, unreal, as when the wind falls and Eolian harp will not sing. And all the while, death.

Of all the countless wise and brave men, not one knew, not one had been there and come back to tell us. What are all our cities, and our glory, and our beauty, and our gold if to our sole great question the best of men can give us only this dusty answer: death.

And then after a dark day, a thunder shaken, earthquaking day, comes one more dawn. On the calendars of men it was to be that most inspired of days, the first work day after a feast. There is a garden, and in it a human figure—a woman crouched and mourning—the symbol of our sorry mankind. This moment is the greatest since Creation, nay it is greater than Creation. If the stars sang together this morning no human ear knows it. There is no pageantry, no fanfare. Only a smitten woman gasping at what she sees. And well she might. For if one woman bore the lowly Son of God, here another sees him alive from the dead—and that was never seen before! She cries, "My Lord!" And He answers, "Mary."

I will not theologize over it. You may have all the arguments. I adduce no proofs. I am gasping beside this poor woman in a garden at dawn because I know in my heart of hearts that the riddle of all the ages has been solved. Later I must hear what others say, and we will sing and dance because of it, and become strong and well because of it, and tell it to all the world.

But just now it is an awful wonder—clear cold truth like the cold dawn. Later let it quiver and glow with the love of God as the sun rises high in the sky, but now it is for me just bare stunning truth: Death has met his master in this Man!

Baptism and Easter

By ROGER W. BARNEY
Rector of St. Mark's, Ashland, N. H.

DID you ever see anyone baptized? Have you ever stood by while a baby, a child, or a grown-up was made a member of the Church? If you have, you may have been puzzled by some of the words in the service. Words, for example, like those in the short prayer, "Grant that, like as Christ died and rose again, so this child may die to sin, and rise to newness of life." Or, at the end, where we ask, "that being buried with Christ in his death," he "may be partaker of his resurrection."

These are "Church words," and they have a nice sound to them when the minister says them in church; but what do they mean? Isn't it a little morbid to speak of anyone's "dying to sin?" Isn't it a little rough on a poor little baby to ask that he may be "buried with Christ?"

The rest of it makes more sense—about "rising to newness of life," and "being partaker of Christ's resurrection." At least, when it is the Easter season, and spring is really coming, we are all for the glad, happy, joyful Easter thoughts of new life and resurrection.

It's a fine thing for a baby—or anyone—to get a good new start in the Church, to the accompaniment of such thoughts.

Life Appears

BUT, as you may have noticed, before spring comes, there is always winter. And in winter all the living, growing things in garden and field and woods—die. The frost nips them, they wither and shrivel up and drop down; the leaves fall from the trees; even the running water in the brook becomes still and hard; and snow covers everything like a shroud. This goes on for several months.

We say that nature sleeps—because we know what is coming. But a stranger visiting our planet, or a South Sea Islander visiting New England for the first time would say that nature was dead. So far as anyone can see, she is. And this is what makes spring so wonderful every year. Out of this white stillness of death, signs of life begin to appear.

Even before the snow goes entirely, snowdrops push their heads up to look around; maple sap drips, drips, drips into buckets; and before long the first robin comes, and pussywillows, and real bulging buds—all the things that we have come to call "signs of spring."

It's a miracle! Every year it amazes us, this spring. We know it is coming, but we never can remember just how wonderful it is, until it comes. And what makes it so unbelievably wonderful is that it rises up from the death of winter.

Jesus rose—from the dead! We forget that. On Easter, almost everyone goes to church. But how few of us go on Good Friday! And yet, as most of us suspect, we would find Easter all the greater miracle if we had entered more deeply into the sorrow and despair of the cross. It's even more serious than that.

There can't really be any Easter without a Good Friday! Any more than there can really be spring without winter. Christ rose from the dead, because first Christ died for our sins.

Therefore, at the very beginning of the Christian life, when we are baptized and made members of Christ's body, the Church, we not only take part in his resurrection but we take part in his death as well. We do this, of course, symbolically.

That is, we act out a play. Did you ever act out the Christmas story? With Mary and Joseph and the Baby (a doll) in the manger? Were you a shepherd, or a wise man? Well, every baptism is acting out the Good Friday-and-Easter story. You can see this in some churches more clearly than in others.

In the Baptist Church, for example, people are baptized by being dipped in the water all over. So you can see them "go down into the grave" with Christ, as they go down under the water of baptism; and then "rise from the dead," as they come up out of the water again. But every baptism, even when a little water is poured upon the person's forehead, is just as much a play in which the actors act out our Lord's death, and then his victory.

St. Paul's Definition

A LONG time ago, St. Paul wrote a letter to the Christians in Rome. In it, he wrote about many things; but one of them was baptism and what it means. The words he used are so familiar to us, that I am going to quote them not from the King James or even the Revised Version, but from a fresh, free translation whose words speak more distinctly to us today:

"Have you forgotten," writes St. Paul, "that all of us who were baptized into Jesus Christ were, by that very action, sharing in his death? We were dead and buried with him in baptism, so that just as he was raised from the dead by that splendid revelation of the Father's power so we too might rise to life on a new plane altogether. If we have, as it were, shared his death, let us rise and live our new lives with him!

"Let us never forget that our old selves died with him on the cross that the tyranny of sin over us might be broken—for a dead man can safely be said to be immune to the powers of sin. And if we were dead men with him we can believe that we shall also be men newly alive with him.

"We can be sure that the risen Christ never dies again—death's power to touch him is finished. He died, because of sin, once: he lives for God forever. In the same way look upon yourselves as dead to the appeal and power of sin but alive and sensitive to the call of God through Jesus Christ our Lord." (Romans 6:3-11 in J. B. Phillips, Letters to Young Churches.)

Perhaps you didn't think all these thoughts as you stood and took part in the baptismal service. And perhaps you hadn't thought of baptism as having anything special to do with springtime and Easter. But, you see, it does.

Violence or Faith

By PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

Rector of the Ashfield Churches

IMAGINE a fort with armed guards doing a big business in trade and tax collecting. Think of a man "armed" with a bit of rope moving about, declaring the whole affair evil in the sight of God, scattering money and live meat in front of the guards.

When you think of Jesus cleansing the Temple in this light, you realize that he appealed to moral righteousness rather than the power of violence.

His conduct the rest of the week was consistent as he met the violent reaction of those whom he challenged with unforgettable answers and calm willingness to suffer to death.

We Christians face forces of evil embedded in the church, in government, in the lives of leaders and laborers including our own. We can rely on violence to protect us and use it against individuals and groups and risk finding ourselves lined up behind Pilate and Caiaphas or we can find the way of repentance by which we may come with clean hands and hearts to trust and love which is equal to the task of meeting and overwhelming evil inside and outside us.

Violence or faith, the choice runs deep and faces us on many fronts. On what side are we most frequently to be found?

NO PLACE FOR WEAKLINGS

By H. ROSS GREER

Rector of St. Andrew's, South Orange, N. J.

"IF the meat is tough, walk out quietly. This is no place for weaklings." That motto was on the wall of the mess hall of the officer candidate school attended by one of our clergy during the late war.

What is a weakling? The basic meaning of weak is soft plus the Anglo-Saxon derogatory diminutive—ling. A weakling is a softie, a feeble creature, an invertebrate (a creature having no backbone)—a jelly fish of a man.

Certainly the Christian religion is no religion for weaklings. The Church is no place for weaklings. The cross of the strong Son of God, symbol of the utmost sacrifice, is the central symbol of our religion, not the safety pin or the rocking chair. The strong Son of God was no weakling.

We know that our Lord received the outcasts, the weak, the weary and heavy ladened. It doesn't take much of a man or woman to be a Christian but it takes all there is of him or her. A weakling come to Christ ceases to be a weakling. By faith in him out of weakness we are made strong and are enabled to endure taunts and blows. How ridiculous is the statement that religion is a sissy business, only for women and children!

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

again, with the four horsemen of the Apocalypse riding, it is a bitter task that faces every minister and rabbi to preach peace when there is no peace.

"We are all shaking in our boots," he declared, "because we are not facing up to our responsibility to use our gift of time constructively as true time-binders. We are not being true to our past or to our future. It is perfectly clear that the test of democracy is our ability to get differing peoples to cooperate towards the future. We in the United States have more tangible assets in our hands to use than any culture in the past ever possessed. God's first message today is peace and we who would serve him must not shirk our duties to our brothers, on the Hudson, the Thames, the Seine or the Don."

ATTENTION GIVEN CHILDREN

★ For the first time in its four annual meetings, the Illinois state-wide institute of children's institutions put into its recent program a section on religion. Meeting in Chicago March 20-21, the six sponsoring agencies brought together more than 500 men and women engaged in child welfare, to consider institution programs, group activities, administration, fund-raising, helping houseparents, constructive methods of discipline, and the place of religion in the life of a child in an institution.

The Rev. Arnold Purdie, executive secretary of the National Council's division of health and welfare services, led the discussion on the place of religion, calling attention to the fact that institutions may have more or less routine religious observances without having a sound program to care for the specific need of religion in a child's life. "It is a new trend for secular agencies, and even for some Church agencies," Mr.

GEORGE MacMURRAY

COMMONWEAL (R. C.) states that the new fair employment practices bill (McConnell bill) which has passed the House, must be passed, filibuster or no filibuster. Commonweal says the bill is weak, without teeth, and that it doubtless will be sabotaged, but it is better than nothing, and a more adequate bill can be won later. Dealing specifically with the Negro the editorial states: "Because of restrictive real estate covenants, separate and inferior educational and transportation facilities, the poll tax and inadequate protection against lynching, Negroes normally find themselves with the status of second-class citizenship. A law forbidding job discrimination is only one of the necessary remedies. Yet it is a step that has to be taken before advances in other sectors are possible. A man whose opportunity to earn his livelihood is guaranteed by law to be as good as his neighbor's, will eventually achieve a status similar to his neighbor's. The gradual progress which the American Negro is now making, North and South, needs the solid foundation and the stimulus which a compulsive FEPC guarantee would give."

EVANGELIST (Disciples) calls for an evangelism of trumpets. People want "good news" and are tired of the prevailing mood of pointing constantly to the shortcomings of the Church. This is no time to add to the world's despairs by crying down the Church and proclaiming from the housetops its own shortcomings and humiliations. Declaring that John Wesley's success was due to his ability to interpret the gospel in terms of that which was defeating the men of his day, the editorial declares "John Wesley was right. Defeated men must have a gospel of victory. The Christian faith is a way out for despairing men. It is the answer to our problems. Let there be less emphasis upon the problems and more on the answer—God's answer in Jesus Christ. We call for trumpets."

UNITED PRESBYTERIAN, along with most religious journals, vigorously condemns the manufacture of the H-bomb, and says that the present U. S. policy of depending on force to keep the peace will lead to war in the near future. The signed editorial calls upon Church people to demand a reversal of policy, and to do whatever it can to persuade statesmen to try the Christian way of "overcoming evil with good."

NORVIN C. DUNCAN
Retired priest of Asheville, N. C.

In your issue of March 2nd you carry a letter from layman Mainwaring, in which he defends the practice of reservation. While the preface to the Prayer Book states that it is not the intention of this Church to depart from the Church of England in any essential point of doctrine, discipline, or worship, it nowhere recognizes reservation as an essential point, and it states in the most positive terms that it has the right to determine what belongs to doctrine and to make such changes and alterations in forms, rites and ceremonies as times and occasions demand.

Such changes and alterations as thought best were made, and the ratification of the Prayer Book declares that such shall be received. Furthermore, there are rubrics and articles which clearly indicate that this church does not sanction reservation.

The American people decided, after a long struggle with England, to set up housekeeping on our own, and while we selected much from English law, we as a free people did not propose to be governed by England. Likewise, while acknowledging our debt to the Anglican Church, and accepting what we considered to be essential, we set up some ecclesiastical housekeeping, and some of us are still of the opinion that we do not need English brooms.

There was also such a thing as a Reformation, and it did effect the Anglican Church. While holding on to what it considered essential, it cast off a lot of things, among them reservation and the doctrine of transubstantiation. There were a lot of things, brother, in the early and medieval Church which did not survive the Reformation, and the vitality of the Anglican Church itself, along with the whole of Protestant Christendom, witnesses to the presence of errors in the prereformation Church, and to the presence and power of the Holy Spirit in those Churches. When God's own ordained channels become clogged and unfaithful witnesses to his truth, he can create other channels. Many things discarded at the Reformation, and which remain discarded, are in themselves witnesses to the validity of these acts which discarded them, and the practices which supplanted them.

The vast majority of bishops do not sanction reservation but consider it their duty to forbid it. Mr. Mainwaring, as do the Anglo-Catholics, wishes to set up the minority as authority, and allow the majority to eat of the crumbs which fall from the table of the masters.

Somebody ought to tell the man that this is America.

I am delighted with the series for Lent and wish you success in your purpose. I do not agree with Dr. Bell at all about the ecumenical movement. He, and others, do not see that too much "adoration" is worse than no "adoration" at all. It is at the bottom of the Russian revolution and the Reformation centuries ago. I agree with him that the Church must learn to "obey the most high God" but I think it is time that all our theologians did some careful research into what really is the will of God. Bishop Hall of Hong Kong (Witness, Mar. 2) has some things that ought to be in the minds of every Christian.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Work of Women in the Church Studied by Commission

Churches in All Parts of World Respond To the Survey Questionnaire

By MRS. T. O. WEDEL

★ Following a recommendation of the Amsterdam Assembly, the World Council of Churches established a commission on the life and work of women in the Church. This commission held its first meeting at the Ecumenical Institute near Geneva, Switzerland, March 6-10, 1950. Seventeen delegates from eleven nations attended, including three from the U. S. These were Mrs. Fred Brooks of Iowa, who is president of the women's society of Christian service of the Methodist Church; Miss Glora Wysner of the International Missionary Council; the writer, representing the United Council of Church Women.

The commission, which includes both men and women, has as its first executive secretary Miss Sarah Chakko, who is on sabbatical leave from her position as president of Isabella Thoburn College, Lucknow, India. Mrs. Kathleen Bliss of England was elected chairman of the commission.

The commission was established largely because of the very great interest in the subject of the place of women in the life of the Church which was expressed in response to a survey conducted shortly before the Amsterdam Assembly. To everyone's surprise, the survey elicited response from Churches in all parts of the world, showing that many had been considering the question, and evidencing a great desire to share ideas and experiences. There is voluminous material available as a result of the survey. A very brief interim report has been published, but material exists from which a very solid book can be written. The publication of this book will be the first task of the commission. Mrs. Bliss, whose writing ability is well-known to readers of the Christian Newsletter, is to write the book, the plans for which were thoroughly discussed by the commission. Nothing of the kind has ever been written, and it was felt that such a book, drawing together worldwide examples of the work of women and setting out the thought of many Churches on the life of women in the Church, will open many fresh insights and wider horizons.

The second task which the commission has undertaken is to further a really thorough-going study of the "man-woman relationship." The basic questions involved in the place of women in the Church go back to some very deep Biblical and theological questions about the relationship between men and women, and to what we may discover as God's purposes in creating us male and female. In the changing social scene of today, especially in many so-called "backward" lands, where the status of women is changing very rapidly, there is great need for the Church to give some leadership in this area. The commission hopes to publish a little pamphlet which will state the reasons for studying the question of man-woman relationship, and which will then pose questions about this relationship to scientists, biologists, sociologists, psychologists, to biblical scholars, to theologians, to Church leaders, and others. It is the hope of the commission that groups in many lands will gather to discuss these questions, and that the interest created and the answers produced can become the basis for a conference on the subject a couple of years hence, which may be of real help to the Churches as they try to find the best Christian answer to the problem. It was pointed out in the discussions of the commission, for instance, that Churches have said almost nothing about women who work, in spite of the fact that millions of women the world over must be bread-winners for themselves and their families. Nor has the Church given any guidance or recognition to the unmarried woman, in spite of the fact that in many lands, the surplus of women will mean that a great many women can never marry. The question was asked, "How does the Church reconcile many of its actions with the declaration of human rights which says that there should be no discrimination because of sex?"

To an American Church woman it comes as a surprise to realize that our pattern of large and active women's organizations is not known in many lands. In most of the Churches of Europe and Asia, women take their place and do their work along with men in all the activities of the Church. In some places this works very well, in others it is not at all satisfactory from the point of view of the women. European women, in particular, look with a little concern upon our women's organizations, wondering if, for some women, they may not tend to become almost substitutes for the Church. It is a question we should ask ourselves. An American is also struck by the fact that, while the average American Church woman usually knows a good deal about what her Church does—its program and its missionary work—we are shockingly ignorant of what our Church believes. Through the channel of the commission on the life and work of women, the Church women of America may be able to be of very real help to Church women in other parts of the world. We can provide material aid, and we can impart to them some of our enthusiasm and hopefulness. But it is good to discover that we may receive from them as much as we give, if we will open our eyes and ears to their interest in theology and the Bible.

NEW YORK ELECTS MAY NINTH

★ The diocese of New York will elect a suffragan bishop at the annual convention on May 9. A committee has prepared a list of recommended men, but of course further nominations may be made from the floor. The present diocesan is Charles K. Gilbert who is to retire at the end of this year. He will be succeeded by the present coadjutor, Horace W. B. Donegan, who will then have the newly elected suffragan as an assistant.

★ A great carillon was recently given to the people of the United States by the American veterans of world war II. Acceptance of this gift was made by President Harry S. Truman at Arlington national cemetery, Arlington, Virginia.

The memorial is known as "The National Evening Hymn Memorial Carillon." This name was selected as plans call for a program consisting of hymns of all faiths to be played automatically each day at 5:00 P. M. These programs are selected by the chaplains heading the various branches of the armed forces. A console has been provided in order to permit the performance of special programs by world-famed musicians on special occasions.

The instrument was produced by the world's outstanding manufacturer of electronic carillons, Schulmerich Electronics, Inc. of Carillon Hill, Sellersville, Pennsylvania. Fully realizing the national importance of this great memorial, the maker has produced an instrument second to none.

Schulmerich Electronics, Inc. captured the true tones of these two types of bells, the English and the Flemish, and through the science of electronics, amazed experts by the true, life-like production of carillon bell tones. The Amvets memorial carillon is not a development of the moment. Many such electronic carillons have been installed in important universities, colleges, and churches throughout the United States.

TOWN - COUNTRY CONFERENCE

★ The division of town and country of the National Council is holding a conference on rural work at St. Paul's Church, Salt Lake City, April 12-14.

The conference is dealing with the present state and stage of the Church's rural work. "On the basis of a careful review of the past and an inventory of present resources and needs, definite steps will be taken to define and achieve a long range national, provincial and diocesan policy and plan for rural Church work."

The conference is attended by about 70 delegates, selected by their bishops, one delegate from each diocese and district.

Rev. Clifford L. Samuelson, executive secretary of the division is in charge of the conference. Among those giving addresses are Bishop Horstick of Eau Claire, Bishop Henry of W. North Carolina, Bishop Lewis of Nevada, Bishop Rhea of Idaho, Bishop Walters of San Joaquin.

Among those present are the following clergy: Stanley M. Fullwood, Vernon E. Johnson, Eric A. C. Smith, Guy S. Usher, L. Maxwell Brown, Bert F. Ede, Samuel N. Keyes, Philip H.

Steinmetz, W. Shelby Walthall, J. Ethan Allan, William Davidson, John H. Philbrick, David W. Clark, Theodore H. Kerstetter, Perry H. Smith, Charles L. Conder, F. Francis Allison.

Meeting at the same time is the joint commission on rural work of the General Convention. It will elect a president and secretary and develop plans for the triennium.

Also meeting is the Rural Workers Fellowship, this being the annual meeting of the organization. The Rev. L. Maxwell Brown of Allegan, Mich., is president.

ST. MARTIN'S FORUM AT FOUR

★ The forums at St. Martin's Church start on April 16 when the Rev. W. B. Spofford Sr., managing editor of The Witness, will lead a discussion on social action in the Church. The hour is at four p. m. and everyone is invited and urged to attend, since it is the hope of the Rev. John H. Johnson, rector, and the forum committee to have these meetings multi-racial.

The second meeting will be April 30 at the same hour when the noted economist and sociologist, Scott Nearing, will speak on the economic outlook in the U. S. today.

St. Martin's is at 230 Lenox Avenue and is reached by subway on the 7th Avenue-Bronx Park train at 125th Street.

SPIRITUAL TEACHING IN SCHOOLS

★ President Clark G. Kuebler of Ripon College, a member of the National Council, told an audience of parents and teachers in Wilmington, Del., that the average young person today gets "very little moral or spiritual education at home."

Most parents, he charged, provide little or no training in moral or spiritual values for their children, adding that "less than half of the population of this country is identified with any religion, and many who are do not take their religion seriously." For this reason, he said, moral and spiritual teachings must be introduced into the schools.

"If our schools will provide moral and spiritual leadership as they do intellectual leadership, we will not have to be fearful of the future," Kuebler said.

ADVERTISES FOR CONTRIBUTIONS

★ A classified ad appeared the other day in a Houston newspaper: "Wanted: $50,000 to build a new Church of the Good Shepherd and a J. Windham Memorial Building for church school and recreation purposes." Rector Shardon D'Aubert explained: "We have a small congregation and must get outside help to build our new church." He said that the foundation of the present building was laid in 1929 but that no additional building had been done since. The memorial building will honor a former rector, Thomas J. Windham, who was known as the "marrying and burying parson."

TREASURERS MEET IN CONFERENCE

★ Assistant Treasurer James E. Whitney of the National Council was the chairman of a conference of treasurers of mission boards which was held yesterday, April 12, in New York. Banker H. Harold Whitman presented finance as it applies to foreign mission fields today, and the Rev. Gilbert Darlington, Episcopalian, who is treasurer of the American Bible Society, spoke on annuities. There was a report from a research committee which has been studying missionary salaries and allowances. Presbyterian Roswell Barnes of the Federal Council of Churches spoke on Church World Service.

YOUTH OF IOWA TO MEET

★ Wilbert J. Mueller of Salina, Kansas, will be the headliner when the youth of the diocese of Iowa meet in convention in Des Moines, April 21-23. Churchman Mueller is an educational psychologist by profession.

FIVE VESTRYMEN IN ONE FAMILY is the record held by John P. Ingle, his two sons and his two sons-in-law. Left to right: H. W. DeSaussure, Grace Church, Orange Park, Fla.; J. P. EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

CROSSES FLY FROM BUILDINGS

★ Bishop Oliver Hart was an honorary chairman of a Philadelphia citizens committee that was responsible for more than 50 large purple crosses on white banners flying from the highest buildings in the city during Holy Week. They flew also from the four sides of city hall, 548 feet above the street. The committee, through placards and posters, urged the closing of all places of business during the three hours on Good Friday. The union of theatre and stage employees also contributed a large plain cross with stage and lighting effects. Radio stations during the week gave spot announcement urging Good Friday observance, and they carried religious broadcasts on that afternoon. Also 50 of the largest buildings in the city had them lighted all night in the form of crosses.

The committee states that contributions for the undertaking were so generous, in spite of the record costs of the displays, that they closed their books with a balance of about $1,500.

RELIGIOUS COURSES AT COLUMBIA

★ Thirty-six new religious courses will be added to the curriculum of the three undergraduate schools at Columbia University, according to an announcement on April 4 by Chaplain James A. Pike, chairman of the department of religion.

NEW SEMI-ANNUAL MAGAZINE

★ The first issue of Pan-Anglican, a review of the world-wide Episcopal Church, has just appeared. This is a semi-annual magazine which seeks to present the work and thought of the various national Churches of the Anglican Communion. The first issue contains a statement on the "Mission of the Anglican Communion" by the Archbishop of Canterbury, articles on the Church of England in Canada, and others from many sections of the Anglican Communion, such as Scotland, the West Indies, Africa, Jerusalem, and the U. S. A.

The editor is Bishop Walter H. Gray, coadjutor of Connecticut, and the assistant editors are the Rev. E. R. Hardy Jr., and the Rev. E. J. Cook. The managing editor is Archdeacon Smythe H. Lindsay of Dallas, Texas, and the contributing editors are bishops and other clergy from nearly every part of the Anglican Communion.

BISHOP STEPHEN NEILL IN AFRICA

★ Bishop Stephen Neill, assistant to the Archbishop of Canterbury, who just completed a long stay in the United States, has left for a three-months' tour of east and west Africa to investigate theological training. He is a representative of the International Missionary Council, and it is a part of a larger survey of theological training south of the Sahara being undertaken by the Council. Bishop Neill will travel in Tanganyika, Kenya, Uganda, Nigeria, the Gold Coast and Sierra Leone.

CHURCHWOMEN ARE COPS

★ Churchwoman Kathleen Moore is head of the women's division of the Savannah, Ga., police department. Churchwoman Gladys Hartley is a policewoman in the same city. Both are members of St. Paul's parish. The work of policewomen in Savannah is largely helping offenders to become reestablished as good members of society.

FREDERICK GRANT AT CATHEDRAL

★ The Rev. Frederick C. Grant, professor at Union Seminary and Witness book editor, preached the three hour service at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. Bishop Donegan was at the Transfiguration and Bishop Bayne of Olympia at Trinity.

CHURCH GIVING IS LOW

★ An analysis of ways of spending the national income of a population of 149,215,000 Americans, as of July 1, 1949, showed that living expenses consumed 60.5%; direct government taxes 15.3%; savings 11.2%; and contributions to welfare organizations, churches, cultural institutions, hospitals, missions and colleges, 1%. The total income was estimated at $220,000,000,000, and the per capita income $1474.24. The giving for Church and charity are at an all-time low.

Patterson, organist at the Advent, Boston, will give one of choral conducting; George Faxon, organist of the cathedral, Boston, gives the course on organ playing, with Mr. Patterson the director of the conference chorus.

SPENCER MILLER HEADS AMERICAN COLLEGE

★ Spencer Miller Jr., prominent layman of the diocese of Newark, has resigned as highway commissioner of New Jersey, to become the president of American International College in Springfield, Mass. An institution with 1,300 students, the college was one of the first in the U. S. to offer courses in citizenship to foreign-born residents, and has pioneered in interracial and religious good will. The announcement was made simultaneously on April 5 by Governor Driscoll in Trenton and by Russell Davenport, chairman of the trustees of the college, in Springfield.

CHILDREN'S HYMNAL FOR CHINA

★ Alice H. Gregg, missionary in China, is one of several people to edit a hymnal for the children of China. It contains 130 hymns, 37 of which are new translations from western hymnals. Dean T. C. Chao of the school of religion, whose articles on New China have appeared in The Witness, was one of the Chinese contributors.

JOHN BOOTY WRITES YOUTH COLUMN

★ The Witness is happy to announce that John Booty is to write a regular column on the Church's youth. At present a staff writer for a radio station in Detroit, Booty moved up through the ranks in the youth movement. He was first president of the youth council of the diocese of Michigan, then president of the interdenominational youth council of the state, which he represented as a delegate to the Oslo youth conference. In 1946 he was elected to the youth commission of the Episcopal Church and served as chairman for two terms which ended with the conference which met at Racine this year.

He also was on the executive councils of both the United Christian Youth Movement and the United Student Christian Council, and was a delegate to the World Student Christian Federation. His official association with the various youth groups has now ended but, as he himself writes, "my interest in the youth movement is as great as ever. The more I have been associated with the youth movement, the more of a challenge and an opportunity for real growth in the Church has been revealed to me. The movement is virile, due, to a large extent, to our association with other Churches. I welcome the opportunity The Witness has offered me to serve the Church and, I hope, to advance the dynamic faith I have found in the youth movement of the Churches."

Mr. Booty's first column will be found elsewhere in this number.

BICENTENNIAL ANNIVERSARY

★ The Church of the Holy Trinity, Middletown, Conn., is to observe its 200th anniversary on April 17th. The rector of the parish for many years was Edward C. Acheson, later the bishop of Connecticut, and the father of the present Secretary of State, Dean Acheson.

ANNUAL SERVICE OF SPIRITUALS

★ The annual service of Negro Spirituals will be held at St. George's, New York, the afternoon of May 7. This annual event was long associated with the late Harry Burleigh who did so much to preserve the Spirituals and arranged many of them for part singing.

J. F. FLETCHER DEFINES RELIGIOUS LIBERTY

★ "For the democratic American there is a vital difference between religious toleration and religious liberty," said Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher, professor of social ethics at the Episcopal Theological School in a sermon April 2nd at Holy Trinity, Brooklyn. He gave the concluding sermon in a series of three addresses on the general theme, "religion and our civil liberties," and took as his final subject, "the liberal view: freedom leads to truth."

"The very fact that Churches have a creed and a particular means of salvation," said Fletcher, "makes all of them intolerant, some much more than others. Before the ideal of civil liberty was as developed as it now is, the most that could be hoped for was toleration, under a tolerant state-Church establishment. Many Churches today have never gone beyond that partial concession to religious liberty.

"The American way," he continued, "is not merely to grant tolerance, but to grant liberty. True religious liberty means three things: first, that the individual is free to choose any faith, or none; second, that all Church bodies are equal before the law; third, that they are free to pursue their ways without interference, short of endangering the public order. True religious liberty means freedom to have no religion. These are the tests today of our claim to be democratic and loyal to religious freedom.

"Just as we have to distinguish between mere toleration and true liberty, so we have to distinguish between governmental supervision of Churches and actual separation," concluded Fletcher. "Real liberty requires separation, hands-off by the state. State supervision goes with favoritism for one Church, mixed with a little toleration for some others. That is the situation in many European countries. Please God it will never be allowed to develop in the United States."

The service marked the first anniversary since the date of April 4, 1949, when the rector of Holy Trinity, the Rev. John Howard Melish was removed by Bishop DeWolfe of Long Island, after an active pastorate of forty-five years in the Brooklyn church.

At the time of the announcements in the service, Fletcher gave the first reading of the legal notice of the forthcoming annual meeting of the parish that was held April 10, 1950. The notice indicated that the term of office of Leonard Smith, warden, and Joseph Allen, Waldo W. Sellew and Allen M. Taylor, vestrymen, would then terminate and that an election to fill these four vacancies would take place and such other business be conducted as might properly come before this annual meeting. Leonard Hull Smith, Joseph Dana Allen and Waldo W. Sellew are among the five remaining vestrymen of the nine who made the application to the bishop for the dissolution of the pastoral relation, which was later enforced by a civil court injunction granted by Supreme Court Justice Meyer Steinbrink. The result of the election will be reported in The Witness next week.

During the past year the services at Holy Trinity have been taken by guest ministers invited by the pulpit supply committee of the vestry, awaiting the outcome of the legal appeal. Forty Episcopal clergymen have taken the services. Attendance, the records show, has paralleled the average attendance of the last ten years. Asked to comment on the situation, Dr. Fletcher said, "The ability of the congregation at Holy Trinity, deprived of their beloved ministers, to maintain their life in the way they have for the space of one entire year is a tribute to the quality of the moral and spiritual life of the parish. In rising to meet a fundamental issue of religious freedom, the members of the congregation have done what very few congregations would have had the strength and tenacity to carry through under such adverse circumstances. Their example gives all of us renewed faith in the loyalty of Protestant Americans to the democratic tradition of our Churches and our land."

On April 4, in a unanimous decision, the appellate division of the New York supreme court sustained the lower court's decision to remove Dr. Melish as rector. The court gave no opinion with its decision. The rector had no comment but indicated that he would await advice of counsel to determine his next move. Because the ruling was unanimous it will be necessary to obtain permission of the court before taking the case to the Court of Appeals.

If the parish meeting removed the remaining anti-Melish vestrymen, it is possible for the new vestry to call Dr. Melish as rector and so notify the bishop who would have thirty days to approve or disapprove their choice.

SUNDAY SCHOOL BUILDING AT SPRINGFIELD

★ A two-story, eight room, Sunday school building was dedicated by Bishop Clough on Palm Sunday for Christ Church, Springfield, Ill. Key to the $38,000 building was presented by Warden Clifford M. The dedication climaxed a two-year effort in the part of a committee to meet the needs of the school whose attendance has increased 75% in four years.

Taxes and War

PROFESSOR WALTER RAUTENSTRAUCH, a consulting industrial economist and a member of the Methodist Federation for Social Action, laid it on the line in the Federation's Social Questions Bulletin in the matter of taxes and what they do. He has untangled a mass of government statistics and presented a clear picture that every citizen—and especially every Christian—would do well to look at long and hard.

The total income of the United States stands today at $225 billion, but the total national debt has reached $260 billion—or $6,500 for each family in America. Of this $260 billion debt, $222 billion is for the cost of world war two alone.

In the government's budget for 1950, 13% of it is for simply the interest on the national debt, of which six-sevenths is for the cost of world war two; 30% of it is for the cost of preparing to fight world war three and 5% of it is for cultural and social activities which explains why—as Professor Rautenstrauch says—"school teachers are underpaid, hospitals are curtailing service, the sick and afflicted inadequately provided for and cultural activities, as expressed in the theatre, through the radio and on the screen, are at the lowest level in our history." So, it would appear that the forces of organized destruction of the civilized world ("national defense" is an euphemism meaning less than nothing, as there is no such thing in the conditions of today) are getting most of the money from our taxes—more than 70% of it if you count the continuing payments for past wars; not the one-third of American families who haven't enough income to pay bare living expenses; not the children who need decent schooling; not the homeless who can't find houses to live in.

American citizens must compel a drastic change in this tax picture which shows a government pouring out our money for destruction and slaughter at the cost of its own citizens' welfare. The first, and most important, is to join in any and every organized effort to force a blind and stubborn government to change its suicidal foreign policy and to stop short in its present headlong pace toward Fascism in this country. The two things inevitably go together, of course. No government anywhere can long keep its people keyed up for inevitable war without the repressive measures that are needed to maintain tension and discipline in the rank-and-file. Our political and economic leaders of today must have hammered into their consciousness the crying truth that has been long evident to our scientists and to clear-thinking citizens in every walk of life—namely, that there is no longer such a thing conceivable as a victorious war and that the first requisite for successful, trustworthy national leadership is the determination, at any cost, to eliminate war and war planning from national councils.

We are indebted to Professor Rautenstrauch for making the complicated national tax picture so clear that the average human can understand its significance. Just what we, as conscientious Christians, committed to following the Lord Christ, are going to do about it before it is too late to do anything, is a matter of individual conscience, enlightened by the searching light of the Holy Spirit of God. One thing everyone can do—and at once—is to demand policy changes in Washington.

"QUOTES"

IF we go back beyond the period of storm and stress, and study the political and social life of Catholicism in its more normal attitude in the middle ages, we shall find a singular regard for personal liberty. In the rule given by St. Benedict to his monks, it is laid down that on all matters seriously affecting the welfare of the community, the abbot shall not act without consulting the whole body of monks even to the youngest novice . . . In the history of the Benedictine Order one finds a spirit of personal liberty ever blending with a most perfect system of authority.

Who Is Subversive?

THE names of distinguished citizens are being dragged through the mud by a new crusader against "subversives," Senator Joseph R. McCarthy of Wisconsin. We hope that Christian people are aware of the character of this staunch supporter of the American way. Although the 39 Articles insist that the wickedness of a minister does not affect the efficacy of the sacraments, it is nevertheless true that the evil ministers should be driven from the Church. At the same time that the ex-Representative, J. Parnell Thomas, now in federal penitentiary, was blackening many people as un-American, he was also defrauding the government by dipping into the treasury. Likewise Senator McCarthy, who is challenging the loyalty of public servants, was embroiled a few years ago with the government on a question of payment of income taxes. He also received this particular judgment from the Wisconsin supreme court last year, as a result of his conduct as a circuit court judge in that state: "No valid excuse or justification can be offered for the defendant's violation of the oath which he took." They went on to say that what he had done was "a clear violation of the provisions of the constitution" and "the defendant is guilty of an infraction of the moral code." He only barely escaped disbarment from the practice of law because of his acts, which the court said was a "failure to keep his solemn promise to support the constitution."

It is about time that a moral judgment be made. Which is more subversive, defrauding the government and violating constitutional oaths, or being associated with organizations which may have in them some Communists, or who may have sponsored the same things that Communists have sponsored? If the former is the answer, then let's insist on a new definition of un-American activities.

We Boast a Little

ONE of the important documents of our time was issued in January by a group of nineteen Chinese Christians. We recognized it as such, and featured it in our issue of January 26th. We are glad to discover now that the Christian Century confirms our judgment by printing the document in their issue of March 29th. It is not often that we are two months ahead of that notable Christian magazine, so pardon us for boasting a little.

As a matter of fact, on this whole situation in China we believe the record demonstrates that The Witness is not only months ahead, but years ahead. We had our correspondent, Jack Foster, reporting accurately the things that were going on there back in the days when what Christians, both native and foreign, are now calling the "forces of liberation" were dubbed by these same people as "bandit gangs."

The Mystery of God

By RANDOLPH CRUMP MILLER
Professor at Church Divinity School of the Pacific

LOVE, to be worth anything, must be dependable. The very constancy of God's love, by which we are saved, is part of the mystery which faces us. God loves us, and we are capable of loving him. Yet God's love may also hurt us, and hurt us very deeply and tragically, because of his dependableness.

The working of God is according to what man calls natural law. God has given us a dependable, consistent, and good universe, in which we may learn of God's love and may come to love him. It is a world in which the love of God may bring together a man and wife in perfect understanding and mutual love.

But this kind of a universe is possible only if man will take the consequences. A series of events, started by some natural cause may lead to a tragic end. A war for which a soldier is not responsible leads to his death. It is the combination of circumstances which is evil, not the natural laws by which they are brought about.

I do not believe that God wills such evil or suffering. I believe that because God is dependable in his goodness, he will not reverse his laws to help us escape suffering. The psalmist said it: "God is a very present help in trouble." No psalmist said, "God will take your troubles from you."

We simply could not live in love, in a world where God reversed himself.

In the drama of Job in the Old Testament, Job had to discover this. He found out that Yahweh was not like Job. Yahweh loved Job, but plague and famine and sudden death were part of Job's tragic experience. Yahweh helped Job in his trouble, and Job came out of all his suffering with victory. He was able to sing:

> "God himself is with us;
> Let us all adore him,
> And with awe appear before him."

From man's point of view, death is inevitable; but the time of death or of suffering is due to chance. "Chance" is perhaps an unfortunate word, unless it is seen against the background of natural law. In our dependable universe, created by a loving God, there are unpredictable happenings. From the point of view of natural law, after they have occurred, they are seen as events due to certain very specific causes. But from the point of view of the person who did not foresee or will it, the event seems to be sheer chance. A good God could not have willed it directly and remained good; yet in a world created by a loving God, this kind of event occurs. So it remains a mystery within the providence of God. We know so much about the love of God, and yet we are so ignorant of his abiding purposes. God is so great and good that we simply cannot understand him.

The great prophet of the exile, writing after the Jews had been banished to Babylon, showed great insight into the meaning of suffering. He had seen the ignominy of his people's loss of their country, he had seen what seemed meaningless death and suffering as his people were moved to Babylon. He had seen the pattern of what happens to Jews when anti-Semitism is at its worst. And he wrote about a suffering servant who would come to save his people, or perhaps his people were the suffering servant. But he never pretended to understand even when he had insight. He told the Jews:

"Seek the Lord while he may be found," and then he spoke in the name of Yahweh:

" 'For my thoughts are not your thoughts,
Nor are my ways your ways,' saith the Lord;
'But as the heavens are higher than the earth,
So are my ways higher than your ways,
And my thoughts than your thoughts'."
(Isaiah 55:7-8)

Redemption and Salvation

GOD is love, we have said. And God is not helpless. There is an overruling providence by which God runs his world. "God is working his purpose out," make no mistake about it. "God is not mocked." But God's power is not the power of dictatorship; he does not crush personality even in death. His is the power of love, and therefore works through redemption and salvation. The great Elder of Ephesus put it right:

"In this is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins." (I John 4:10).

The power of God has always been the power of the Cross. It it the greatest kind of power there is, for when one knows that God's power is established through love and through the death of Christ, he can bear any kind of suffering and evil. The Cross is God's power, telling us that God has an infinite capacity to endure any evil that man can do or suffer. I know that God feels the pain and suffering and disaster that faces every human being. He does not will this tragedy, but he suffers from it, just as he suffered when the Christ was crucified. How can he bear it all? That is also part of the mystery of God; but we know that he can, because he did.

God's providence works primarily through men. That was God's choice from the beginning. Some men know that God is working through them; others do not know it; and God works through some who are opposed to him. But God works chiefly through those who love.

"Beloved, if God so loved us, we also ought to love one another. No man has ever seen God; if we love one another, God abides in us and his love is perfected in us." (I John 4:11-12).

We are never very far from God.

"Thou pervadest all things:
Let thy radiant beauty
Light mine eyes to see my duty."

God works through people. He worked through Christ, and the impact of Jesus Christ on the world is still growing. He worked through the saints of other times and he works through the saints of today. He works through insignificant people and significant people. In times of trouble, he inspires great sympathy and affectionate comradeship. Thus, the resources of God become available not just by direct answer to prayer, important as that is, but also through the service which is offered by friends.

No Fear in Love

THE Epistle of John says: "There is no fear in love, but perfect love casts out fear." This is the greatest victory of religious maturity. It is never completely achieved, because we cannot maintain perfect love. But insofar as we love God because he first loved us, we are freed from fear. Our certainty of God's love is the basis for our lack of fear about our loved ones who are dead, for they are alive in Christ. Our fear for ourselves and for our loved ones is due to our lack of faith, and yet we know that "this is the testimony, that God gave us eternal life, and this life is in his Son. He who has the Son has life." (I John 5:11-12).

There is comfort as we face the mystery of God, for we can sing:

"Christ be with me, Christ within me,
Christ behind me, Christ before me,
Christ beside me, Christ to win me,
Christ to comfort and restore me . . .

I bind unto myself today
The strong name of the Trinity."

And finally, when all else fails, when defeat has to be faced, when tragedy is irrevocable, when death is final, there are the words of the psalmist: (Psalm 121).

"I will lift up mine eyes unto the hills; From whence cometh my help?
My help cometh even from the Lord, who hath made heaven and earth.
He will not suffer thy foot to be moved; and he that keepeth thee will not sleep.
Behold, he that keepeth Israel shall neither slumber nor sleep.
The Lord himself is thy keeper; the Lord is thy defense upon thy right hand;
So that the sun shall not burn thee by day, neither the moon by night.
The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil; yea, it is even he that shall keep thy soul.
The Lord shall preserve thy going out, and thy coming in, from this time forth for evermore.

The Christian Mission Abroad

By ALFRED B. STARRATT
Rector of St. Paul's, Stockbridge, Mass.

THERE was a time when the missionary enterprise was thought of in terms of a cartoon of a pot-bellied parson facing a group of naked savages and, with utter disregard for their situation and needs as men, stretching out his arms and pleading "Come to Jesus and be saved." The caricature usually included a pot for cooking the man who was giving the message, and the idea conveyed was generally one of the magnificent sacrifice of a completely ineffective dreamer.

That comic strip is now in danger of being replaced by another emphasis which, while an improvement, is still a long way from the real thing. Much of our recent publicity would lead one to think that the missionary enterprise is a girls' school with a beautiful campus, a well trained vested choir, and a general atmosphere of happy activity that is pretty much the same as might be found in any boarding school for girls of families in the upper income brackets right here in this country. So heavy has been the emphasis laid on this idea that the layman, who doesn't pay much attention to publicity on these matters except when it is pushed very strongly by the Church and who therefore does not see the sides of the story that are not given the spotlight, is easily led into the mistake of thinking that the missionary enterprise exists to build replicas of the "American way of life" in foreign lands.

A well run, well equipped girls' school can make a great contribution to the spread of the life of discipline in a pagan country, but to set such institutions before us as typical of the missionary enterprise in foreign lands is to distort the facts. The real fact is a great deal different, and a great deal more important and vital.

Missions and Peace

WHAT is a Christian mission abroad? It is, first and foremost, the only realistic hope for unification of the world that there is. It is realistic because it is actually doing what other people are only talking or writing about or hoping for.

We shall never have a secure and lasting peace until we have a system of enforceable world law. Laws that are not enforceable are just so many fine words on paper. They may have an idealistic value. Their practical value it almost nil. Laws become enforceable in one of two ways. They can be enforced by ruthless power exercised in a police state dictatorship, or they can be enforced because they rest upon the general consent of the people who are asked to obey the law.

History, both ancient and modern, shows that dictatorships can hold the people in check for a while, but unless their law satisfies the needs of their people and expresses the basic desires of the governed, such forms of government do not survive. Furthermore, it is inherent in the nature of such governments that the rulers soon begin to rule for their own sakes rather than for the sake of the governed. The corruption of good intentions by the lust for continued and increasing power does its work. Then the system breaks down either by evolutionary change or, more often, the dictatorship is drowned in its own blood. A world dictatorship, either Russian or American, would have but a precarious and ephemeral existence. The peace we want must be neither.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

The other alternative is to create a system of international or world law which is enforceable because it rests upon the common consent of the people of the world. It is obvious that such law can not exist in a world where the ideals, aspirations, values, and standards of right and wrong vary so much as to be almost contradictory from nation to nation, and from cultural area to cultural area. It will continue to be impossible to enforce world law so long as the world is divided on its ideas of what the law should be. Only a world united in standards of values and morals can give unified consent to one system of law for all people. And the fact of the matter is that the Christian Church is the only agency at work in every nation on earth to create that fundamental unity of mankind which is the only foundation upon which world law resting upon the consent of the governed can be built. We repeat—the Church is doing what everyone else is talking about and wishing for.

Mission in China

WHEN the streets of Wuchang, China, were plastered with propaganda against the American government for its support of the corrupt Kuomingtang government, and when the people were being bombed by American bombs dropped from American bombers which had been given to the Nationalists, the missionaries never had any reason to fear mob action against them. The people there knew that America wasn't wholly the crowd of power-mad imperialists that the propaganda posters depicted. They knew because American men and women representing the world brotherhood of Christ has been living and working among them and loving and serving them for many long years. The propaganda failed to arouse the hatred hoped for by the new government because the witness of one world in Christ had been too long lived among them for them to be taken in by it. The typical reaction in the face of the horrors of air bombardment was the stubborn belief that if their Christian brothers in America knew what was happening they would see to it that it was stopped. And non-Christians believed this as well as Christians. The witness for one world in Christ reached far beyond the numbers of active Christians.

When the crowds gathered to rejoice at the defeat of the Nationalists, it was the Christians who expressed their gratitude in prayer. And it was also the Christians who took a long sober look at the Communist government in the realization that it could not hope to fulfill its fine promises in the end because it placed its faith in the power of a police state dictatorship rather than in the God-given value of the individual human soul. Theirs was a sober realism of men who know the real nature of the world and of men. This knowledge had been given them by the work of missionaries. It is a knowledge shared by consecrated Christians in all the world.

The missionary enterprise is a group of people tieing the world together by the slow but utterly real process of creating a world brotherhood—tieing it with cords of shared suffering—cords of heart, purse, and hand united in men and women who are doing Christ's work in the world. The world mission of the Church is creating the one world community upon which a structure of law that is enforceable, because supported by the common consent of men all over the world, will some day be erected.

Good Works

THAT is one thing that a Christian mission is. And another thing that it is can be seen in the spirit of men and women in distant lands who have found God in Christ Jesus. It is Bishop Newton Liu giving up a long hoped for opportunity to come to America to study because the Church in China called him to go as its missionary to a remote inland province. His decision looked at the time like a willingness to meet death for the sake of a few isolated Christians in an area where Christians were not welcome and where, as a consequence, the need was immeasureably great.

It is a school for blind girls in Wuchang where, in an old broken down building, a group of girls are saved from a life of horror and misery, and given safety and useful work. It is something that can't be put into adequate words, but can be seen in the light that shines in those girls' faces —an inward light that they know without the use of their eyes.

It is small fellowships of friendly people scattered throughout a country in such a way that the surest refuge for the traveler is to ask if there are any Christians in town. It is university students running a summer school for the children of destitute farmers because through such schools they can give expression to Christ's concern for men. It is common ordinary men and women shaking off the chains of ages of superstition and fear, and at last standing upright and unafraid as brothers of Christ under the fatherhood of God. It is people with a basic loyalty to the international fellowship of Christian men.

Yes, and it is a group of men and women who are building a divine kingdom on a shoe string. It is the angry frustration of vast opportunities and piddling resources. It is teaching without adequate text books. It is living and working and worshipping in unheated buildings in temperatures that remain in the thirties for weeks at a time. It is digging at a mountain of misery and fear with a teaspoon because there is not enough support from home to do the job. The National Council does its best with what it has, but its resources can't meet the need—not with the small change substitute for sacrifice that you and I have been accustomed to put in the red side of the envelope.

A Christian mission is neither a starry-eyed befuddled idealism nor is it all the sweetness and light of a girls' boarding school. It is Christianity at its best. It is Christ changing the world. It is the hope—the only hope, for peace on earth and good will of all men for all men.

Examination for Churchmen

Chaplain at Hobart College

RELIGION is instinctive in mankind and nobody can afford to fear or exult over its extinction. Impressive is the amount and variety of theological and religious writings and impressive, too, is the quality of some. But so many persons do little or no religious reading. One cannot prove that they do no religious thinking, but one is appalled at the lack of so many to have a glossary of terms with which to discuss religion, pro or con. Yet consider how basic to the solution of the problems of industry and all other problems, local and international, of human relationships are the Christian doctrine of God and of men. Much time and unnecessary suffering could be saved if mankind would base its plans and procedures upon these truths because human relationships are going to conform to them in the evolution and revolution of our earthly life no matter how much sin and ignorance and the egotistical self-will of dictators may effect delays and detours.

It may not be judicial to draw too many comparisons between fact and value, emotions and intellect; but there is a difference. The two are complementary, not antagonistic; but they are not the same. As I observe and experience life, it seems to me that value is more important than fact, and I know how much greater are the emotions than the intellect when it comes to inspiring action. One may believe all the articles of the Christian faith and do little or nothing about them. He may be intellectually convinced of prayer and yet stay snug in bed, inactive regarding it. When one feels strongly about something action is apt to be instantaneous. But knowledge is still needed power.

Pro or con, the Church and religion are concerns of most of the inhabitants of our world. There is hardly a situation in industry, art, science or any other area or department of life where, pro or con, they are not regularly mentioned and discussed. Literature of all sorts, good and bad, is never silent about the Church and religion. Yet many do not have even a proper vocabulary with which to discuss them. Perhaps it is a compliment to the Roman Church that the average Protestant with whom I have talked seems to know more about the doctrines of catholicism (although often misunderstanding them) than about the anything but negative doctrines of Protestantism. One may be forgiven, then, for claiming that there are some things that everyone should know about Christianity.

Wide is the misconception that Christianity has no profound intellectual basis, that theology is not only not "queen of the sciences" but that it is an esoteric toy, not seriously important or related to life. It is to be feared that the average Christian is at a loss to express himself adequately especially in the presence of the humanist, secularist and agnostic. He might cite a hymn or recite the creed, and at times that could be a very good response, but that is not as much as everyone should know about Christianity.

Theology is interesting and can be put in words understandable by the average person. It is very dramatic stuff and has a strong appeal. Not only in Church schools can it be taught with both pleasure and profit but through sermons, study groups, parish libraries, and what are called schools of religion in the parish.

At most colleges freshmen must take certain qualifying examinations, such as those in English, voice, foreign languages, psychology and mathematics. Then why not a qualifying examination in religion, not only for college students but all of our parishioners? Not that those passing it would be sufficiently informed about Christianity but they might be put in a seminar or advanced group of some character. My suggestion for such a test of anyone's religious knowledge and for the minimum doctrinal teaching in a parish or school is as follows. There is more than ample material for the teacher in books suited to every grade of intellect.

1. State the traditional arguments for the existence of God and their strength and weakness.

2. Outline these doctrines: atonement, eschatology, incarnation, sacraments, sin, trinity.

3. Discuss the relation of Christianity and its doctrine of man to democracy.

4. Differentiate between religion, morality, philosophy, science.

5. Discuss the Protestant and Catholic concepts of the Church and discuss Catholicism (Anglo, Eastern Orthodox and Roman) and Protestantism (classical and radical).

6. A short statement on the theological teachings of the following great religious thinkers: Augustine, Origen, Anselm, Aquinas, Tertullian, Athanasius, Luther, Calvin, Kierkegaarde, J. Barth, K. Bruner.

7. Discuss the Bible, its origin, nature, makeup, and its relation to the Apocrypha.

8. What is heresy. Describe the main ones.

9. Discuss the nature, principles, and techniques of prayer and of worship.

10. Name the "deadly sins," "cardinal virtues" and "works of mercy."

11. Discuss briefly: body, mind and soul; the Christian creeds; and the social gospel.

12. Give your conception of these words: original sin, conversion, evangelism, faith, forgiveness, judgment, redemption, repentance, retribution, salvation.

Pressure

By CORWIN C. ROACH

Dean of Bexley Hall

THERE are two types of pressure in the realm of human living as well as in the world of nature: high and low, special and normal. It is the first which usually comes to mind. We speak of being "high-pressured" by a glib salesman or we complain that political pressure has been brought to bear in a given situation. We mention using pressure cookers in our fall canning. These are special pressures usually created artificially and for a short time. The continuing normal pressures in life are not so spectacular but they are probably more important. We could not breathe if it were not for the steady air pressure of 14.7 pounds to the square inch. We could not cook unless we could rely upon the gas pressure in our stove and the water pressure at the sink. Because of continuous pressure the oyster fashions his pearl and the buried peat bog is transformed into a vein of glistening anthracite. The same thing happens with human beings. In Second Corinthians St. Paul has described the high pressure points in his life, stonings, shipwrecks, etc., but wisely he climaxes the list with "the daily pressure upon me." (11:28). It is a true crescendo. Life tests us and forms us not by the high tension peaks as much as by the normal strain and stress, the daily pressure of our ordinary routine.

Work: Means or End

By PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

Rector of the Ashfield Parishes

WORK may be either a means or an end. We all know that it may be viewed as a means of earning money and we have found that the tendency when it is so viewed is to do as little as possible for as much money as possible. The great conflict between farmer and hired man arises out of the fact that both view labor as a means but each has a different end in view. The farmer looks at the amount of work done and the hired man at the money he receives.

But work may also be recognized as an end. That is how we view the work involved in golf, swimming or raising flowers. Satisfaction in the quality of what we do is the mark of such an attitude toward work.

Much more of our daily work can and should be viewed as an end in itself. Such an attitude is easier in the Christian ministry, the practice of medicine, teaching, farming, nursing or other occupations where you are dealing with living plants, animals or people. But it is possible also in every job.

It is this point of view accepted by both employer and laborer which may lead to full production and civic peace.

Look at your job as something to be done for its own sake. Find the joy of it. Take pride in the quality of your work and you will be surprised at what happens to you and in you.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Poetry and Personal Responsibility. By George Every. Macmillan. $.75.

Broadcasting and Society. By Harman Grisewood, Macmillan. $.75.

Here are two more excellent essays in the S. C. M. series of "Viewpoints." In "Poetry and Personal Responsibility," George Every, a member of the Society of the Sacred Mission, has written a penetrating "enquiry into some signs of the times." The book is not literary criticism but an introduction to contemporary English poetry "considered as the sensitive spot in the modern mind, where a new response to life . . . is taking shape." Although the book is very brief (96 pages) it is an important one, for it discusses an essential matter: the communication of meaning in our world. The thorough traditionalists in the Church do not want to find a way of speaking to modern man and they unwittingly make common cause with those pagans who would rather turn from the world than face it. That way lies a purely spiritual religion, which is an escape and not reality. Science and Christian dogma stand together against such tendencies. But a primary need is "a way of communication between traditional Christian thinking and the moving modern mind . . . intelligible to those who accept and those who reject orthodox theology."

Broadcasting and Society is by the controller of the third program of the BBC and was written with permission of the corporation. Obviously, the discussion of the responsibility of the British independent monopoly is not relevant to broadcasting in America. As Mr. Grisewood says, broadcasting systems that are state-owned exist to further the interests of the state, the commercial systems exist to further the interests of those who make profits from the results. "Broadcasting agencies such as these do not seem to me to be worth serious attention except for those who are professionally interested." Certainly no serious discussion such as this could be written about our commercial system, for the author considers the nature of Christian society, its unity and diversity, impartiality, tolerance, and society's responsibility for broadcasting. In the U. S. A. society has no responsibility for broadcasting; this means of communication is primarily and entirely a profit-making tool. This book would provide good material for a discussion group on free enterprise and the American way of life!—A. L.

The Bible and Modern Belief. A constructive approach to the present religious upheaval. By Louis Wallis. Duke University Press. $2.50.

In his latest book, Mr. Wallis attempts to go beyond the scope of his previous sociological studies on the Old Testament: he tries to reach the religious core of Hebraism and Christianity, and to ascertain their relevance to the present era. Unfortunately, the book is devoted, not to the study of our "concrete heritage," but mostly to the analysis of the fact that the traditions of northern Israel were transmitted, edited, and somewhat manipulated, by the men of Judah and their Jewish descendants. Mr. Wallis has drawn useful diagrams which show how the priestly picture of the tabernacle reflects an anti-Ephraimitic bias. But he never confronts the central issues of the Bible, such as Yahweh the creator and redeemer, righteousness by law, forgiveness and grace. It may be significant that the author never mentions Second Isaiah, the Psalms, or Job. Should he not at least consider the idea of covenant, which sociologists like Max Weber and David Koigen (who may hardly be suspected of Christian "theologizing") consider to be the key to biblical religion?

—S. L. TERRIEN

Chapters in a Life of Paul. By John Knox. Abingdon-Cokesbury, $2.50.

For twenty years Dr. Knox has stuck to the problem of the Pauline chronology as his own chosen area of research, and has returned to it again and again. This volume argues that the Apostolic Council is out of place in Acts, and should be dated towards the end of Paul's missionary activity. Once the argument is advanced, and the supporting evidence marshaled, it seems perfectly natural —why did we not think of that before! It is like his brilliant hypothesis (which has won more and more support through the years) for the identification of Onesimus with the bishop in Ignatius's time. This hypothesis will also, very likely, win general approval.

The Human Situation. By W. Macneile Dixon. Longmans, $3.50.

This is one of the most brilliant and beautiful books written in the XXth century. It was published just before World War II, and was only beginning to be widely read and valued when the war interfered with production, and turned men's minds to other things. Longmans, Green, and Company were among the hardest hit of the London publishers—we understand that the blitz wiped out practically their whole list, and the first thing to be done after the war was to reprint (by photography) the books in their catalog. For generations this firm has been one of the leading theological and religious publishers of the English-speaking world. The new printing of this magnificent, constructive work in the philosophy of religion will, we hope, have the wide welcome throughout the Church that it so richly deserves.

The Private Devotions of Lancelot Andrewes. Abingdon - Cokesbury. $1.25.

This is a beautiful printing of John Henry Newman's translation of the 1675 edition of Bishop Andrewes's "Greek Devotions." The translation is in sense lines, following the original, and is a useful book.

Christianity and History. By Herbert Butterfield. Scribner, $2.75'

The B. B. C. addresses in this book deserve the widest kind of reading. The author, professor of modern history at Cambridge University, takes a broader and profounder view of the historian's task than was usual in an earlier generation. Scientific history is like detective work; but not all the clues are on the surface, and some are missing. The reader will be greatly intrigued by the mystifying hints and suggestions as to documents belonging in July 1914, prior to World War I, and will want to set about his own investigation at once! The day has gone by when all theological or ecclesiastical arguments could be silenced by quoting the latest German professor.

Make It Yourself. By Bernice Wells Carlson. Illustrated by Aline Hansens. Abingdon-Cokesbury. $2.

This well-illustrated, simply written, manual on "Handicraft for Boys and Girls" should be useful in the home, the school, the church school—wherever there are restless little fingers to be kept occupied. The materials used are generally readily available, and there is a short discussion of what materials should be saved, the equipment needed, and the storage of materials. The projects are divided according to the material used, such as plain paper, construction paper, paper plates, vegetables, and scrap bag materials. The directions can be followed by children of 10 years and older with little or no adult aid.

Youth of the Church

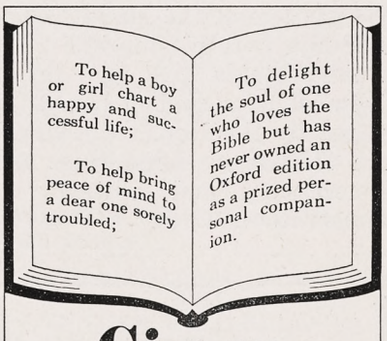
By JOHN BOOTY

Ex-Chairman of the National Youth Commission

IN February the National Youth Commission met in Racine, Wisconsin. Thirty-two young people and about a dozen adults, a representative cross section of the youth of our church, met to help plan the program and emphases of the United Movement of the Church's Youth for 1950-51. And it is true that they did accomplish this. They sent on to the division of youth of the National Council a program and a set of emphases worked out in long hours of committee meetings and based upon the results of questionnaires distributed to youth leaders throughout the Church.

But year by year it becomes evident that program and emphases are of secondary importance in the work of the commission. Yet the United Movement of the Church's Youth seems to be completely judged by its critics on the basis of a sixty page booklet called "Plan." This publication of the division of youth contains the program and emphases of the movement. In itself it is, generally speaking, a dead thing. It is a combination of ink and paper, chemically lifeless, unable to defend itself when in the hands of the churchman who refuses to believe that anything good can come from the youth, "those troublesome adolescents," of the church. If only all of those who set up barriers against the true meaning and impulse of the United Movement of the Church's Youth could live for a week as a part of the fellowship of the commission I believe that their opposition or indifference would quickly fade away.

Dynamic Fellowship



While dealing with the planning of program and emphases, the commission lives in dynamic fellowship. Time and time again the attention of the commissioners turns to this fellowship. It is seen as the expression of revolutionary faith which lived and breathed in the early Church. Young people who have lived and grown within the Episcopal Church without having experienced the personality of Christ, have found him in that fellowship. In the meetings of the National Youth Commission the Church has been seen not as an organization, not as another floundering institution in this age when it is possible to worship the ephemeral institution, but rather they have seen the Church as a personality, the personality of the Master. And the impact of the experience has created revolutionary plans.

We know that these plans have most of the time been as dead as driftwood when they have reached the Church at large. But it must be remembered that they have not started that way. They started as experience in the hearts and minds of young people living, many for the first time, in the presence of the living Jesus. It must be remembered that the Sermon on the Mount has in the past had revolutionary effects upon people. The fact that it has no revolutionary effect upon the condition of society today does not condemn what Jesus said about life. I do not compare the work of the commission to the Sermon on the Mount. Comparison is not necessary, for if anything is evident in the work of the commission, it is that these young people have experienced and interpreted the meaning of the Sermon on the Mount for the living youth of today.

Contagious Christians

The significant work of the commission then is in the experiencing of the person of Christ. The experience is not emotional and no more. The experience has effects. There is growing a vivid awareness that the potent and lasting youth work in the Church is the youth work which is done person to person. The national youth commissioners left their meeting with a burning desire to communicate their experience to the youth of the Church at large. In part they try to do this through their program. Last year their program was concerned with "Evangelism: to know the Christ and to make him known." This year it is "Onward In Faith" (a continuation of evangelism). Next year it will be "He in Us and We in Him." But there is more than the program, as I have stated. The commissioners went from their meeting, as one member stated, attempting to be "contagious Christians." They are hoping to be "epistles" attesting to the reality of Jesus and the reality of his kingdom. This is one of the potent reasons why youth work in the Episcopal Church is not organized into a gigantic and rigid form, but is a movement ready to respond to the workings of the Holy Spirit within the body of believers who seek to know the Christ and make him known.

The wonderful thing is that this is happening within the Church. And no matter how much the movement may flounder and fail, it is, I believe, bringing a new vitality into what has become in so many places a stagnant stream.

CLERGY OPPOSE MUNDT BILL

★ Bishop Nash of Massachusetts and Bishop Lawrence of Western Massachusetts are among a large number of clergy of the state to protest against the passage of the Mundt-Nixon bills now before Congress. The protest states that the establishment of a control board, directed by the House Un-American Activities Committee, was unnecessary and contrary to democratic process.

MISSISSIPPI PLANS STUDENT CENTER

★ A student center for Mississippi State College at Starkville is on the way. A number of parishes in the diocese have contributed their quotas, and an intensive effort throughout the diocese is now being promoted. The main floor will be for assemblies, dinners, etc., with all types of recreational equipment in the basement.

WOMEN HOLD AN INSTITUTE

★ The Auxiliary of St. George's, Clarksdale, Miss., recently held a two-day institute, with Mrs. M. S. Spiars of Greenville speaking on the relationship of the Auxiliary to the Church. Another speaker was the principal of the local school, Miss Bess Clement, who spoke on the physical, social and psychological needs that are required for a well-rounded personality. The second day was devoted to discussions, led by Mrs. Robert S. Ralston, chairman of the program, on adult education.

RECTOR RETIRES AGAIN

★ The Rev. Henry S. Sizer has retired a second time from the active ministry—this time as rector of the Ascension, Bradford, Pa. He came to the church in 1943 when the vestry was looking for a successor to his son, who had been called to another parish. He came to fill in and ended by coming out of retirement, following forty-nine years in the active ministry, to accept the rectorship of the parish. Even now he has agreed to assist, as his health permits, until a new rector is found.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

BOMBING ALTERNATIVES ARE DISCUSSED

Alternatives to atomic warfare were discussed at a conference held April 2 in Teaneck, N. J. and sponsored by the council of churches of the county. Judge Harold Kessinger of Ridgewood, N. J. said that "intense nationalism makes war. Empire, whether colonial or capitalistic, makes war. Balance of power makes war." He was for spending less money on armaments and more on feeding people. Dr. Hugh C. Wolfe of Tenafly, chairman of the Federation of American Scientists, said: "Nobody can win the next war. We'd better start trying now to win the first world peace instead of the next world war." Senator Alexander Smith was for armaments, a stepping up of the Voice of America, strengthening of UN, continuation of the Marshall Plan.

NATIONAL COUNCIL EXPLAINED

A series of regional meetings, designed to acquaint clergy and executives of church councils with the details of the projected National Council of Churches, have just been held, with the Rev. Earl Adams as speaker. He described the merger of the eight interdenominational agencies "as the most significant merger within Protestantism in the past 300 years." He stressed that it was a merger and not union, but said that it would "provide Protestantism with an authentic voice to speak on matters of critical Christian concern."

Meetings were held in Boston, Philadelphia, Atlanta, Kansas City, Minneapolis, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago and New York.

FOUNDATION URGES THAT CHINA BE RECOGNIZED

The U. S. should immediately recognize the new government of China, according to a resolution passed at the annual meeting of the Religion and Labor Foundation, an interdenominational agency which seeks greater understanding between Church and organized labor. The conference also supported federal aid to education; the health bill as urged by President Truman; an extension of social security coverage for all Americans, "including preachers." A resolution was also passed calling for the repeal of the Taft-Hartley act. In international affairs, aside from urging the recognition of China, the conference went on record as believing that U. S. refusal to continue UNRRA, support of the North Atlantic Pact, and U. S. military aid program had weakened the fellowship of UN member nations. It called for U. S. leadership, through U. N., for immediate multi-lateral disarmament and the abolition of atomic and hydrogen bombs and biological weapons.

DECLARATION OF PRINCIPLES IN APPROACH TO JEWS

Churches should attempt to convert Jews to Christianity but should avoid setting up a special ministry for this purpose, according to a declaration of principles issued by the committee on the Christian approach to the Jews. It cautions that a special ministry would result in singling out the Jews, and says that the proper way to convert Jews is to include them in the normal service and ministry of the local parish. The committee, representing several interdenaminational agencies, rejects the view that Jews should be omitted from Protestant evangelistic efforts on the ground that they worship the same God as Christians. Such a view, the declaration states, "is to maintain that Judaism, which is without Christ and in fact rejects and denies Jesus Christ, is adequate for the Jew."

The statement also calls upon Christians to wage an "all-out battle" against anti-Semitism which it describes as "absolutely irreconcilable" with Christianity.

BAPTIST MISSIONARIES STAY IN CHINA

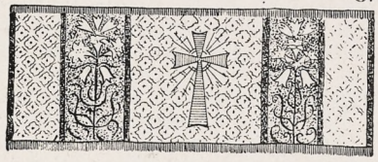
The 52 Southern Baptist missionaries now in China are to remain there, and they will be reinforced by others if the government of free China eases entry restrictions. The missionary board also voted to send 100 missionaries to Japan.

The Foreign Mission Conference, meeting at Winona Lake, Ind., also heard reports that Protestant work in China is going forward "with surprisingly little opposition and with gratifying results."

WORLD COUNCIL ASSEMBLY SITE BEING STUDIED

The 2nd assembly of the World Council of Churches, scheduled for the U. S. in 1953, will probably be held either at Cornell University or at Northwestern University. Other places still in the running are the University of Pennsylvania, University of Pittsburgh, Yale University and Los Angeles.

TRUMAN URGED TO IGNORE RELIGIOUS PRESSURES



President Truman should ignore "all purely religious pressures" when he decides whether to send a representative to the Vatican, according to America, national R.C. weekly. The editorial was particularly severe with the Federal Council of Churches which opposes such representation.

UNIVERSITY OFFERS MAJOR IN RELIGION

New York University, in response to a student demand, will offer a major in religion beginning next year. There will be an entire department with courses on biblical archeology, scriptures of the world religion, history of western religions, religion in the U. S., religious problems in contemporary life and religious community agencies.

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS

Selected by GEORGE MACMURRAY

BULLETIN (Federal Council): Separation of Church and state is a basic American principle, says the editorial in answering one in Rome's weekly, America. Acceptance of the principle has been the historic bulwark of religious freedom in the U. S. It has insured a policy of equal treatment of all religious bodies by government and has afforded an equal opportunity to every Church to develop its own inherent possibilities without either dependence on, or control by, the state. The editorial strongly opposes a representative at the Vatican, which confers on the Roman Church a special status, not held by any other Church, in relation to government.

PASTORAL STAFF (Diocese of Erie): Our Episcopal Church is weak in the matter of publicity. Whether we have an unexpressed feeling that there is something incongruous between our holy religion and advertising, or whether we, unlike some Churches, just don't know how to present appeals to the public, I do not know. Perhaps we haven't the pageantry which makes good stories or the color which gives appeal. It may be possible we have a foolish and false humility. We may lack imagination or we may be just plain dumb. One thing is plain—it pays to advertise. Businesses, from the smallest to the biggest, know this. Is religion so different? I have always abhored applying business terms to religion. I shall never use them again, but I am going to break my rule and say, religion definitely has something to sell and something which we must tell people about. There is no use keeping what we are trying to do a secret. Everything which the Church is doing is worthwhile telling people about. And, oddly enough, almost everyone is interested in the Churches.

—BISHOP SAWYER

WATCHMAN EXAMINER, Baptist, declares that there is a well organized campaign on to convince the President that "a large majority of the American people have no objection to Vatican representation." Protestant indifference plays into the hands of those conducting the campaign. "When your local paper prints this propaganda, the wrath of the people should fall on the editor's head through correspondence and telephone calls."—"This being an election year, Americans who love the principle of separation of Church and state will have to be on guard. Supine politicians may contrive to rig an alliance of some sort between the United States and the Vatican. When tolerance is made out to mean indifference toward schemes promotive of the union of the United States with an international, politically-minded sect, it is false and dangerous tolerance. Only the keenest alertness will keep our government free from sectarian control."

CHRISTIAN CENTURY (Inter.): Wants U. S. surplus food, now being destroyed to maintain prices, shipped overseas to feed the hungry. The editorial refuses to accept the objection that potatoes cannot be shipped because of their bulk. Means to transport and distribute surplus food exists. The only thing lacking is the moral will on the part of Congress and the people to cut through inertia and red tape to deliver it. (Note: in Tunkhannock, Pa., where The Witness is printed, dairy farmers buy potatoes for one cent a hundred pounds, for which government paid the grower $1.75, grind them up and feed them to cattle.)

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

NIEMOELLER URGES PEACE EFFORT

A call to Christians everywhere to join in preventing another war was sounded in Berlin by Pastor Martin Niemoeller in an address to 1,400 of all creeds.

"The Church's mission to call upon all forces to secure peace," he said, "is presently all the more important as the call for peace throughout the world is not yet loud enough, and nobody has the faintest idea how to prevent a third world war. The politicians are perplexed and an armament race has started which might lead to an explosion. Therefore the Church must do more than counsel for peace. It must act, and not succumb to the propaganda of either side."

Distinguishing between the peace of the gospel, "which cannot be achieved by force nor forced upon anyone," and the peace which is a matter of worldly politics, Niemoeller declared that "when man is in need, Christianity and politics should join forces, as both are aimed at establishing order among men."

"Contrary to worldly powers, however," he added, "the Church cannot employ means of force. It can only preach, serve and suffer. Nevertheless, it has also the duty to deal with detailed political issues if man is endangered and distressed."

The worst fact in the situation at present, according to Niemoeller, is that Germany's division into two hostile camps is being increasingly considered a natural situation.

"For the American press," he said, "Germany ends where the Iron Curtain begins. But if Germany's splitting continues, conflict must finally come."

Pastor Niemoeller said that the Allies had promised at Potsdam that there would be a unified administration for all Germany, and he urged that this pledge be kept. He said that the question as to who was to blame to date for its non-fulfillment is not one for Germans to decide.

CHURCHMEN CONDEMN CONVICTION OF PRIEST

Church leaders in South Africa, both Protestant and Catholic, have joined in condemning the conviction of an R. C. priest in Capetown for marrying a white man and a "slightly colored" woman. He was convicted for violating the new mixed marriages act. Said Bishop Leonard N. Fisher, Anglican of Natal: "I think the act is utterly stupid and completely unworkable," while one of his clergy surrendered his license as a marriage officer in protest against the conviction of the priest.

WEATHERHEAD CHARGED AS COMMUNIST

Leslie Weatherhead, minister of City Temple, London, and a number of clergy of the Church of England, were declared to be Communists by Lord Vansittart during an hour and a half address in the House of Lords. Anglicans singled out were Bishop Alfred Blunt of Bradford, the Dean of Canterbury, and the Rev. C. B. Chamber, vicar of Carbrooke, Norfolk, England.

GERMAN PROTESTANTS URGE COOPERATION WITH R. C.'s

Cooperation with Roman Catholics in meeting common social problems was endorsed by leaders of the Evangelical Church in Germany, meeting in the British zone. They were at a conference to exchange views on current political and social questions with leaders of the Christian Democratic Union (R. C.) in West Germany.

CANTERBURY DEAN VISITS SYDNEY

Church people in Sydney, Australia, are reported to be disturbed over the coming visit of Dean Hewlett Johnson of Canterbury, who is to visit the country this month to attend the congress of the Partisans for Peace. Spokesmen of the Roman Catholic Church were particularly critical, and some Anglican leaders also are said to be opposed to the visit. When Harold Holt, minister of immigration, was asked whether the Dean would be barred from the country, he replied that "if he has a valid British passport he will be admitted."

CHRISTIAN-MOSLEM PACT URGED BY MUFTI

The Grand Mufti of Egypt told a press conference in Cairo on March 29 that he favored a Christian-Moslem agreement to combat communism. The top Moslem leader, who was an active Nazi sympathizer during the War, urged that a council, made up of representatives of all faiths in Egypt, be set up to prepare the groundwork for such a pact. Crown Prince Saud of Saudi Arabia also announced that he was in favor of such a pact.

ROMAN CATHOLICS ASK TAX EXEMPTION

Roman Catholic laymen of British Columbia have petitioned the government demanding that the Catholic minority be exempted from paying taxes for public school support. They declared that "as Catholics, being bound by conscience, do not send their children to public schools," they should be relieved of the tax obligation. The petition further asks that parochial schools be free of land taxation, but demanded that ordinary medical and dental services supplied to public schools be extended to the parochial schools.

WILLIAM MOCKRIDGE
Layman of Philadelphia

I was sufficiently amused by the parody on Onward Christian Soldiers (Witness, Mar. 30) that I tried my hand at it, with this result:

Onward, headless army, marching unresolved,
Righted, lefted—halted; stainless yet involved.
Your's no tactic making, never thinking when
You must soon maneuver, brainless mortal men.
Onward, headless army, etc.

II

Rent by machinations, thougth for,
lead along;
Burgeoning in sales talks, memorized with song.
Unarmed, safe for magic, (by remote control),
Service, study, worship, work—the four-fooled goal.
Onward, headless army, etc.

III

Able-bodied churchmen, canvassed by the team
Lift your sightless eyeballs, things aren't what they seem!
All the words you mumble, all the songs you sing,
Failing application, don't mean anything!
Onward, headless army, etc.

CLARENCE PARKER
Clergyman of Chicago

The Witness is wonderful. It is true to the faith of the Incarnation in all terms of that faith. We are thankful for the magazine.

GREGORY A. E. ROWLEY
Rector at Chadron, Nebraska

As a responsible pastor in Christ's One Holy Catholic Church I am concerned about my parishioners' reading. I believe firmly that The Witness and other periodicals written for the communicants of the Episcopal Church should adhere to the principles of the undivided Church of the first nine centuries of Christendom and that branch of the same called the Anglican Communion. I further believe it the duty of our Church periodicals to apply these principles to our own contemporary problems. Our people as a whole are tired of the controversies of extremists and hunger for the faith and practice of Christ's Church. In a large measure I believe that you are working on these principles.

ROBERT MILLER
Clergyman of Camptown, N. H.

In "Talking It Over," Mar. 23, Mr. Spofford is concerned to defend certain Hungarian text books and their version of Church history and he says he learned the same version at Berkeley. But surely no one at Berkeley would teach him that "the primitive communism of the Church brought its members into conflict with the ruling class." Hungarian text books are of little importance. What is important (I quote from the London Economist) is this: "Soviet diplomacy has introduced into foreign relations a principle absent since the French Revolution—the principle of aggressive state policy, linked to a universal missionary idea." It is this I think The Witness should consider.

A BISHOP OF THE GREAT PLAINS

By GEORGE ALLEN BEECHER
Bishop of Western Nebraska, 1910-1943

BISHOP BEECHER is one of Nebraska's "First Citizens." His entire ministry of 51 years as Deacon, Priest, and Bishop, has been spent within the boundaries of the State of Nebraska—a unique record.

He has been the friend of many people—great ones and ones not so great: of Col. William F. Cody ("Buffalo Bill"), of whose "Wild West Show" he was the unofficial chaplain; of the famous novelist, Willa Cather, whom he confirmed, and at whose memorial service he preached; of army officers and their families; of countless railroad men, from messenger boys to presidents; of ranchers and cowboys and stagecoach drivers; of leaders in cities and in rural areas.

Bishop Beecher's ministry began on The Plains, when life was pretty rough, with ponies and buggies and stagecoaches, and ended with high powered automobiles. He was the pastor to a generation whose manner of life is largely unknown to the present, but ruggedly interesting. Archbishop Davidson of Canterbury and Cardinal Mercier of Belgium (whose luncheon guest he was) were thrilled by his experiences, and so will you be.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Pro-Melish Forces Victorious At Parish Election

Attorney Says Men Seeking Melish Ouster Succeeded in Ousting Themselves

★ After a year of patient and tenacious waiting, the parishioners of Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, who opposed the action of nine vestrymen in applying to Bishop DeWolfe of Long Island for the removal of their rector, Rev. John Howard Melish, obtained solid control of the vestry of the parish. At the annual parish meeting held on Easter Monday evening they elected one warden and three vestrymen pledged to work for the maintenance of the policies and the restoration of the ministers, thereby gaining an 8-to-2 voting majority of the members of the vestry.

One year ago, at the annual meeting, four of the nine vestryment were replaced. The vote at that time was 234 to 83. This gave the members of the congregation wishing to retain the rector a majority on the vestry of 6-to-5. Under the religious corporation law of New York, in the absence of the rector, a quorum of the vestry is one more than a majority. This meant that although the parishioners obtained a majority, they did not have a quorum, so that for one year the vestry of the parish agreed to meet monthly and to maintain the life of the parish, avoiding the basic issue of the policy and the ministry. By agreement services were maintained by visiting clergymen, selected and invited by a pulpit supply committee.

At last week's meeting approximately 250 of the parish's 466 voting members attended. Four members of the parish, pledged to support the policies and maintain the ministry, were nominated for the offices of warden to serve two years, and three vestrymen to serve three years. They were Walter Truslow, M.D., who is one of the vestrymen elected at last year's annual election, nominated for warden; and Allen M. Taylor, Abraham Lawrence and Tessim Zorach.

The old vestrymen in the course of the afternoon immediately preceding the evening election, realizing that they were certain to be defeated, issued a statement to the press, indicating that they would not personally attend the meeting or permit their names to be nominated for re-election. As a result of this uncontested election, the vote cast was 230 ballots, as follows: 221 for Dr. Truslow; 221 for Mr. Abraham Lawrence, the first Negro parishioner to be elected to the Holy Trinity vestry; 218 for Mr. Tessim Zorach, the son of the eminent sculptor, William Zorach; and 217 for Mr. Allen M. Taylor, the treasurer of the parish. Lewis Reynolds, presiding as warden, explained that some ballots were voided or borne names of miscellaneous write-in candidates.

The nature of the voting indicated that the majority of the parish which desired to retain the ministers had been able to maintain its voting strength constant under the most adverse circumstances for the intervening year, whereas the minority, that had supported the application of the nine vestrymen for the dissolution of the pastoral relation, had deteriorated to the point where they thought it unwise to have a vote recorded.

At the close of the election, when the results were announced, counsel for the rector remarked, "The men who undertook to oust the Melishes have succeeded simply in ousting themselves."

Dr. Melish quietly entered the church just before the voting began and sat on the side aisle. Just before the vote was announced, when the temper of the congregation was quite clear from the many brief speeches made by parishioners, the younger Melish thanked the congregation for their steadfast support and loyal friendship.

The vestry at Holy Trinity consists of two wardens and nine vestrymen. Since Dr. Truslow was elevated from the post of vestryman to be warden, there is now one vacancy on the vestry which will be filled at the next meeting of the vestry which is expected to take place on April 17, 1950.

The meeting was chaired by Lewis Reynolds, who, in accordance with the religious corporation act of New York, as a warden, was elected the presiding officer by the meeting.

What steps the new vestry will take has not been revealed. However it is possible for them to elect Dr. Melish again as rector and so notify the bishop, who then has a month to state whether or not he accepts their choice.

FIVE NOMINEES FOR NEW YORK

★ Five clergymen have been nominated for suffragan bishop of New York and their names will be placed before the convention of the diocese May 9 by the special committee. It is possible for others to be nominated from the floor but these are the men selected by the nominating committee: Bishop Charles F. Boynton of Puerto Rico; Archdeacon George F. Bratt of New York; the Rev. Fenimore E. Cooper of the diocese of Central New York; the Rev. Bernard C. Newman of Trinity Church, New York; the Rev. Samuel M. Shoemaker, rector of Calvary.

TRAINING PROGRAM FOR LAYMEN

★ Robert D. Jordan has announced that the department of promotion of the National Council is now ready to proceed with a continuation of the laymen's training program. An outline of the new program for laymen has been prepared, showing that it will be a cooperative effort between the Presiding Bishop's committee and the department of promotion, this in accordance with the action of National Council at the February meeting. As was the case in the program last year, the service of trained laymen in presenting the Church's program is offered to dioceses and is rendered only when dioceses want and request it. The former program was directed particularly at reaching vestries. The program planned for the coming fall is designed to reach large congregational groups, and will be a major emphasis in preparations for the annual every member canvass.

At the February Council meeting, when it was decided with enthusiasm, that the training program must go on, it was emphasized that its value, educationally, surpassed the fondest hopes. "It has opened a field of opportunity and need which cannot be ignored. The response of the laymen themselves has convinced us that we have just begun to scratch the surface of this vast reservoir of power within the Church."

After the exterior repairs were completed, the firm moved inside, scaffolding the entire interior and worked around the clock in order to completely redecorate, clean stonework and install new side altar and chapel in time for Easter services.

EPISCOPAL SERVICE FOR YOUTH

★ Meetings of Episcopal Service for Youth will be held at Atlantic City, April 23-28, when the national conference of social work is held there. A council meeting will be held April 27 and that evening the speakers at a dinner will be Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania and Miriam Van Waters, superintendent of the Massachusetts reformatory for women. The organization will also join with the Child Welfare League in sponsoring two meetings.

FACULTY EPISCOPALIANS HOLD MEETING

★ Approximately 60 people attended the various meetings of the second conference for faculty Episcopalians of the diocese of Harrisburg, held at St. Andrew's Church, State College, April 1-2. Franklin and Marshall College, Bucknell University and Gettysburg College were represented. In addition to Canon T. O. Wedel, non-faculty participants included Miss Hazel King, provincial secretary for college work, the Rev. C. C. Reimer of Bellefonte, the Rev. J. R. Deppen of Lewisburg, the Rev. J. N. Peabody of State College and two Presbyterian ministers from State College.

Canon Wedel's address was on the subject "The Christianity of Main Street," which is also the title of his new book soon to be published. The book begins: "Resolved, That Christianity is today, among a growing majority of the educated in America, including many nominal Protestant churchmen, an unknown religion." His talk was an analysis of the humanist view of Christianity so prevalent today, with the presentation of classical Christianity as an alternative.

In discussing secularism, he described communism and fascism as "secular religions attempting to create an ideal world in a one-story universe, with the secret police taking the place of the holy angels of judgment, and with the blood bath replacing judgment day itself."

Canon Wedel said that the Bible should not be viewed as a hero story of Jesus—a sort of "Cabin to White House" story. Instead, God is the hero, and his Son descended from palace to slum, from kingship to slave. The creed, he said, is the scenario of a great drama, and the sequel to the play is the power of the Church and of the Holy Spirit.

At the business meeting on Sunday morning, Kenneth D. Longsdorf, professor of English at Franklin and Marshall College, was elected chairman for the diocese of the national association for faculty Episcopalians.

Miss Hazel King stated that there are 160 colleges and private schools in her province with Episcopal student work.

Canon Wedel preached to a full church on Sunday morning. In the evening he talked to about 50 college students at the supper meeting of the Canterbury Club. Fifteen Bucknell students made the sixty-mile trip from Lewisburg to join in this meeting.

BUILDING BURNS AT ST. PAUL'S

★ A frame building was burned March 25 at St. Paul's Middle School, Tokyo. It housed six classes of about 359 students. It occurred on a Saturday when neither students nor faculty were present. The origin of the fire is not known. The building cost $10,000 and is insured for about one-third the value.

BISHOP-ELECT IS KEPT STEPPING

★ The Rev. Wilburn C. Campbell, bishop coadjutor-elect of West Virginia, recently spent what he considered "his most hectic day this year" in Syracuse. At noon he preached at the civic services, sponsored by the Protestant churches of Syracuse and Onondaga county. At one he attended a luncheon for Episcopal churchman's association leaders. At three he appeared over WFBL's radio sports newsreel and told of the tie-in between athletics and religion. At four he spoke over WSYR on laymen's work, while at five he gave an exclusive interview to a newspaper on opportunities for men in Church work. At six he discussed the work of a bishop with reporters of another paper and at seven he sat down for dinner with lay representatives of all Syracuse churches. At eight he preached at St. Andrew's Church, which was filled to overflowing, and till his train left at 11 p. m., he conducted a "bull session" with 60 lay leaders on opportunities for Church service. As he stepped on the train for Pittsburgh, Mr. Campbell said that as bishop he hoped never to "fall into the hands of the CNY public relations man without getting a week's sleep before."

HANNIBAL HAS NEW RECTOR

★ When the Rev. G. Ernest Lynch, who has been in charge of Trinity, Hannibal, Mo., was ordained priest on April 4 it was the first such ordination in the 105 years of its history. The church is one of the oldest west of the Mississippi. Mr. Lynch came into the Episcopal Church last fall from the Unitarian Church where he had been one of the best-known young preachers. He was the minister of the historic Second Church of Boston before entering the Episcopal ministry, and was in wide demand as a speaker throughout New England.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

FOUR PEACE POINTS ARE NAMED

★ "Jesus spent his whole life to make it clear that God's will for men is that they live together as brothers and build on earth a society based on brotherhood, righteousness and peace," declared the Rev. Donald Harrington, minister of the Community Church of New York, in a sermon at Holy Trinity, Brooklyn, in the series of community services sponsored by the Brooklyn Protestant Council.

"There are four quite specific things that we must do," he said. "First, we must protest the present drift to war, the current frantic attempts to build a balance of power, and the development of lethal weapons able to destroy all life on the globe. The current trial balloons ascending high in the air to test the public reaction to the rearming of Germany indicate how close we are to letting the arms race get out of hand. All historical experience declares that rearmament leads to inevitable war. The present program means precisely that. Christian people must speak out so clearly against this trend that governments will have to listen and check the present course.

"Second," he continued, "we must find a greater structure of unity. The American Colonies learned that they had to unite or fight. Today we can actually fly to Moscow in less time than a traveler then took from New York to Philadelphia. Our small world-neighborhood also must unite or fight. We have got to seek to get the U. S. and the U. S. S. R. together, and with the other nations of the world, we must establish some form of limited world government that will curb the irresponsibility of nation-states, safeguard peace, and prevent war.

"Third," said Mr. Harrington, "we are not likely to succeed in the practicalities of peace until there is some equalizing of the productive capacity of all nations. There is too much inequality. Advanced countries must share their technical benefits with the impoverished and undeveloped areas. Senator McMahon is on firm and intelligent ground when he proposes a mutual reduction of arms expenditures and the transfer of such moneys to a program administered under the UN along the lines of President Truman's point-four program for backward areas.

"Fourth," he concluded, "there is current starvation in many parts of the world, the worst in areas of India and China. Here we are in the United States with 400,000,000 surplus bushels of wheat in our granaries and a new crop beginning to ripen; 90,000,000 pounds of butter going rancid in federal warehouses; millions of pounds of dried eggs and dried milk; and 25,000,000 bushels of potatoes while children are starving. Christians must ask, how can we hope to escape the wrath of God, when we ignore the moral conflict involved in such starvation in a world with such misapplied abundance? Through the UN the U. S. ought to put these surpluses to human use, and to the building of good will in areas of need, irrespective of the religious or political coloration of the starving people involved. Do we, or do we not, believe in the God of Jesus of Nazareth, who sends his rain upon the just and the unjust in his merciful providence? If we do these four things, the star of peace will once again begin to gleam in the heavens, and the hope of men here and everywhere will begin to rise from the depths."

★ The diocese of Central New York has raised $24,217 towards its quota of $32,000 in the one world for Christ campaign.

WHERE THERE'S TACT AND ROSES

★ Where there is tact, there's a way. The Rev. G. C. Stutzer, rector of the Redeemer, Okmulgee, Okla., has to practice diplomacy at times when he presents a red rose to members of the parish on their birthdays. Some women, it seems, do not like to be reminded of birthdays even with flowers. So Mr. Stutzer says, "How wonderfully well and young you look" before he presents the rose.

He began the custom about a year ago and says it is one way of making a call on each member of the church. "I remember in seminary being told not to call without a definite purpose so taking them each a rose on birthdays answers that need. Children act the most thrilled but the grown-up are just as thrilled in their hearts," he says.

SYRACUSE LAYMEN CLEAN RECTORY

★ Fifteen members of the Syracuse and Onondaga county Episcopal churchmen's association spent two evenings cleaning the rectory of St. Philip's Church, Syracuse. The action evoked wide-spread press comment in Syracuse, as "twelve white men cleaned a Colored priest's home, and showed that racial discrimination was being actively fought by the association." Brooms, mops and pails, joined step-ladders as the Syracuse businessmen prepared the home of the Rev. Walter Parker, who recently accepted a call to come to Syracuse from West Chester, Pa.

An Episcopal priest of the 17th century, the Rev. George Herbert, writing of a servant who did housecleaning in a Christian spirit, coined the phrase, "makes drudgery divine." The laymen took this for a motto, and lived up to it.

He will also visit the dioceses of a number of bishops whom he met at the Lambeth Conference in 1948, including a visit to California.

SOCIAL WORKERS TO MEET

★ The Episcopal Church will have a series of meetings at Atlantic City during the meeting of the National Conference of Social Work, April 23 to 28. Episcopal headquarters will be at the Hotel Dennis, and the National Council's department of Christian social relations is urging persons who plan to attend, to make hotel reservations early by writing to the National Conference of Social Work, Housing Bureau, 16 Central Pier, Atlantic City, N. J.

The Episcopal program includes a corporate communion and breakfast, with Bishop Wallace J. Gardner of New Jersey as celebrant; a morning period devoted to "The social ministry of the Church in urban areas;" a dinner of the Episcopal service for youth. Other details have not been arranged finally, and will be announced later.

CELEBRITIES SPEAK AT CHURCH

★ The men's club of St. Mary's, Ardmore, Pa., recently staged a "sports jamboree." The speakers at the dinner were Al Wistert, Del Ennis, Benny Bengough, Wister Randolph. If you do not know who these men are ask your son—or daughter.

MID-WEEK SABBATH IS PROPOSED

★ Bishop Dagwell of Oregon has proposed to the churches of Portland that they get together to establish a mid-week "Sabbath" for persons too busy with skiing, hunting, fishing, golfing to bother with services on Sunday. Addressing a group of Methodist laymen, he said that there is always some seasonal attraction to keep people from church. "Right now it is the ski season. Soon it will be fishing, then duck or deer shooting. All summer there are week-ends at the beach or mountains." If the churches can unite on a mid-week date, he said, they should insist that no counter-attractions be billed for that night, such as concerts, lodge meetings or lectures.

He termed irregularity of church attendance one of the three principal "weeknesses of Protestantism," the others being disunity among the churches and "a lack of discipline among our people."

DELAWARE PLANS EXPANSION

★ The diocese of Delaware is planning new churches and parish houses to take care of the anticipated growth of the state. Bishop McKinstry told his people over the radio recently that business men, after careful study, figure on a 40% population increase in the near future, and that the state has already appropriated $19,000,000 for new schools and an equal sum for state highways. He also reported the construction of 2,700 new apartments in Wilmington alone, in addition to hundreds of new homes. He said it was obvious that the Episcopal Church, and other Churches, would have to take immediate steps to keep up with this expansion. Funds are now being raised to that end.

SCHOOL HEADS FACE PROBLEMS

★ "How to present in the classroom the Christian alternative to ancient and modern secular philosophies" was the theme of a conference for heads of Church schools, sponsored by the national department of Christian education at Seabury House. The heads of fifteen of the Church's coeducational and girls' schools, considered suggested means of closing the gulf between the teaching of secular subjects and the sacred studies courses and chapel services of the average Church schools. Among the needs recognized were: 1) More emphasis throughout the church upon teaching as a Christian vocation, 2) A larger number of dedicated teachers, administrators and board members in the church's schools, 3) Teacher-training conferences and workshops in Christian doctrine and methods, 4) The formulation of a basic philosophy for all of the church's schools, 5) A study of the implications of Christian doctrine with respect to classroom practice.

Conference speakers were: Canon Theodore O. Wedel, whose subject was "what is Christian education?" Mrs. Dora P. Chaplin spoke on the topic, "how to teach religion to children." The Rev. John Heuss outlined present and future plans of the department of Christian education. Miss Charlotte C. Tompkins gave a demonstration of audio-visual techniques and aids. Miss Ellen B. Gammack emphasized the church's continuing need for women workers, and urged that the church's schools bring Christian vocation to the attention of their older students. Miss Gretchen Tonks, head of St. Mary's Hall, San Antonio, Tex., was elected chairman of the continuing committee of heads of church schools for girls. Miss Tonks succeeds Miss Florence L. Newbold, St. Mary's Hall, Burlington, N. J.

Thought Control

SENATE bill No. 2311 can be debated and voted upon any day that it is called on the calendar. It was introduced by Senators Mundt, Ferguson and Johnston, reported out by the Senate judiciary committee on March 21st, and has the short title of the "Subversive Activities Control Act, 1950." Comparing it line for line with the Mundt-Nixon Bill of 1948, one finds some changes. The former bill, after being approved by the House of Representatives, was killed in the Senate judiciary committee, following open demonstrations, as well as quiet personal conferences, on the part of individuals and groups devoted to the first amendment to the Constitution. The 1950 version, though altered, still has in it the dangers of the earlier one, and these must be understood by those who think that our country is only strengthened as it rigorously adheres to its fundamental principles and fights back every attempt to introduce measures which would deny our guaranteed freedoms.

This new bill has tried to eliminate words which in the original bill definitely spelled out "thought control." When they now define an organization, it is simply one in which groups or persons are associated for "joint action," and no longer for the "advancement of views." But the effort to overcome criticism by subtracting certain phrases is far from successful. The evidence which is to be used to decide whether an organization is subversive is still substantially that of "views and policies," rather than actions. Guilt by association is the primary means of determining what shall be registered as a subversive organization. If a group has Communists active in it, no matter how many, it is presumed to be a front. If a group takes positions that do not deviate from those of a Communist political organization, it is assumed to be a front.

One new feature of the 1950 edition is that the President will appoint a three-man subversive activities control board. The Attorney General must file with this board a notice that any organization or individual should register as a Communist political group or a front group, and also inform the defendant. The board "may hold hearings" on this, and they shall be public, with each party allowed counsel, and the right to examine or cross-examine witnesses. The board then makes its decision. From this decision there is the right for review before the court of appeals of the District of Columbia. A novel note in judicial procedure is that the court is governed by this statement, "The findings of the board as to the facts, if supported by the preponderance of the evidence, shall be conclusive." The decree of this court shall also be subject to review by the Supreme Court. Any group or individual going through this process would probably be in the public eye as a subversive for about two years. If he happened to be found innocent at the end, he would have been so long avoided as "unclean" that he could never reestablish himself in the community.

We speculate further on what could happen under this bill should it pass. Any organization registered by the Attorney General after board ruling would have to show on all its correspondence, and tell on any radio or television program that it was a Communist or front organization. One suspects that in a very short time all Communists would be so far underground that even the F.B.I. would be hard put to find them, and fear would dissolve liberal organizations into immobility. Then let us suppose that in 1952 a coalition of elements of the Republican Party and the southern Democrats should elect a president. There are some Republican politicians who believe that no Roman Catholic should hold public office, and some southern politicians who have a real Ku-Klux-Klan mentality. The board would reflect this outlook, as would the Attorney General. The control of the communists having been completed, someone new would have to be found.

"QUOTES"

ALL life is the Church's field; but it is as guide, not as master; it is as inspirer, not driver that it functions. Its interests are the widest of all, its roots are the deepest; it holds guard over the eternal values of man's life; but because freedom for the development of free personalities in communion with God is of all those values supreme, the Church, guarding jealousy its own freedom will be equally jealous in its guardianship of those very practical and real things: free speech, free press, free assembly, the winning of truth by free conference, and the winning of security by the perpetual adjustment of liberty within and among the normal groupings of men.

National Catholic Welfare has been outstanding in its support of decent housing, fair-labor practices, and other social betterments. Roman Catholic parochial schools have fought for non-segregated education vigorously. Communists have fought for the same things, so it would not be a far cry to call Roman Catholics before the board.

This is not far-fetched. A reading of the bill will convince you of the broadness of its coverage, and meditation on it ought to scare anyone into immediate action. Where it was blocked before, the bill has now passed. Hope to kill it lies in those right-minded Senators who do not want this country littered with victims whose only sin is a desire to express real convictions. All of us ought to make it a personal obligation to get in touch with our Senators and ask them to oppose Senate bill 2311.

Evaluation Limited

By WILLIAM PAUL BARNDS

Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln, Nebraska

WE do much evaluating these days. Various groups both in the Church and out, from time to time, evaluate their programs and procedures. There is much advantage in this, for it is useful to stop and ask just what we are doing, and why, and whether or not we can do it better. A careful evaluation can have a salutary effect upon an organization. Individuals do well to take inventory of themselves, too. It is helpful, indeed necessary, for a person to examine his inner life, and confess his sins. It is wise for him to check up on his life generally and see if he is doing what he can and should do.

Yet in the large view of life, there are limitations to the value of evaluation, because our viewpoint is so often limited. This is quite true in Church matters. A rector may present a small class for confirmation and if he thinks only of their numbers, feel that he has failed somewhat. However in that small class there may be one person who in future years will bless the Church more than all persons together in a large class.

Sometimes a man has a disappointing or difficult experience which tries his soul, but in future years he thanks God that he had it. Young people often cannot see the value of certain required subjects in school—"Why should I take Latin?"—but the future shows the wisdom of those very studies. That even applies to seminarians; who don't see why they should study Greek.

People in humble circumstances in life, comparing themselves with others, sometimes think they have fallen far short, yet in the economy of God they may be most successful. Their evaluation of themselves is short-sighted.

In the deep things of God we need to walk by faith and let God in his time make his evaluation. The words from Ecclesiastes are appropriate "Cast thy bread upon the waters: for thou shalt find it after many days . . .

He that observeth the wind shall not sow; and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap."

Often the present cannot show us the reward that many days will reveal.

Look and Walk

By CORWIN C. ROACH

Dean of Bexley Hall

THEATERS are required by law to make provisions for emergency exits and fire escapes. They display signs indicating the way out of the building should a fire break out. A notice is usually put in the program reading somewhat like this, "Look around now, choose the nearest exit to your seat and in case of disturbance of any kind, to avoid the danger of panic, walk to that exit." It is good advice and St. Paul gives a like notice when he writes the Church in Corinth, "Provide the way of escape" (I Cor. 10-13) thus telling his readers that there is a similar law in the greater theater of life.

God has provided the way of escape for every trial that may come to man. He has put a door of opportunity in every way of despair. He lays upon us the two simple commands of the theater program. Look and walk. Whatever the evil we are called upon to face, of body, mind, or spirit, God has provided a way of escape, the means of salvation. St. Paul here is discussing the use of two of them, the sacraments and the scriptures. We shall be secure provided we have taken precaution beforehand and we do not panic in the midst of trouble. We must look now and walk in the time of trial. Our reaction is so often that of the careless theater-goer. We do not look for the way out until the danger is upon us and then we follow the crowd in a blind stampede, usually in the wrong direction.

Our faith should be like an emergency door. It must open out to God. If we do not see to it in the days of peace we shall find that we can not budge it when we most need it. Religion demands that we observe these two rules of safety first. Before the test seek out the way of escape God has provided. In time of trouble follow it calmly and confidently. Look and walk.

The Idea of a Christian University

By CHARLES TRAWICK HARRISON
Professor in the Dept. of English, University of the South

A PASTORAL LETTER, issued by the House of Bishops at the General Convention in San Francisco, contains this clause: "We call our people to a crusade for better Christian education." And here is another clause: "Only the response of the whole Church can make the program effective." I believe in the desperate necessity for Christian education. And I believe that nothing less than the convinced and determined response of the whole Church can meet the necessity. Quite candidly, then, this is an appeal.

The Bishops were obviously not referring exclusively or even primarily to university education—probably not even to academic education. But for them, no doubt, as for the rest of us Americans, the notion of a college education occupies a peculiar and critical place in the whole educational scheme. Some fifty years ago, the people of this country came, with a wholeheartedness unique in intellectual history, to put their faith and their hope in college education for everybody, or at least for just as many young men and women as could possibly be qualified for a college education. No conviction was more characteristic of intelligent Americans than that the universalization of knowledge would solve age-old problems—social, professional, and moral.

Many of you must, like me, have shared that optimistic view. If so, you must have shared in my disenchantment. Certainly no attribute of the first half of the twentieth century is more memorable than the manner in which it has seized us by the intellectual shoulders, given us a profound shaking, and forced us to re-examine even our most cherished ideas.

Thus, we re-read Cardinal Newman's great essay on "The Idea of a University," written almost precisely a hundred years ago, with some very sober reflections. Newman's thesis is that the proper function of a university is the cultivation of knowledge "for its own sake," knowledge which is proper to "a gentleman," knowledge which is "liberal" as opposed to knowledge which is servile or pragmatic. Needless to say, Newman gives profound and impressive meaning to each of these concepts.

Over against Newman's idea of liberal education, we in American universities have seen the growth of the idea of an instrumental education—an education, devoted to the cultivation of mechanical and professional skills; education which has its gaze rigidly fixed on the economic imperatives of our society.

Let me say at once that I am a liberal man; that, in a fundamental sense, I am on Newman's side in this dispute. But it is precisely here that the sober reflection sets in. What is a liberal education? Historically, the word liberal means "free," or, more accurately, "for freedom." The word derives from Greek and Roman use, which recognized that one type of training was appropriate for the children of slaves and another type for "liberi," or the children who were born to freedom. A free child will have the privilege of choice. But genuine choice is impossible without range of knowledge and understanding and opportunity. A boy bound in adolescence to the trade of carpentry may be a useful member of society; but he is not free. And we, as Americans and as Christians, are deeply and immovably committed to the value of freedom.

What Is Freedom?

THIS brings us to another crux. What is freedom? Now I am not going to wear you down with a re-hash of the literature and oratory which purports to examine or to answer that redoubtable question. I am going to solve the question immediately by an appeal to dogma. I refer, of course, to the collect for peace, in the order for daily morning prayer: "O God, who art the author of peace and lover of concord, in knowledge of whom standeth our eternal life, whose service is perfect freedom . . ." Let me note here, in passing, the profound recognition that the essential condition of freedom is peace: as political peace is essential to political freedom, so spiritual peace is essential to spiritual freedom. And spiritual peace is the gift of God, accessible only to those who recognize the truth of their relation to God. The words "My peace I give upon you" carry with them also the inestimably precious gift of freedom.

Now let me make an admission which you may find shocking. I believe what I have just said to you not because I find authority for it in the Prayer Book, not because it is approved Christian doctrine. For good or for ill, the temper of my mind happens to be that of a skeptic. I find it difficult or impossible to accept a conclusion on the strength of authority; and, at least in matters which intimately concern me, I tend to limit my beliefs to what I can see. I believe the Prayer Book's definition of freedom because belief has been forced upon me by observation and experience. It is in the brutal school of experience that I have altered some of my ideas about education, about the meaning of a liberal or free education. This means that, along with many other men and women of the twentieth century, I have had to alter my ideas about the capacities of human nature—what the bishops, in the pastoral letter I have already quoted, call "the truth of our human nature."

"It is only in the Christian Church that we learn the truth of our human nature." This truth is of the order of the paradox which I have already illustrated in my quotation from the liturgy: freedom is to be found in submission to the will of God. Let me apply this kind of truth to education: education which is undedicated in its freedom is not free; education which is undedicated in its utilitarianism is not useful.

Many of you will remember an article that appeared in Life Magazine a little less than a year ago—March 28, 1949. Its author was John McPartland, and its title "Intercollegiate Bull Session." According to the editors of Life, Mr. McPartland made a tour of college campuses, and brought back a composite story reflecting the views of students and instructors. Here are some of the speeches which he quoted: "These boys find the accumulated opinions of the past shallow . . . They have buried Aristotle and Thomas Aquinas. They have a sense of the urgency of tomorrow and a complete respect for competence." "We're shooting to be tagged by G.E. or G.M. or some outfit like that before we graduate. That's why you've got to figure all your plays from the time you're a sophomore—the right courses with grades that are good but not too good . . . plenty of campus activities to show leadership and getting along with people, and some athletics so that the personnel jokers from the big companies know that you're no swish. You've got to be well-balanced and well-rounded—that's how you get the letter on the high-grade bond paper which says, 'Report to the executive offices on the first of September, 1949'."—This hair-raising utterance precisely exemplifies my paradox: observe that its invocation of the "well-balanced" and "well-rounded" man is in fact a cynical and nicely calculated acceptance of simple slavery. Here is a gem which purports to come from a history instructor at Yale: "A university was once a place where young men became literate gentlemen with an appreciation of the humanities . . . But now all the universities are becoming high-powered trade schools. About a third of the men are in the technical courses — 'How to Create Artificial Life,' 'How to Blow Up a Medium-sized Planet.' The other two-thirds are specialists in one general course, 'How to Raise Dividends in a Supergigantic Corporation'." The academic gentleman concludes with "Sometimes I wonder about a student body composed of mad scientists and incipient Charles Luckmans." Let me pause to observe that "sometimes" seems hardly often enough, and let me quote one more passage—a rather extended one—from the editor of a college newspaper:

"Sure, the universities are becoming West Points for big business. Seniors want to graduate directly into jobs as second lieutenants with U. S. Steel or Du Pont or some such and retire on a colonel's pension 30 years later. What other plans can they make that will give them such security and prestige? . . . Look at college football today—it's a scale model of the situation. Nowadays a football game is a contest between two big organizations. The players are all specialists. They're the raw material and they're obtained by a kind of purchasing department. Then the production department—the coaching staff—works over the material and turns out the finished product, the team. The value of the product is measured by games won and cash customers at the stadium. The public relations staff — the advertising department—dresses up the product in bright packages of publicity and spectacular stuff. That's college football today and it's a fair sample of the situation in making a living. The important thing is the organization, the individual is nowhere without it. Who wants to be nowhere?"

A Saving Remnant

THIS young monster has done as fine a job as I've ever encountered in the summation of an anti-Christian, anti-liberal doctrine. But, for the argument, let's meet him on his own utilitarian grounds. Do you trust him to become a useful member of society? Multiply him by a few hundreds or thousands, and you have a situation which threatens the very integrity of our civilization.

Now I want to quote a passage written by the editor of another college paper—written in an "intellectual autobiography" which was required for an entirely secular purpose: "The whole bulk of my experience has led me to the conviction that the most pressing need in the world today is for a fuller moral awareness among people and a stronger ethical basis for society. Mr. Basil Willey says, 'Bacon was pleading for science in an age dominated by religion.' I believe that the twentieth century is a period dominated by science, and standing in need of religious and ethical awakening. I have therefore determined that, in my professional work, my primary concern will be to make a contribution toward the fulfillment of this need."

This passage was written by the editor of the Sewanee "Purple." He did not write it for me, and he does not know that I am using it here. Against any suspicion that his is a "cloistered virtue," let me hasten to affirm that, by any standard of worldly success, he has been preeminently successful in his college career. After he graduates this year, he will go to a secular professional school; And I will stake my last dime on the confidence that he is going to "succeed" both there and thereafter.

Within the framework of the Christian understanding, there is simply no conflict between the true and the useful, between the liberal and the instrumental. A Christian university is a university which tries to set upon this truth. A Christian university is a saving remnant within our educational structure.

When we say that a man is a Christian, we do not mean that he measures up to the Christian ideal; we mean that he acknowledges the force of that ideal. When we, at Sewanee, speak of ourselves as a Christian university, we do not mean that we conform to the pattern; we mean that we recognize the existence of the pattern and our obligation to evaluate ourselves by its standard.

However short we come, the recognition is of the utmost significance for even the elementary interests of college life. Take football, and recall the summary of our anonymous collegian above. In so far as his statement is just—I would call it an indictment but that he doesn't seem aware of indicting — American colleges are guilty of prostitution and betrayal. Dr. Alexander Guerry developed this point in a speech which he delivered a very few hours before his death: "These institutions undermine the very objectives they are created to achieve. They fail in the mission they were established to fulfill. While our country and its people need so desperately to have a sense of values and a real perspective, the colleges and universities are unable, because they have rendered themselves unable, to give their students and our people these great and necessary attributes."

There can not be a decent college administrator in the country who would not recognize the justice of Dr. Guerry's observations about college sports; there is not one who must not wish that the general situation were otherwise than it is. But college administrators are not free; they bow to the inevitable. Dr. Guerry, however, was free; and, at least in the matter of athletics, Sewanee enjoys a freedom which richer and larger and apparently more powerful universities do not enjoy.

What Matters

I SAY "at least in the matter of athletics" for the sake of precision; but of course I have spoken of athletics only because it is an easy illustration. It is freedom in the quest for the true and the beautiful and the good which really matters. And that quest has been abandoned in an academic society where "the organization is everything, and the individual is nothing," where students feel themselves irresistibly driven by temporal pressures. It can be maintained only in an academic society where there is the leisure of detachment from the transitory for the discovery of the permanent, leisure for exploring the resources of philosophy and science and literature. Sewanee undertakes to provide this kind of leisure, which depends so much on physical setting and human circumstances, but which depends above all on a fundamental loyalty to the ideal of Christian freedom.

This loyalty absolutely precludes the view that the individual is nothing, for it is bound to the view that the individual is sacred. In a Christian university, students and faculty members will have constant, easy, pleasant, and profitable contact with each other; their relations will be marked by affection and by courtesy. If I may speak once more of my personal experience, I will say that my associations with Sewanee students, during my three years of tenure at the university, have been the most rewarding and enlightening episode in the course of my own education.

A Christian university can not devote itself to anything less than the essential values of divine revelation and human experience; it can not compromise its clear obligations, as an educational institution, for any kind of gain, or popularity, or effective publicity. It enjoys a peculiar freedom in its pursuit of truth; it enjoys a peculiar clarity in the definition of its standards. Finally, its whole scheme of living and working and teaching and learning is bound together by a great unifying motive, which serves to give meaning and value both to its own life and to the life for which it prepares its students.

Morning Prayer in Modern English

By FREDERICK J. WARNECKE
Dean, Trinity Cathedral, Newark, N. J.

THE Anglican Communion last year celebrated the 400th anniversary of the first Book of Common Prayer in the English language. The significant aspect of this celebration is found in the words "in the English language." For despite the obvious and sweeping changes made by Cranmer, the leading spirit in this audacious liturgical adventure, the new book of worship was, in the words of its own preface, "much agreeable to the mind and purpose of the old fathers." The essential reform of 1549 was to substitute the living English language for the long dead Latin.

Cranmer's purpose in this was simple. It was that the worship of the Church should be in a language understood by the worshipping fellowship, thus permitting intelligent participation. Says the preface of the 1549 book, "And moreover, whereas St. Paul would have such language spoken to the people of the Church as they might understand, and have profit from hearing the same; the service of this Church of England these many years hath been read in Latin to the people, which they understand not; so that they have heard with their ears only, and their heart, spirit and mind have not been edified thereby." Again, "and that in such a language and order as is most easy and plain for the understanding both of the readers and hearers."

In the attempt to find language "most easy and plain," Cranmer wrote with freshness, straightforwardness and a compelling sense of immediacy. He phrased translations and revisions of ancient prayers so that they spoke clearly and directly to his day and age. They were indeed "for the understanding both of the readers and hearers"

But as this anniversary indicates, in God's mercy four centuries have passed since that time. Because it has continued to be a living language, English has grown and changed vastly in these years. In this evolution of a language, much of the Prayer Book phraseology has become archaic. Certain examples of this are almost classics! There is the use of the word "let" in its meaning of "to impede," rather than in its modern sense of "to permit" in the collect for the fourth Sunday in Advent. ("Whereas, through our sins and wickedness, we are sore let and hindered in running the race that is set before us.") There is the use of "prevent" to mean "go before" rather than "stop" in the collect for the seventeenth Sunday after Trinity. ("That thy grace may always prevent and follow us.") There are the many places where "comfort," "comfortable" and "Comforter" are used in their basic Latin sense of "with s t r e n g t h," "strengthening," and "Strengthener," rather than in their modern meanings which unfortunately imply coddling. The list could be almost endless, though some examples of this are not quite so immediately obvious. One doubts whether the laity realize that in the prayer of consecration in the Holy Communion the word "reasonable" in the oft-quoted phrase "to be a reasonable, holy and living sacrifice unto thee" means "rational." Or that "health" many times refers to the gospel, as, "Thy saving health" in the prayer for all conditions of men.

True, there have been revisions of the Book of Common Prayer since 1549, the last as recently as 1928 in the American Church. But these have not wrestled with the basic semantic question, though they have changed some words and phrases. More often than not, with typical ecclesiastical caution, the attempt was made to correct liturgical bad taste and error by addition rather than by excision and revision. In the desire to achieve flexibility, the services were often actually made more complicated and cumbersome. It is astounding to realize that there are twelve lines of closely printed rubrics at the beginning of the order for daily morning prayer. There are then 78 further lines, or parts of lines or rubrics, not counting titles and indented instructions in prayers before we come to a final "Here endeth Morning Prayer." Then, of course, in common usage, it doesn't end! Without rubrics, we add hymns, sermons, prayers, offerings and anthems!

One is tempted to quote Cranmer's 1549 preface once more: "Moreover the number and hardness of the rules called the Pie and the manifold changings of the service was the cause, that to turn the Book only was so hard and intricate a matter that many times there was more business to find out what should be read than to read it when it was found." Note, incidentally, the word "business" is used in its 16th century meaning.

The Problem Intensified

TO the faithful Anglican, this problem of phrase and page is largely non-existent. Such learned long since to find their way about the book. Its phrases have become not only part of the warp and woof of their worship, but of their lives. They love the Book of Common Prayer with deep and admirable sentiment. Yet sometimes one wonders if they have not been beguiled into thinking that they understood it because they have said it so often. It is rather revealing to ask a faithful Churchman to explain a well-worn Prayer Book phrase and have him stumble for properly expressive language!

But the faithful, after all, are unfortunately all too few. Many who "profess and call themselves" members of the Episcopal Church worship falteringly when they deign to visit their parish church. As a hint of this, note the prevalence of printed Sunday bulletins with detailed and full outlines of the service, including all the pages of the Prayer Book to which one is to turn.

This plight is, of course, accentuated when we turn to those not of this communion, and to the great unchurched majority of Americans. Anglicans commonly speak in great pride of the Book of Common Prayer. It is considered to be one of the great advantages of that communion. Essentially, this is quite true. But the Prayer Book is also a stumbling block to many unchurched people. One may, for the moment, pass over the difficulties of following a service in the Prayer Book, and suppose that a pagan timidly drawing near unto God simply tries to listen to the service. Much of what he hears is in a language as strange to him as a foreign tongue. Even words that he recognizes are used in a stilted way. The result is that his attention is drawn from what is being said to the manner in which it is said. Worship changes to speculation. Reverence halts. Christian doctrine is clouded and debate begins in the mind. Error has full chance to enter.

But this is not to state the depth of this problem of liturgical worship. We live in a pagan culture which affects all our efforts at evangelization. Walter Lippmann has said, "The irreligion of the modern world is radical to a degree for which there is, I think, no counterpart." Therefore all Christians face a basic problem in semantics. The Christian vocabulary has been lost by the multitudes. It is significant that in the nonfiction best seller "Cheaper by the Dozen," which tells the story of a family far above the average in intelligence, the common confusion between the terms "immaculate conception" and "virgin birth" is found.

Great Christian words and phrases which once were full of meaning are now meaningless to the majority of people. Because they are meaningless, their use brings no sense of relevance to life. Thus many of our best plans for evangelism fail because religious illiteracy has erected a formidable language barrier.

Yet because of this very semantic difficulty, the greater compulsion rests upon the Christian fellowship to devise means whereby to bring the good news again to people. Some Protestant groups have tried to do this in their worship by rejecting the liturgical heritage of Christianity. At times, this has resulted in language without Christian content. The language is simplified, but the sense of "the holy" is missing. Recognizing the peril in this solution, other Protestant groups have turned increasingly to liturgical forms, only to find themselves promptly enmeshed in the very problem we are discussing. Rome, still burdened with Latin, experiments increasingly with dialogue Masses. A few bold spirits in that communion long audibly for the Mass in the vernacular.

The obvious answer is to do once more what Cranmer did. The Church must once again translate its historic language of worship. The Church must once again speak liturgically in a language which people understand. It must speak as it did in New Testament days, in the language of the home and the market place. It must remember that one need not pray historically to pray well.

This is not the revolution it will seem to some sentimental souls. Recall Philip Toynbee's pungent essay on the future of literature, in which he gently spoofs "societies for the preservation" of things which could not survive without such coddling. He then wisely notes that major human interests perpetuate themselves when they are integrated with the living organism that is life at the moment.

In the Church, an essential part of our faith is that God's Holy Spirit is present in his Church, to guide it so that it ever "renews its youth and communicates its youthfulness to the vessel containing it," as Irenaeus said many years ago. We are not enslaved to the particular words and language of a Book of Common Prayer, as we are not enslaved to the literal words of the Holy Scriptures. Through each, the Spirit moves and lives anew in every age.

Greed or Need

By PHILIP H. STEINMETZ

Rector of the Ashfield Parishes

WHEN tobacco is harvested perhaps a dozen plants are left standing in a field. These few plants produce enough seed for the whole field for next year. That is an example of the measure of God's abundant provision.

On what basis does he mean it to be divided?

The Christian believes that God is indiscriminate and prodigal in distribution, sending rain on every farm regardless of the people living there and giving us far more than we deserve of time and chances to try again when we are wrong. But if there is any channeling of God's gifts, it is to those who are the greatest sinners and hence in the greatest need rather than to those who try to exert the most pressure. Need rather than greed draws love's bounty.

When he is influenced by this belief a Christian is usually at odds with prevailing conduct in business and politics. Since shame, sharing and service marks his policies, he is a thorn in the flesh to those who prefer to seek prestige, privilege and profit. They wish him to confine his Christianity to private and home life, but he cannot but view life as a whole and hence insists it is true also in business and politics. So he gets called a radical.

But a Christian radical has two distinctive marks. First, his methods must be in tune with his ends, hence must be dominated by love rather than violence; second, his end is the glory of God rather than the gaining or maintaining of control by one group of men over another. These are useful tests these days when we so often confuse Christianity and Communism, calling the best Christians Communists and missing our own full part in Christ's kingdom for fear of being similarly branded.

Pretty Soft

By IRVING A. EVANS

Rector of St. Mark's, Fall River, Mass.

THEY couldn't help being soft. Those people of Israel had for years been depending upon their Egyptian masters to do their thinking and planning and worrying for them. They had enjoyed the only perfect security there is—slavery. Now they were free—pitifully free. By the grace of God they had a wise and resourceful leader in Moses, the man of God, and he saw to it that they were provided with food (manna) and water (from the rock) and morale from his "Staff"—his leadership.

It was when he went away for a few weeks, up to the mountain top, to ponder and pray about the whole problem of law for human conduct, that the trouble began. The people came to miss the man who had fed them, found them water and green pastures and had done their thinking and planning for them. And they were not yet ready to work and fend for themselves. "Make us a God," they cried—"One who will provide for us, defend us and think for us." So it was that out of their rings and earrings, their bracelets and their anklets, Aaron made them a god—a golden god. A little golden calf.

How little human nature has changed since those far-off days, and one nation after another has been seeking prosperity and security—not by hard work and self-discipline, but by the "god" of government. Governments have nothing to give, they only take away—and the greater the government becomes, the more it costs. The golden calf came from the poor people. No wonder Moses was furious when he returned to find his people putting their faith in a bit of gold instead of getting busy and working and earning their way. They were soft, pretty soft—and so are we. They were vulnerable—very vulnerable—and so are we. From without, and even more so, from within. Our American people fill the night-spots and leave the pews half empty, squander their earnings on rubbish and leave the Church in want. All the while the "governments" of the world get bigger and more costly and more bitter toward one another while the people pay for it. Isn't it true that the softer a people become, the more they have to be governed and the more they pay? May God help us to begin to develop more spiritual stamina, more moral muscle—for the more self-discipline we shall need.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

The Mystery of the Kingdom of God. By Albert Schweitzer. Macmillan. $3.00.

This is the book with which it all began! Long before Schweitzer wrote his famous "Quest of the Historical Jesus," as far back as 1901, the author, then at Strassbourg, wrote a "Sketch of the Life of Jesus." It was translated in 1913 by Dr. Walter Lowrie, then living in Rome. The new reprint indicates the continuing demand for this book, and also the enormous vogue of Schweitzer's works at the present time. Although the book is "dated," it still deserves reading—if for nothing more, at least to show how modern "thorough-going eschatology" got started.

The Creed In Slow Motion. By Ronald Knox. Sheed & Ward. $2.50.

If we remember that "slow motion" is usually humorous and revealing, we will be prepared for this exposition of the Apostles' Creed (according to the Roman Church) by Father Knox. Delivered in twenty minute doses Sunday afternoons to a girls' school in England, they are here recorded verbatim in all their informality, humor and simplicity. All teachers can learn a great deal from this volume about presenting profound truths to youngsters in terms they can understand—with smiles, chuckles, and laughter. One wonders what the nuns thought of it.—C. LAWSON WILLARD JR.

Eschatology and Ethics in the Teaching of Jesus. By Amos N. Wilder. Harper. $2.50.

This is a new and revised edition of one of the standard modern works in New Testament study. Dr. Wilder has brought the book up-to-date, has added about a chapter and a half, and has supplemented the bibliography. This is "the" book to start with in the study of this subject.

Our Religious Traditions. By Sterling P. Lamprecht. Harvard University Press. $2.00.

In this little book Judaism, Catholicism, and Protestantism are analyzed and assessed from the point of view of what the author calls "that reasoned interpretation of human life which is the outstanding contribution of the Greek mind to western civilization." Considering that his beliefs represent a fourth tradition, Professor Lamprecht shows a good measure of sympathetic insight into the more important motifs of the other three.

His distinction between Catholicism and Romanism is helpful (and should be of particular interest to Episcopalians). All through he has a gift for multum in parvo. Of course, the ultimate priority over the three traditions which he gives to the insights and methods of rational humanism, will be unacceptable to any convinced member of either of the three traditions—Catholic, Protestant, or Jewish.

—JAMES A. PIKE

Growth in Prayer. By Constance Garrett. Foreword by Douglas Steers. Macmillan. $2.00.

A simple, helpful, realistic manual of prayer by one who obviously prays. The book is divided into five parts: Learning to Pray, Vocal Prayer, Mental Prayer, Group Prayer, and Practice of Prayer. Each of these parts has several chapters on different types of prayer. At the end of each chapter are a number of prayers. The book stresses individual prayer, having only three short chapters on "group prayer." There is very little about corporate worship and the individual pray-er being caught up in the worshipping community.

—HELEN B. TURNBULL

The Perennial Scope of Philosophy. By Karl Jaspers. Philosophical Library. $3.00.

A book by the German Existentialist, recently published upder the title "Philosophischer Glaube." (Why has the translator changed the title so completely? Did he think that the new title is more attractive to the average reader? But the book is not written for him anyway!). In fact, the author does deal with the perennial scope of philosophy, but with the thorny problem of the relation between thought and faith, philosophy and religion. It is a merit of the book that it recognizes the centrality of this problem. Indeed, existentialism depends upon its solution. It originated from Kierkegaard who believed in the primacy of faith, and wanted to destroy the belief in the possibility and validity of any "philosophical faith," as Jaspers tries to defend it. He rejects outright the position of Kierkegaard, as indeed all modern existentialists do, since they want to transform the Kierkegaardian protest against philosophy into a new type of philosophy called existentialist. This is the weak spot in all these modern attempts. To touch upon this spot is the purpose of the author; he finds himself compelled to substitute for Kierkegaard's faith another one which he (somewhat arbitrarily) calls philosophical, and which he simply dictates. The language of this treatise, as indeed of all Jasper's books, is presumptuous and unnecessarily technical. —RICHARD KRONER

Creative Personality. By Dr. Charles Francis Potter. Funk and Wagnalls. $2.50.

There is something desperately courageous about this book, as about Humanism in general. But how anyone can go on believing that evolution will see us through, or that the destiny of science is to lead mankind onward and upward forever, is — at least in these days — something quite incomprehensible to many of us.

Youth of the Church

By JOHN BOOTY
Ex-Chairman of the National Youth Commission

THE United Movement of the Church's Youth is the official youth movement of the Episcopal Church. It is sponsored and administered by the division of youth of the National Council assisted by the national youth commission. In this article I wish to deal with some of the problems of the movement which are of vital concern to its leaders.

First UMCY, as the movement is popularly called, is seeking to unite all of the church's young people into the active life and work of the Church. It does this by encouraging participation by all young people in some one of the many organizations set up for youth, such as the Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Girls' Friendly Society, the Order of Sir Galahad, and into the total movement through the program and emphases of UMCY. All of the young people of the Episcopal Church are considered "members" of the movement. The aim is to encourage all to be active participants. Why should this effort be made? Are not the independent youth organizations doing as much as is needed? In 1934 the diocese of Georgia tried to find the answer to this question and discovered that the existing youth work involved less than 15% of the young people of the diocese. This is a common experience. And so UMCY with the backing of the National Council attempts to interest all young people in the life of the Church. UMCY includes all existing youth organizations and all young people who are not in organizations. UMCY includes "co-ed" youth fellowships and by virtue of its age range includes young adults and college students.

Many people say that UMCY is not fulfilling the task which the General Convention of 1940 created it for. But if this is true, why is it? First, UMCY is new. It has had to struggle through war years and through growing pains. Secondly, the youth organizations have seemed willing to approve UMCY but have neither caught the vision of the movement nor seriously considered it in their programs. The Brotherhood of St. Andrew, the Girls' Friendly Society, and the Order of Sir Galahad, officially recognized cooperating agencies of the division of youth, did not have any representative appointed to the national youth commission meeting in February. Thirdly, many dioceses and parishes are afraid of any national effort, for various reasons. Some just don't like unity. Some feel that the movement is trying to "take over." Some fear that more work may be thrown at them. Some are just plain lethargic. Some think young people are pests to be endured but not encouraged in participating in the life of the Church.

The second major problem is in making UMCY a movement. Many considerations enter into this. One stone wall encountered is the current belief that a "canned" program for young people is what the Church needs. This is a spoon fed, or needle injection business. It arises out of a bewilderment as to what to do with young people. It also arises out of a lack of leadership initiative. Such a belief in "canned" program can never be conducive to the projection of a movement. Before any program can be meaningful there must exist an attitude of mind which is receptive to it, and attitudes are the stuff of which movements are made. This is the attitude that Jesus means something to us today. The attitude is one of a personal commitment.

Another consideration here is the aspect of the Church in its conformity to the pattern of the secular institution. This means that we have an institution begun with some definite purpose in mind. But in time this purpose becomes obscured by the necessity of keeping the institution going. Thus we are likely to find that the primary purpose of an institution may come to be self-perpetuation. Young people of the Church are confronted with many organizations which have a tendency to feel this way and to compete for their attention. UMCY is often viewed by the supporters of youth organizations as competition and so feared. All of this inhibits the effort to make UMCY responsive as a movement to the grass roots expression of young people where they live and work in the Christian army of the Church, in youth organizations and outside.

As a movement UMCY begins with the young person who is beginning to know and feel himself as a person independent of the close family ties. This is the young person who questions all things, who needs to express himself and not be laughed at; whose enthusiasm, once he has found the center of his life and his new security in Christ, is the enthusiasm of a revolutionist. UMCY as a movement, ideally, seeks to be a channel for the expression of the young Christian in the Church. And UMCY is not afraid. It does not try to beat down revolutionary Christianity. Being keenly aware of this, and believing that the Holy Spirit works through young Christians, even as with the Apostles who were young men, is what makes UMCY a movement. And this is the reason why those who have experienced its drive never wish to see it become a rigid and static organization more concerned with buttons, pins, and Roberts rules of order, than with the application of all that Christ has revealed to us.

GEORGE MacMURRAY

CHRISTIAN CENTURY: through Editor Paul Hutchinson, reports that the country is full of fear. He wrote the signed editorial after a trip across the country by car. Much of the fear, he thinks, is deliberately fostered for political purposes, with the Republican strategy seeking to create fear of disloyalty in the higher ranks of government. As an illustration, he says that Senator McCarthy of Wisconsin launched his attack on the loyalty of the state department after Father Walsh, professor at Georgetown University, pointed to a Communist-hunt as an issue which would do most for him in his campaign for re-election. There is also fear of losing jobs with people becoming aware of rising unemployment. In the wheat belt the fear of a return of the dust bowl dominotes people's minds. "This condition of mounting and multiplying fears is here, and those who are trying to see what road American policy is likely to follow must reckon with it. Nations ruled by fear are hardly a good risk as world leaders."

WATCHMAN-EXAMINER (Baptist): Sunday schools should be supported by all Christians. Estimating that there are 38,000,000 children, young people and adults taught each Sunday by 1,500,000 teachers, the editorial urges that every member of the family attend. No local church is properly fulfilling its stewardship until it gives its best to the Sunday school. It further declares that a good school is a guarantee of the vital life of the church.

THE EVANGELIST (Disciples): takes church people to task for their failure to support churches and charities, which, combined, get one cent and one mill out of every American dollar. The editorial declares that church people hold the cross of Christ in contempt as of no more importance than a cigarette. It is well once in a while to take our eyes off Moscow and Washington and throw the searchlight in upon our own penurious hearts and the disastrous consequences which our thoughtless greed is having upon our way of life.

DIARY OF A DEAN

W. R. INGE

This book covers the years Dean Inge was Dean of St. Paul's in London, some of the most formative years as far as contemporary history is concerned. Dean Inge was in a position to know many people who guided England through that period and has recorded his meetings with them in his diary. His views on war and peace, on government and politics, on population and eugenics, on Catholicism and Protestantism, on Biblical Criticism and Fundamentalism are all very much to the point. Complete mastery of expression and a charming warmth of humor pervade this delightful revelation of the Dean's private life. $3.50.

QUAKERS WITHDRAW FROM FINLAND

American Friends Service Committee ends its formal aid program in Finland on May 1, it was announced at headquarters in Philadelphia. Two Quaker workers are to be withdrawn, but the statement says that Quaker interest in Finland will not end since several Quaker visitors will travel there this summer, and in the future. Since 1945, Quakers have had a feeding and clothing program there, work camps, rehabilitation for small industries.

INTERFAITH DINNER IN VERMONT

Protestant, Roman Catholic and Jewish men of Bennington, Vt., held an interfaith dinner on April 18, the first cooperative event of its kind in the city. The dinner was held in the Knights of Columbus Hall and the principal speaker was the Rev. Robert F. Joyce, Roman Catholic pastor of Rutland.

PROPOSE THREE-FAITH PEACE STUDY

A proposal has been made by the Synagogue Council that Jewish, Roman Catholic and Protestant groups make a common study of the problems of peace. The council thinks UN must be strengthened; democracy must be extended to those people which have not yet achieved full independence; democracy must be reinforced in the U. S. with threats to civil liberties vigorously combatted, "such as have become manifest in the current wave of hysteria and irrational suspicion;" press and radio should restrain news that encourages fear and creates distrust and conflict; a larger proportion of national wealth should strengthen schools and promote health and social welfare. The pronouncement declared that the council looked "with serious misgivings upon the growing reliance on force, which has become the accepted basis for international policy of all major nations."

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP EXPERIMENT

Ministers in a number of cities have organized small meditation, prayer and fellowship groups, following addresses by Elton Trueblood, professor at Earlham College and a Quaker. Speaking to a large group of ministers in Minneapolis, he said that "the basic unit of Christian life is not the great denomination nor the single individual in his aloneness, but the intense and really living fellowship of a few people who share life at its deepest points. Apparently Jesus depended utterly on this method when he formed the group of disciples. There were 12 in his fellowship and this is about the right number for us." Dr. Trueblood organized similar groups in Des Moines, Denver, Pocatello, Portland and Seattle, and presumably will set up similar groups at conferences he is leading in other cities for the mission society of the Baptists.

MINISTERS BLAMED FOR DIVORCE

The ministers association of Adams County, Indiana, think ministers are partly to blame for divorce. The resolution condemned ministers "who merely read the marriage ceremony for a fee." They have a responsibility "to do all in their power to indicate to each couple the stake that God and the Church have in each marriage and to explain to young people the meaning of love, the understanding of which is vital to happy and successful marriage." A committee was appointed to draw up a set of premarital counseling standards.

DR. SANDER IS BARRED FROM R. C. HOSPITALS

Two R. C. hospitals in Manchester, N. H., have barred Dr. Hermann Sander, acquitted of a mercy-murder charge, from treating patients in the institutions.

A ranch for delinquent boys is to be established at Melbourne, Fla., by Homer Rodeheaver. Robert Catledge, school teacher of Marianna, Fla., is to be head of the institution which is located on a 30,000 acre estate.

BILLY GRAHAM SEES LUCE AND BYRNES

Billy Graham, 31-year-old evangelist, who is getting the headlines these days as a preacher of the gospel, reports that he recently spent five hours "talking religion" to former Secretary of State, James C. Byrnes. He also reported "friendly" conversations with Henry (Time-Life) Luce.

OKLAHOMA PLAN WOULD LIMIT CHURCHES

A plan which would limit the number of churches in a town will be studied by the Oklahoma council of churches. The aim is to do away with over-churching and to eliminate competition. Any plan submitted following a survey by a special committee will not be binding on the members of the council.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

LAYMEN MEET AT BOSSEY

Methods of bridging the gulf between Christian teaching and contemporary life were discussed at a meeting of laymen at the ecumenical institute at Bossey, Switzerland. Attending were educators, editors, industrialists, from eight nations, including U. S. M. Andre Philip, head of the French economic delegation to UN, underscored the significance of two million unemployed in Germany and Italy. He said he was not afraid of the H-bomb but of another economic crisis which could be brought about only through unity of the European nations. He said it was the Church's responsibility to arouse the consciences of the people to this need.

NEW LIFE MOVEMENT IN NEW ZEALAND

A new life movement has been launched by Presbyterians in New Zealand with aims of revitalizing the inner life; promoting evangelism; church extension and construction at home and abroad.

MOSCOW PATRIARCH URGES PEACE

Priests conducting Easter services in Russian Orthodox churches read a letter from Patriarch Alexei urging prayers for peace and the outlawing of atomic warfare.

COMPLETE FREEDOM IN ISRAEL

Complete freedom of worship for Protestants, Roman Catholics, Moslems, and all others, as well as Jews, "is a fact in Israel" according to Daniel A. Poling, who was a member of a delegation of Christians to tour the country. He said further that "dynamic religious faith runs like a fire" through the country. He said it answered the question "how so few could withstand so many in battle and now, in peace, how they could perform the miracle of receiving 1,000 refugees daily and keep their gates open to all who would come."

SLOW COMEBACK FOR RURAL CHURCHES

Rural churches are staging a slow comeback in China, according to a Christian leader reporting at Hong Kong after frequent trips into the interior. Self support is a major problem but pastors are becoming more and more committed to the idea of supporting themselves through farming, bee-keeping, stock-raising, and such home industries as soap-making, tailoring and carpentry. At a meeting recently of rural social service workers, out of 69 delegates from 39 rural churches, it was revealed that 34 were active in local government.

MARK HOLY WEEK IN BELGRADE

Holy Week and Easter were marked by extraordinary scenes of religious devotion in Communist-dominated Belgrade. Crowds flocked the cathedral and other Serbian churches, the total estimated at 140,000 on Good Friday alone—about a third of the city's population.

ROMANIAN METROPOLITAN IS UNFROCKED

The synod of the Romanian Orthodox Church, meeting at Bucharest, has unfrocked Metropolitan Vissarion Puiu, formerly head of the Bucovina diocese, accusing him of being "a Vatican agent" and of having left his diocese, to live in exile in Paris, without authorization. The Metropolitan was criticized during the war for preaching pro-Hitler sermons.

PRIESTS SENTENCED IN POLAND

Two Roman Catholic priests have been sentenced to long prison terms by a military court in Poland, charged with anti-state activities. The prosecutor declared that the priests, together with a layman who was likewise found guilty, were under the influence of "the anti-patriotic Church hierarchy which has turned some priests into bandits."

NOTABLES PREACH AT ST. PAUL'S

C. Alan Paton, author of "Cry the Beloved Country," and the Rev. George MacLeod, founder of the Iona Community, and a minister of the Church of Scotland, preached in Holy Week at St. Paul's Cathedral, London. Mr. MacLeod is said to be the first non-Anglican to preach there.

The Moravian Church of Great Britain has joined the World Council of Churches, bringing the total to 156 Churches located in 44 countries.

HIERARCHY ASKS REFORMS IN INDUSTRY

Reforms in industry which would gradually achieve the sharing by organized labor in "management, profits and property" were recommended in a pastoral letter issued by the R. C. bishops of Quebec.

MISSIONARIES MEET IN SOUTH PACIFIC

Native delegates from 16 South Pacific islands are to attend a missionary conference at Suva, Fiji Island, April 24-May 6. The purpose is to coordinate policy and research on matters of common concern, with the affair set up by the governments of the U. S., Great Britain, France, the Netherlands, Australia and New Zealand. Missionary organizations from several of these countries are to attend as observers.

ANGLICAN BISHOP VISITS GERMANY

Bishop Leslie S. Hunter of Sheffield, England, arrived in Hamburg on April 12 for a tour of western Germany and Berlin. He is visiting a number of refugee camps and is also to attend the synod of the Evangelical Church meeting in Berlin on April 23.

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

JULES L. MOREAU
Prof. at Seabury-Western

For a long time I have been an avid reader of The Witness, and I have championed its cause in a part of the country where more conservative and right wing Church publications have a greater circulation. That is for the fact that I think you are on the right track in your theological thinking and also in the application of that thinking.

I must admit, however, that I was a bit shocked as I read the second editorial in this week's magazine (13 April) entitled "Who is Subversive?" Mr. J. Parnell Thomas might well have proved to be a less than diligent public servant, and in time Mr. McCarthy might prove to be a similarly poor specimen of the 'people's choice'; but what that has to do with the subject of your editorial I fail to understand. We can fight against Thomas-ism or McCarthy-ism only by a clear and straightforward statement of the fallacies upon which their positions are based. It is only reluctantly that I bring this matter to your attention, since I have a strong belief in your general approach to public matters, but I feel equally strongly that a paper such as yours cannot stoop to such unnecessary mudslinging without damage to the greater cause involved, despite the truth of the accusations.

I hope that we may write off this outburst as an example of an editor's being carried away with the apparent strength of a clincher.

Orchids to you and your staff, and just one small spring onion for this infelicitous jibe.

MARY F. LEAKEY
Churchwoman of Hawthorne, N. J.

Ever since I was introduced to The Witness several years ago, I have wanted to express my deep sense of gratitude for the glowing light it throws into our home each week. With your unique blending of the spiritual and the rational as reflected in much of our present day thinking, you always give us a quickened sense of the wholeness of human experience. Your Lenten series was outstanding in this respect but the April 6th issue was tremendous.

I don't think I have ever read a more penetrating analysis of Christian thought and feeling than Prof. Thomas' article on "Secularism and Humanism." In fact, everything about this issue seemed truly inspired, compelling me to take time out of a busy day to thank you for an unusually moving experience.

LUTHER W. GRAMLY
Rector at Valentine, Nebr.

The article "Priest or Pastor?" (March 30) can be supplemented by this viewpoint. In many Roman church announcements the incumbent's name is followed by "pastor." This indicates to interested readers that he is authorized to administer the sacrament of penance. Qualification to do this is inherent in the priesthood, but an appointment to serve at the table does not necessarily permit using this rod and staff of comfort.

A Roman friend once on reading the page of church notices jocularly remarked that many calling themselves pastors were just sheepherders, and some maybe even rustlers.

For the Closing of the Church School

These are items which have found particular favor with children of Sunday Schools.

The aim throughout the years has been to encourage the establishment and use of Prayer Corners in the home. Hundreds of clergymen are incorporating the use of one or more, and, in many cases, all of these articles as a part of their school year plan.

These items are usually given as awards at the close of the school year.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Episcopal Church Foundation Set Up as Corporation

A Group of Leading Industrialists Will Use Funds Entirely at Own Discretion

★ Believing that greater material resources must be made available to the work of the Church, a group of twenty or more business and professional men from Baltimore, Boston, Chicago, New York, San Francisco and other cities, have founded The Episcopal Church Foundation, it was announced today by Pierpont V. Davis of Harriman, Ripley & Co., president of the foundation and a vestryman of Trinity Church, New York. The announcement followed a meeting of the board of directors.

The establishment of the foundation was unanimously endorsed both by the House of Bishops and by the House of Deputies at the General Convention held in San Francisco last September.

Mr. Davis said further that he and his fellow-directors will seek gifts and bequests—and at their discretion will appropriate funds—for special projects not covered by the annual budget of the Church. The foundation's field of interest will embrace the entire scope of the work of the Church. Projects to be considered by the board will range from possible aid to theological seminaries through the support of their ministry at home and abroad.

"A strong, alert Church," said Mr. Davis, "must look ahead, as every sound business and educational institution today tries to do. It must lay out its program for the coming years with vision and wise strategy and measure its needs with faith in the support of its members. Our aim in the new foundation is to provide a channel through which supplementary funds may flow from those who have the means and a strong social and spiritual consciousness."

Presiding Bishop Henry K. Sherrill, who is chairman of the board of the foundation, said that the basic objective of the Church must always be a more effective ministry and that its needs over the next decade are, therefore, conceived essentially in terms of a larger, better trained, better equipped and better paid clergy.

Bishop Sherrill said that to meet these needs, at home and abroad, the Church has estimated its ten-year costs—in addition to the annual budget—at an aggregate of $18,500,000. $5,000,000 could well be used in the field of theological education. Religious work in American colleges will represent $1,000,000. Improvements in facilities at five Negro educational institutions identified with the Church will cost a total of $985,000. The expanding program of religious work in towns and in rural areas will need grants totaling $750,000, of which $140,000 will be used for buildings and equipment at the Roanridge training center in Parkville, Missouri.

Plans for work overseas involve a total of $7,204,500. Of this $1,978,000 will be devoted to rehabilitation in the Philippines, including $1,000,000 for replacement of the buildings of St. Luke's Hospital and school of nursing in Manila.

George Whitney, president of J. P. Morgan & Co., and a vestryman of St. John's of Lattingtown, Locust Valley, N. Y., is treasurer of the new foundation. Edwin S. S. Sunderland of Davis Polk Wardwell Sunderland & Kiendl, president of St. Luke's Hospital and a vestryman of St. James' Church, New York, is secretary.

The other directors, all of whom are laymen, are Harry M. Addinsell, chairman of the board, First Boston Corporation, a member of the National Council and treasurer of St. Bartholomew's Church; Prescott S. Bush of Brown Bros., Harriman & Co., vice president, the Seabury House corporation, a vestryman of St. John's Church, Fisher's Island, New York, and a former vestryman of St. Anne's Church, Kennebunkport, Maine; William W. Crocker, president, Crocker First National Bank, San Francisco, director of the corporation of the diocese of California; Richard C. Curtis of Choate, Hall & Stewart, Boston, member of the cathedral chapter of the diocese of Massachusetts; Champion McD. Davis of Wilmington, N. C., president, Atlantic Coast Line Railroad, a member of the National Council and warden of St. John's Church, Wilmington, N. C.

Also Russell F. Dill, a director of the Delaware and Hudson Railroad Corp., and treasurer of the National Council; Gaver G. Dominick, president, the Roosevelt Hospital and a vestryman of St. James' Church, New York; Alexander F. Duncan of Baltimore, chairman of the board, Commercial Credit Corporation; Edmond duPont of Wilmington, Del., of Francis I. duPont & Co., a vestryman and former senior warden of Christ Church, Christiana Hundred, Wilmington, Del.

Also Jackson A. Dykman of Cullen and Dykman, chancellor of the Diocese of Long Island; Harvey S. Firestone, Jr., chairman of the board, Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., Akron, a trustee of the diocese of Ohio; William B. Given, Jr., president, American Brake Shoe Co., a trustee of the General Theological Seminary and a vestryman of Trinity Church, New York; Byron S. Miller of Greenwich, a vestryman of Grace Church, Honesdale, Pa. and chairman of the laymen's committee of the diocese of Bethlehem; Edward L. Ryerson, chairman of the board, Inland Steel Co., Chicago, warden of St. James' Church, Chicago; Eugene W. Stetson, chairman of the executive committee, Illinois Central Railroad Co. and senior warden of St. James' Church, New York; Walter C. Teagle, former chairman of the board, Standard Oil Co. (N. J.), a director of the Seabury House Corporation and a vestryman of Christ Church, Greenwich; Langbourne Williams, president, Freeport Sulphur Co., a trustee of the American Church Institute for Negroes; Humphrey F. Redfield, a former vice-president of John Price Jones Co., Inc., will serve as executive vice-president of the foundation. Headquarters have been opened at 74 Trinity Place, New York.

BISHOP BAYNE SPEAKS AT CONVENTION

★ Bishop Stephen F. Bayne of Olympia was the speaker at the banquet on April 17 held in connection with the convention of the diocese of Oregon in Portland.

EASTER SERVICE TELEVISED

★ The first Protestant Easter service to be seen in television in the Boston area was the 10 o'clock service of holy communion and sermon at Christ Church, Cambridge, on Easter Sunday. On Easter Sunday, 1949, WBZ-TV telecast the service from the Roman Catholic Cathedral in Boston with Archbishop Cushing as celebrant. This year WBZ-TV decided to telecast a Protestant service and picked out this historic church in Cambridge.

Christ Church is one of the most beautiful colonial buildings in the United States, but like so many colonial churches, the roof is supported by many pillars. This made the problem of vision more difficult than it would be in many other churches. In addition, the beautiful crystal chandeliers that hang from the ceiling cut the view from the rear balcony so that there is no one spot in the church from which all parts of the church may be easily within range of a camera. Therefore, two cameras were necessary one which was set up in an end pew and another in the balcony. As the cameras make no noise, except for the camera in the forward part of the church, the fact that the service was being telecast would hardly have been known to the congregation.

The result of the telecast on the individual television set was extremely beautiful. The rector, the Rev. Gardiner M. Day, received telephone calls Easter afternoon and mail the day after Easter from shut-ins and others telling how deeply they had appreciated being able to view the service as well as to be with the participants in spirit.

In the parish leaflet the following Sunday Mr. Day wrote, "I want to add my own expression of appreciation and admiration for the helpful way in which the representatives of WBZ-TV did their work. Because of the small size of the church it was impossible to be inconspicuous. Because of the pillars in the church it was very difficult to find a location for the cameras and controls which would not interfere with the service of worship. These difficulties were overcome with extraordinary skill, so that one was scarcely conscious of the presence of the cameras. In addition, the men acted throughout with the greatest care and reverence.

"Since Easter not only have many members of the parish expressed appreciation for the broadcast, but many people belonging to other churches who happened to listen in expressed themselves similarly. Particular gratitude was expressed by a number of shut-ins who have not been able to go to church for years."

ST. JOHN'S, Buffalo, is one of the most beautiful churches in the country. Rector Walter P. Plumley announces that the 105th anniversary of the founding of the parish, and the 25th anniversary of the erection of the present church, will be observed this year with special events

ST. MARTIN'S FORUM TO HEAR NEARING

★ The second of four spring forums will be held next Sunday, April 30, at St. Martin's, New York, at four o'clock. The speaker will be Dr. Scott Nearing, economist, who will speak on the economic outlook in the United States. The speaker on May 14 will be Miss Mary van Kleeck, until recently the director of industrial studies of the Russell Sage Foundation. The final meeting of the spring series will be held May 28 when the speaker will be the Rev. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School, who is at present a delegate to a peace conference in Australia. He will speak on the outlook for peace.

BISHOP THOMAS IS RECOVERING

★ Mrs. William M. M. Thomas, wife of the retired Bishop of Southern Brazil, has written the National Council that the Bishop is recovering from his recent heart attack. "After more than two weeks of terrible anxiety, we can say that Bishop Thomas is really recovering from his attack. The doctors are pleased with his marvelous recovery, but warn him that his convalescence will take a long time."

HOTEL ORGAN GOES TO CHURCH

★ An organ which is located in a Portland, Oregon, hotel, often heard played over a local radio station, has been given to St. Paul's Church, Oregon City, according to Rector Hal R. Gross.

NATIONAL PARK HAS NEW CHURCH

★ Expected record-breaking crowds of visitors to the Great Smoky Mountains National Park this summer will see in Trinity Church of Gatlinburg, an architectural contribution worthy of the "Tennessee Gateway" to the park. The foundations have already been constructed and it is expected that the church will be used for services during the approaching tourist season. Among the more than a million and a half visitors to the park are thousands of Episcopalians from every state in the nation and many Canadian provinces and it is to provide these with facilities for worship that the small but enthusiastic congregation and the diocese of Tennessee have undertaken the construction of the church.

MISSION IN HAWAII BECOMES PARISH

★ St. Christopher's, a mission of the diocese of Honolulu, becomes a parish on May 1. This brings the number of parishes in the district to seven. The rector is the Rev. Richard M. Trelease Jr. who is said to have done wonders with the mission during the two years he has been vicar.

CHURCH SCHOOL MEETS ON MONDAY

★ At St. Paul's, Stockbridge, Mass., the Church school meets on Monday afternoon at 3:15. Judging by the attendance the innovation is well liked by both children and parents.

DISPLACED PERSONS PROGRAM

★ Two and a half months remain for reaching the Episcopal Church's goal of resettling 1,200 displaced person units by June 30. Since the blanket assurance was given in September, more than 600 units have been covered by individual sponsors. Over 100 a month have been covered since the new program of pre-selections began on January 1.

Displaced families and individuals are now being assigned to the Episcopal cucta by the overseas staff of Church World Service at the rate of 30 or 40 per week. When they are assigned, their photograph and history is sent to the National Council, and they are started on the involved process of qualifying to come to this country. It is estimated that the time between this first step and arrival here is about three to four months.

The pre-selections contain large numbers of family units, couples and single men. Family units are of all sizes and cultural and occupational backgrounds. More than half of them have children under three years old. Several have one or more aged persons who are their dependents and will come with them. Couples vary in age from 20 to 60. Most of them are eligible for placement in double jobs and have applied to come that way. Single men represent about 20% of the pre-selections. More than half would be suitable as farm hands or unskilled laborers.

Occupations represented most heavily in the pre-selections are farm work, domestic work, engineers and mechanics, and locksmiths. There are some DP's, however, from almost any occupational group. Those with possibilities, who are nevertheless difficult to place, are doctors, chemists, technicians, teachers, artists, lawyers, electricians, radio men and technical factory workers.

There are almost no single women being assigned and very little chance of designating one for new sponsors since there is a backlog of 40 assurances waiting to be matched with single domestics.

RECORDS BROKEN AT EPIPHANY

★ The total attendance at services during Lent and Easter at the Epiphany, Washington, D. C., was 45,103. There were 32 noonday services that averaged 609, with the top attendance going to two non-Episcopal clergymen, the Rev. Ralph W. Sockman and the Rev. Joseph R. Sizoo who both averaged over 1,500. There were 7,148 at the three hour service, with Easter services attended by 2,338.

NEW YORK CHURCHES ARE MERGED

★ St. John's and the Comforter, New York City, are to be merged May 1. Formal legal action is not yet completed but the congregations are to begin worshipping together on that date. The parishes will be known as St. John's and the Rev. Charles H. Graf is rector.

WELLES CONSECRATED FOR WEST MISSOURI

★ Edward R. Welles, formerly the dean of St. Paul's Cathedral, Buffalo, was consecrated bishop of West Missouri on April 19th at Grace and Holy Trinity Cathedral, Kansas City. The Presiding Bishop was the consecrator, with Bishop Spencer, the retired bishop of West Missouri, and Bishop Powell of Maryland the co-consecrators. Bishop Scaife of Buffalo read the epistle, and Bishop Fenner of Kansas the gospel. Attending presbyters were the Rev. Sewall Emerson of Norwalk, Conn., and Dean Sprouse of Kansas City. The candidate was presented by Bishop Ivins of Milwaukee and Bishop Lewis of Nevada. Other bishops to take part in the service were Bishop Jones of West Texas, Bishop Pardue of Pittsburgh, Suffragan Bishop Armstrong of Pennsylvania, Bishop Matthews, retired of New Jersey. Also taking part in the laying on of hands were Bishop Jasinski of the Polish National Catholic Church, and two bishops of the Church of England in Canada, Bishop Luxton of Huron and Bishop Bagnall of Niagara.

Other bishops attending the service and taking part in the laying on of hands were Dagwell of Oregon, Clingman of Kentucky, Gardner of New Jersey, Block of California, Kirchhoffer of Indianapolis, Brinker of Nebraska, Gray of Connecticut, Mallett of Northern Indiana, Mason of Dallas.

The sermon was preached by Bishop Bayne of Olympia.

ATTENDANCE AT ST. MARTIN'S

★ There were over 4,500 persons attending the services on Easter at St. Martin's, New York, with over 1,600 making their communion.

PARISH FEATURES DISCUSSIONS

★ A series of eight meetings, with guest speakers, was launched on April 12th at St. Luke's, Bladensburg, Md., and continue Wednesday evenings through May 31. The speaker on the 12th was the Rev. Charles Martin, headmaster of St. Alban's School, who spoke on education. Other speakers were the Rev. W. Robert Miller, rector at Silver Spring, who spoke April 19 on the conquest of fear; and the Rev. J. L. B. Williams of Alexandria, Va., who was the speaker this week. The Rev. C. Randolph Mengers of Washington speaks on visual presentation of the holy communion on May 3; the Rev. Robert S. Trenbath of Washington on May 10 speaks on education; the Rev. W. F. Creighton of Bethesda, Md., will present missions on May 17th, while the Rev. Frank Wilson, assistant at St. John's, Washington, speaks on the Bible on May 24. The series closes on May 31 when Canon Richard Williams, director of social re-

EDITORIALS

VOLUNTARY EUTHANASIA

THE editors of The Witness spent the better part of a recent meeting discussing voluntary euthanasia. At the conclusion, one of the men was asked to write an editorial on the subject. He submitted it the following week, but here likewise, there was such differences of opinion among the editors that it was decided to present signed editorials offering different points of view. The only thing the editors as a group could agree upon as a result of two lengthy discussions was that it is an important subject.

SHOULD BE LEGALIZED

By WILLIAM K. RUSSELL

Rector of St. Bartholomew's, Brooklyn

THE recent court trial of a Connecticut girl for the mercy killing of her father, a cancer victim, and the trial of a New Hampshire physician, in a similar case, have pointed up the whole question of euthanasia and demand the serious attention of churchmen.

In the ancient pagan world of Greece and Rome, moralists saw nothing wrong in a man taking his own life under certain circumstances. These circumstances so Epictetus taught, were like the commander's trumpet sounding the retreat, which, when he heard, the good soldier would not hesitate to obey. This obedience was regarded as entirely honorable and courageous. It was not an act of disobedience to the divine will, but of submission to it.

The Christian religion, however, has changed this view of death. Although it has at times commanded human beings to sacrifice their lives for their religion or for their fellowmen, it has not permitted them to take their own lives in order to escape from agony. It has taught that the decision as to the time of their own deaths is in the hands of God and that human beings must submit to pain and endure until God in his wisdom puts an end to their agony.

This same theory as to the will of God in relation to human suffering was applied for many years to all degrees of illness and to human efforts to alleviate suffering. Many sincere Christians violently opposed the use of anaesthetics, particularly in cases of child birth, believing that pain was a "natural" accompaniment of surgery and of child-bearing and therefore an expression of the will of God. Christian scruples against the use of anaesthetics have now generally disappeared. The growth of scientific knowledge of the human anatomy has been accompanied by more humanitarian conceptions of the will of God as it relates to human suffering. The observation by physicians and clergymen of cases of extreme suffering has altered the notion that all degrees of suffering have an ennobling effect on the human being. As a result, it is accepted that we should practice mercy in the alleviation of pain. Many physicians and clergymen have gone a step further and have concluded that our conception of mercy should be widened and that in cases of extreme suffering where recovery is impossible and where the patient makes written application for the shortening of his life, a quick and painless death should be substituted for a slow and painful one.

Now Practiced

IN 1947, 1100 New York State physicians signed a petition addressed to the New York state legislature, requesting legalization of voluntary euthanasia. The petition assumed that euthanasia is not a new technique but one that has been practiced for centuries and is now being practiced. Dr. Charles Francis Potter stated that euthanasia is now being practiced " . . . secretly and surreptitiously and often bungingly by desperate relatives and friends who give the boon of release to the sufferers but at the risk of their own lives . . ."

Following an inquiry from the Euthanasia Society of America addressed to New York State physicians, 3272 physicians, 80 per cent of those questioned, replied that they were in favor of legalization of the practice.

The legislation proposed in New York State would provide for the administration of lethal doses of drugs when the patient makes written application and a board of physicians certifies that to the best of its knowledge there is no hope for cure, and when the actual permissive order is entered by the court.

In support of voluntary euthanasia, 386 Protestant and Jewish clergymen in New York state petitioned the legislature for its legalization. They stated their conviction that "the ending of the physical existence of the individual at his request, when afflicted with an incurable disease which causes extreme suffering, is, under proper safeguards, not only medically indicated, but also in accord with the most civilized and humane ethics and the highest concepts and practices of religion."

The conviction of these clergymen was based on the belief that the personality is degraded and disintegrates through the prolongation of existence by the administration of deadening drugs. They concluded that God has endowed humanity with the responsibility to determine human destiny and that this responsibility includes the responsibility of mercy. The petitioning clergymen affirmed their responsibility to uphold the sacredness of human personality, but they denied the worth of "mere existence" or "length of days."

Proponents of such legislation have argued that if it is wrong to shorten life in any circumstances, then it is also wrong to interfere with the natural processes by lengthening life through medical treatment. They state that in considering voluntary euthanasia, the choice is not between life and death but between a long-drawn out agonizing death or a quiet peaceful one.

It is true that the Christian Church has sanctioned existing legislation that permits capital punishment, killing in self-defense, and mass slaughter in war for purposes of political security or territorial aggrandizement.

In considering legislation to permit voluntary euthanasia, it must be assumed that no individual or group can devise a law that will presuppose all eventualities. Human judgment is fallible, and the law would, therefore, be an imperfect measure of control. In practice, it would be subject again to human judgment, inherent in which are errors, abuse and misuse.

These elements of imperfection are present in every sphere of every relationship of man with his fellowmen. It follows that the same imperfections exist in all controls that man has devised to protect, advance or improve the individual in society. The problem before us, then, is not to base our decision on this question on an unrealistic hope for the creation of the perfect law that will enable man to cut off suffering in a perfect way.

The problem is to decide whether we are willing to extend the field of legislation to embrace a practice already in effect, on what we assume is a limited scale, and to broaden the Christian concept of mercy in order to permit its exercise in the case of incurable sufferers.

WARNECKE'S ARTICLE

The article by Dean Frederick J. Warnecke of Newark, which began in the issue of April 20, will be concluded in the issue of May 4th, rather than this week as previously announced.

SHOULD NOT BE LEGALIZED

By KENNETH R. FORBES

Clergyman of Philadelphia

TWO recent murder trials in New England, given wide and sensational publicity in the daily press, have drawn popular attention again to the controversial subject of euthanasia in general and so-called "mercy-killing" in particular. The resulting arguments, pro and con, are being carried on in smoking-cars and hotel lobbies, in clubs and in family groups, in "letters-to-the-editor" and are beginning to appear in popular magazines.

On the whole, one may believe that such arguments are wholesome; that it is well to get the subject out of the hush-hush stage and into the open where the issues involved may be frankly faced. The Euthanasia Society probably welcomes this development and convinced opponents of euthanasia ought also to take the opportunity to make their views more widely and clearly known.

As to just what euthanasia means, we may take as authoritative the definition of the "Encyclopedia Of Ethics" which says: "Euthanasia may be defined as the doctrine or theory that in certain circumstances, when, owing to disease, senility or the like, a person's life has permanently ceased to be either agreeable or useful, the sufferer should be painlessly killed, either by himself or another." From this definition it is clear that euthanasia has a much more far-reaching application than so-called mercy killings. If a person may be legally or rightfully killed when his life has ceased to be "useful," the path is obviously open to the sort of procedures Nazi Germany indulged in years before the wholesale murdering of Jews and prisoners began. The records show that "all those unable to work and considered non-rehabilitable" were marked for death and that 275,000 Germans of this class were actually killed.

The America Euthanasia Society of course advocates no such drastic outrage as this. Its proposal for legislation provides that the patient himself shall first ask to have his suffering terminated by death. His physician must then certify that he suffers from a fatal illness. The local court then appoints two other physicians and one lay person to visit the patient and consider the case, also giving him the opportunity to withdraw his original request. If the patient persists in his desire, the board of three may then appoint someone to kill the patient. Such is at present the most definite and carefully considered proposal for legalizing mercy-killing. As the Rev. Willard L. Sperry, dean of the Harvard Divinity School, very cogently points out in a recent magazine article, these proposals of the Euthanasia Society contain two exceedingly weak spots: 1st—placing the primary responsibility on the patient is putting the burden of this grave decision on the shifting moods of a desperately ill person who may feel sure on Monday that he wishes to be put out of his misery and even feel so again when the court's board visits him, but, a week hence—if he is permitted to survive that long—be of an entirely different opinion. 2nd—shocking abuses of such a law will be almost certain here and there, from time to time, namely the persuasive pressure of relatives, to whom the patient is an unwelcome burden and expense, upon the sick and highly suggestible mind of the sufferer.

Setting Clock Back

MERCY-KILLING is usually advocated by individuals and societies who pride themselves on being liberal and socially progressive and they present euthanasia as the next logical step in the relieving of human suffering. It is, they maintain, in the same class, morally and physically, as the use of anaesthetics, which were originally opposed by conservatives of that day as interfering with the course of nature and preventing what might benefit the soul of the sufferer. As a matter of historic fact, however, the legally authorized practice of mercy killing would set the clock of wholesome progress back and not forward. It was in pre-Christian ages among civilized peoples that euthanasia was both advocated and practiced. In the classic period of Greece, as well as in the beginning of the Roman Empire's degeneration, something of this sort was pretty much taken for granted. And today, in backward areas of the world, where organized social life is still simple and elementary, euthanasia is a part of the scheme of things. No, mercy killing and other forms of euthanasia are no sign of social progress, but rather of social regression. It may be and is, by some considered desirable, but can by no means be thought of as new, either in principle or practice.

It was only after Christ came into the world and his fellowship had gained strength and influence that the western world at large realized that the Hebrew-Christian ethic was something radically new. Child-murder and suicide had long been practiced and were considered moral and quite respectable in society. Now the Christian Church, which was gaining control of civilized life in Europe, condemned both practices unconditionally and enforced heavy penalties for ignoring the ban. The sacredness of human personality, based on our Lord's life and teachings, with the background of Hebrew ethics, became one of the basic principles on which the Christian Church began the long task of building European civilization. The rightness of this as a moral principle and practice was never seriously challenged—through all the vicissitudes, revolutions and ferments of Europe's common-life—until the coming of Hitler and Nazi Germany. All war is, of course, a denial of the principle of the sacredness of human personality and after every great war attempts to break down this principle of life in one form or another increase notably in strength and virulence, so conditioned has the general public become to indiscriminate slaughter and to the low rating of human life as such, which military thinking involves. So it should surprise no one that the doctrine of euthanasia becomes increasingly a challenge today to the general public.

Soul Growth

EVERY Christian disciple who has been soundly instructed in the principles of Christian faith and life and who takes his religion seriously, believes in the soul as the enduring basis of human personality. Man's sojourn in this world, from birth to death, has for its primary purpose the steady growth of the soul by God's grace. Prayer, meditation and the sacraments of the Christian family, together with the manifold experiences of the individual with his fellows in the world—experiences happy, indifferent, sad and painful alike may contribute to that growth. The realization that this soul-growth is life's primary purpose has been strikingly re-enforced in our generation by the discoveries and teachings of modern psychology. This science avoids the religious terminology and talks of the "unconscious" rather than the soul as the enduring and basic element of the human personality, but it is the same reality that it deals with. Probably never in the history of human thought has it been made clear to so many that the soul—or "unconscious"—has a mysterious, profound life of its own, largely independent of man's conscious awareness, although continuously affected by physical conditions, conscious thoughts and the actions and thinking of others. No one—be he psychiatrist or layman—who has discovered, in his own experience or in the recorded experiences of others, the reality and extraordinary range of the life of the "unconscious," can possibly doubt that the soul has an independent existence and experience of its own, not unaffected, of course, by physical sensation, but by no means completely controlled by it. To claim, then, as advocates of voluntary euthanasia do, that severe, long-continued pain or the deadening effect of drugs results necessarily in a deterioration of personality is an assumption not warranted by the facts.

Bearing this truth of religion and science clearly in mind, it becomes difficult or impossible to justify the practice of euthanasia in any of its forms. Its advocates concern themselves solely with the fact of the conscious suffering of the body or the value of that body to the state or community. What may be going on in the mysterious level of the soul they fail to concern themselves with. Even under the heaviest opiates, the soul is living and growing. If the Christian religion has any validity, the soul can still be reached by the prayers of the faithful and by the grace of God in many forms. What possible right, then, have we arbitrariily to cut that soul off from its process of growth in this world? What do we know of the possibilities of that soul in the last weeks or days or hours of its journey through this world? Obviously nothing at all. God alone knows. We do "interfere with the course of nature" in man's life constantly and increasingly as science and experience enlarge our knowledge—by medicine and surgery, by diet and devoted nursing, and everyone approves—Christian and pagan alike. But all such "interference" is for the prolonging of life and the betterment of its physical and mental conditions, that the soul may have yet longer to grow and better opportunities for growing. But the interference of euthanasia is the reverse of this. It confines its attention to the physical body of man and, by implication, denies the reality of the soul and the possibility of its development, alike in prosperity and adversity, in joy and in pain until, in God's own time and way, it shall be severed from the body and continue its experience in "that body that shall be." A vivid and realistic Christian faith must say "no" to euthanasia, even as the ancient Hippocratic Oath, centuries before the coming of Christ, caused physicians, then and now, to say "I will give no deadly medicine to anyone if asked, nor suggest any such counsel."

Yankee Philosophy

YOU see my kind of loyalty was loyalty to one's country, not to its institutions or its office-holders. The country is the real thing, the substantial thing, the eternal thing; it is a thing to watch over, and care for, and be loyal to; institutions are extraneous, they are its mere clothing, and clothing can wear out, become ragged, cease to be comfortable, cease to protect the body from winter, disease and death. To be loyal to rags, to shout for rags, to worship rags, to die for rags —that is a loyalty of unreason; it is pure animal; it belongs to monarchy; let monarchy keep it. I was from Connecticut, whose Constitution declares "that all political power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority and instituted for their benefit; and that they have at all times an undeniable and indefeasible right to alter their form of government in such a manner as they may think expedient."

Under that gospel, the citizen who thinks he sees that the commonwealth's political clothes are worn out, and yet holds his peace and does not agitate for a new suit, is disloyal; he is a traitor. That he may be the only one who thinks he sees this decay, does not excuse him; it is his duty to agitate anyway, and it is the duty of the others to vote him down if they do not see the matter as he does.

PRAYER FOR TODAY

O GOD, who hast revealed thyself in the glory of the heavens and in the burning bush, in the still small voice and in the dread power of the Hydrogen and Atom Bombs; Make us aware of Thy presence as Thou comest in judgment in the events of our time. Grant us to stand in awe and sin not. Let us so use the fearful powers Thou hast permitted us to know that we may work not to man's destruction but to his fulfillment. Lift us above the suspicions and fears of our day that we may bring peace, righteous and just, among all men. And this we ask, anxious, yet quiet in Thee; perplexed, yet certain in Thee; weak, yet strong in Thee; through Him who is the savior of us all, Jesus Christ our Lord.

Getting to Church on Time

By WILLIAM P. BARNDS
Rector of St. Matthew's, Lincoln, Nebraska

THERE is an old saying that we get out of a thing what we put into it. Certainly the attitude we have about anything makes a difference about what we get out of it. This is true in reference to going to church. If we are prepared and in the proper frame of mind, we will get more than if our attitude is poor.

A very good habit to develop to help in our attitude is that of getting to church on time. That does not mean getting there just the moment the service begins, but early enough to get composed, to say a prayer, and to bring our thoughts to the service about to begin.

Some people get into the habit of always coming late. They are not only late to church, but to other appointments. Sometimes we cannot help being late to things. Unforseen matters come up, accidents happen, plans go awry. But the person who is always late ought to rearrange his plans so that he can be more prompt. It is often just a matter of management.

Getting to church five minutes before the service at least will do much towards putting us into the right physical and spiritual condition conducive to good worship. Getting there five minutes late will probably find us hurried, harried, and flustered, and it will be just that much harder for us to worship or for the service to help us.

Of course, "better late than never" is true, but try to be on time.

Perpetual Presence

By PHILIP H. STEINMETZ
Rector of the Ashfield Parishes

A GLOWING sense of God's constant presence is the best protection against such pious mistakes as "vain repetitions" even though what is repeated is the Lord's Prayer, and formal prayers even though couched in glorious English and offered by vested priests in fine churches.

That sense should strike us the instant we waken in the morning and bring from us a word of grateful greeting to God before we wonder about the weather. It should be in the background of our conversation at breakfast and during the morning's work, breaking out from time to time in acts of unselfish love done in his sight and for his satisfaction.

At noon a moment of recollection should bring us a glimpse of the man on a cross loving us enough to die for us and should stir us to plan how we can show some reflection of that love in the hours ahead.

At night as we realize what we have done that brought a cloud between us and our ever-loving, ever-present Father and check over the items we did not get done because we were too busy about ourselves, we may well say how sorry we are and turn toward the rest of the night and the new chances of tomorrow with a sure sense of God's forgiveness, understanding and promise of fresh strength.

Is that a fair summary of what goes on in you each day? Yes? Then you are living a life of prayer. Thank God! And remember that even when you forget him, God is always present loving you and looking for openings through which he can pour into you.

Poor Relations

By CORWIN C. ROACH
Dean of Bexley Hall

THERE is a boasting about relatives which is natural and normal. The small boy who indulges in a bit of hero-worship for his big brother or father is touching and appealing in his ingenuous pride. He looks forward to the time when he will grow up and be like his hero. The trouble with some people is that they do not grow up. They continue to boast of their relations and rely upon their relatives instead of making the most of their own opportunities. The same thing will happen to them as happened to the ancient Hebrews. We are told in the opening chapter of Exodus that a king came to the throne who did not know Joseph and all Joseph's relatives had to go to work. That has happened to many a boss's son or nephew in the centuries since. The gap between boast and bust is sometimes very narrow.

Dubious as such boasting is when it concerns human relations it is much worse when we boast of our relations to God. That is what St. Paul is condemning in his epistle to the Romans, "Boast of your relation" (2:17). It is what Jesus condemned in the Sermon on the Mount, relying on the Lord but not doing his will (Mt. 7:21). St. Paul goes on to say that such boasting in God really blasphemes his name. Where do we stand as Christians? Do we dishonor the name we bear? Do we show by our complacency and indifference what poor relations we really are to God?

FRIENDLY SOCIETY GIRLS ARE PEN PALS

★ Girls of the Girls' Friendly Society have been making international and interracial understanding real to them by writing to girls in other countries. Mail has gone between over 3,000 different correspondents, to ten countries. Some friendships have grown to include whole families, and at least one romance resulted when the navy brother of an English girl visited the American pen pal's home during the war.

Now with so many Japanese young people anxious to try out their English, the GFS is swamped with letters from Japan from boys and girls, mostly between the ages of 16 and 22. "The plum blossoms are in full bloom. The lark's on the wing. Day is getting longer." "I like the United States so well that my classmates call me a fan of America, but they exceedingly like U. S. A. too." "I want to correspond with young American." These are excerpts from recent letters from young people in Japan, asking for pen pals.

GREEK CHURCH HAS SCHOOL

★ According to a statement from the department of interchurch aid and service to refugees of the World Council of Churches, a theological students' hostel has been opened in Athens by the Orthodox Church of Greece on the grounds of an old monastery. It will be operated in conjunction with "Apostoliki Kiakonia," the Church's home missions college, the only school of its kind for Orthodox students in the Balkans. The Greek Church is aided in this and many of its other projects by the Presiding Bishop's fund for world relief item in the 1950 budget.

The college trains priests and lay theologians, offering courses designed to supplement theology with practical work in counseling, in discussion techniques, in organizing Sunday schools and other youth work. Classes are also offered in Eng-

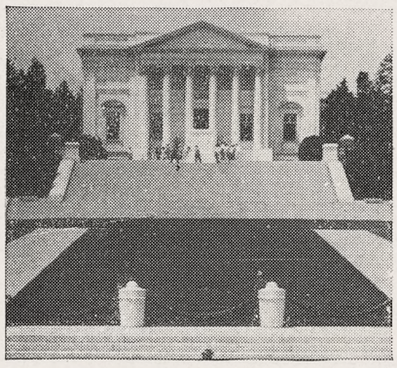
Interchurch aid first provided a hundred beds and mattresses for the hostel, which was acquired by the Greek Church in 1948. Before it could be used, however, the building was requisitioned by the government, and it served as a military hospital during the Greek civil war.

Undaunted by this temporary set-back, the Greek Church converted a small wing of an old monastery building to serve as a temporary hostel, and took in a number of students for special training in home missions work. Just before Christmas, 1949, the requisitioned building was returned to the Church, and fifty students moved into the new hostel.



The hostel, which will provide food and shelter for students attending the home missions college, is a fine, modern, three-story building which has now been partly redecorated. Another fifty students are expected to be accommodated shortly.

C. C. BURLINGHAM
Layman of New York

The election of a suffragan bishop of New York at the diocesan convention next month has raised once more the question of the sort of man the diocese needs.

One qualification would seem indispensable—no matter what his type of churchmanship may be, he should be a fair man who appreciates the comprehensiveness of our Church and will not favor high, low or broad, nor discriminate for or against Evangelicals or Anglo-Catholics. This of course is far more important for a bishop than for a suffragan; but in New York we have been tending toward choosing our bishops from suffragans, and we may do so again.

In this diocese we have a huge population in Manhattan and the Bronx. We need a man who understands the problems of social life and work, and with our large rural area it would be of great advantage if one of the bishops at least had had experience in a country parish.

What we need most is unity. Bishop Gilbert has done all within his power to break down the wall of partition that separates the Evangelicals from the Anglo-Catholics, but during the last 30 years that wall has stood strong and appears to have been built higher and higher. The voting in the diocesan convention shows this, with solid blocs of unyielding voters.

Three hundred years ago John Selden, a great churchman and the greatest lawyer of his time, put the case thus: "They talk (blasphemously enough) that the Holy Ghost presides over their general councils, when the truth is the odd Man is still the Holy Ghost."

T. D. BULL
Layman of Kansas City

One of the features of The Witness I most enjoy is your presentation of news of other churches and churches overseas. It seems to be obvious if we are to bring order out of the chaos which now exists in the world that we must know what others are doing, both in the churches and elsewhere. I like the comprehensiveness of The Witness and its forward look.

MISS RUTH SERVICE
Churchwoman of New York

In view of the overwhelming victory of the forces supporting the Melishes in the parish election (Witness, Apr. 20) it seems to me that the Christian thing for the Bishop of Long Island to do is to admit, in all humility, that he was wrong in starting the court action. It is obvious that the people of the parish want their present ministers; it is also clear that they are going to do everything in their power to retain them—a right which I think they have.

MRS. R. N. WILLCOX
Churchwoman of Dunkirk, N. Y.

Are we not to have more of Mr. Entwhistle and his adventures. They have been delightful and I am sure many agree with me that they should be continued. Could Mr. Barrett be persuaded to tell us something of his and Isabel's experiences with the "soul affinity" that seems to crop up in every parish?

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

World Revolution in the Cause of Peace. By Lionel Curtis. Macmillan. $2.50.

Here is a timely and urgent appeal for the establishment of an effective international government as the only means of securing permanant world peace. Mr. Curtis urges that the procedure of the thirteen original colonies of the United States, the sovereignty of each of which was sacrificed to secure a Union, be followed by the nations of the West. The book is an interesting contribution to the cause of "Western Union."

—POWELL M. DAWLEY

Science and Cosmic Purpose. By Kelvin Van Nuys. Harper. $3.00.

The author shows that science cannot prove the existence of cosmic purpose, but can also not disprove it, since science investigates the processes of nature and since "values are not rooted in nature" (p. 101). Only faith can give the key to the problem. He believes that a dynamic idea of good, instead a static one, enables us to understand the existence of evil. Purpose is prior to existence, as Plato taught. In order to find out whether science is compatible with the idea of cosmic purpose, the author studies and examines some modern scientific and philosophic views. He discusses the ideas and theories of Alexander, Whitehead, Bergson, Dewey, and many other thinkers; his own position seems nearest to Whitehead, but he has probably not yet reached the final state of his development: he is still in a "dynamic" movement of thought.

—RICHARD KRONER

Old Age and the Life to Come. By Canon Peter Green. Morehouse. 75c.

Canon Green is one of the most practical teachers and preachers in the Anglican communion. This little book contains a message that deserves to be widely spread. So much of our present day preaching is addressed to youth and middle age, that we sometimes forget the older people in the congregation.

Gods and Heroes. By Gustav Schwab. Pantheon, $6.00.

This famous old book, on which generations of European children have been nurtured and made familiar with the gods and heroes, the myths and epics of ancient Greece, is now available in English. This edition has two magnificent advantages: There is an introduction by Werner Jaeger of Harvard, one of the leading Greek scholars of the world (author of "Paideia," for example); and it is illustrated with 100 Greek vase paintings —reproduced in reddish brown, very appropriately. All in all, it is a book of delight for young and old, for everyone in fact who loves Greek myths.

This Nation Under God. By Elbert D. Thomas. Harper. $2.75.

Senator Thomas of Utah belongs to the "God Is My Partner" school, and his book is an argument for the identification of prosperity, democracy, and Christianity. There is a wonderful chart at the end of the book showing our rise in population from 1730 to 1950, accompanied, more or less, by a rise in per capita income from $216 in 1799 to $1149 in 1949. Unfortunately the argument is vulnerable, although unquestionably not only America, but individual Americans, are far more prosperous than people in most other countries. (Sweden is an exception—it has steadily pursued "the middle way," and has no extremes of wealth or poverty, has no colonial possessions, and it stayed out of the war). For one thing, there is no mention of the new 60 cent dollar, or of the vastly increased cost of living. The church had better think twice before rushing into complete alliance with capitalistic "democracy."

Council Makes Cuts in Budget Of General Convention

The One World in Christ Campaign Failed To Raise Sufficient to Meet Needs

By ANDREW M. VAN DYKE

★ Presiding Bishop Sherrill announced to the meeting of the National Council on Wednesday, April 26th, that "It is still too early for us to be able to make a detailed financial report on our campaign of one world in Christ. Many dioceses have made only preliminary statements, and statements from parishes are incomplete. At the present time no estimate should be made because it is so incomplete that it would be misleading." He went on to show that the expectations from dioceses totaled over $1,147,000 more to be given this year than in 1949, though this includes what was previously given separately through the fund for world relief. Bishop Sherrill added: "There is no reason for discouragement or despair, because with what is in sight we can go ahead on most of the projects. As a safety factor, certain items will be withheld temporarily."

Budget Cut

Reports from the financial department revealed that what dioceses expected to give was some $717,000 less than their quotas. Over half of this deficit derives in the second province, even though these same dioceses expect to give $225,000 more this year than last. The fifth province accounts for about a seventh of the total shortage, and the third for about a tenth.

Among the items to be temporarily withheld is one of $270,000 for domestic missions. Most of this will be done by not making salary increases retroactive to January 1st as planned, but to give the additional amounts from July 1st to the workers in these areas. In addition, the amount needed to assist dioceses in expanded population areas, particularly on the Pacific coast, was cut. Bishop Block of California made an eloquent plea that this latter not be done, but after Bishop Sherrill posed the question to him of what else should be cut in preference, there was no answer. Of $150,000 in the proposed budget for this item only $25,000 was retained, but in addition the Council voted $50,000 from the Reconstruction and Advance Fund for this work.

The overseas department will receive $151,000 less than contemplated, and this will be accomplished by not filling certain positions for which there is both need, and suitable personnel available, as well as delay in building in Liberia and Brazil. World relief will be cut from a half million to $400,000, but it is said that we will still be doing, proportionately, as much and perhaps more than other denominations. Christian education will have to leave out the hiring of persons to fill several executive positions because of a withholding of approximately $75,000. The department of promotion will also be without some assistants due to slashing their operating budget about $55,000. The Church Army is to receive $5,000 which is half of what was in the budget. Together with a number of other amounts, the total that is to be spent is about $4,967,000 as over against the $5,634,000 that General Convention voted.

The final statement of expenditures and income for 1949 was released. It ran to $3,688,000, or close to $200,000 more than last year. The mathematical quotas for 1951 were also presented to the Council. In total they are almost the same as formerly except that there have been certain reductions for dioceses in the 1st, 2nd and 3rd provinces, and corresponding increases in the others.

Additional and final payments on legacies and gifts since the February meeting of the Council amounted to $209,250, the largest new fund to be established being one of $150,000 coming from the estates of Annie G. and Mary L. Saunders of Lawrence, Mass.

More Great Scenes

Bishop Hobson injected a new note on an old theme as he reported for the department of promotion. "Great Scenes from Great Plays" is going to be revived on quite a new, and self-liquidating, basis. As in show business, or in ancient theology, there is an "angel." An anonymous person has guaranteed to stand all the expenses of the initial recordings for another twenty-six weeks of this radio program, and has also agreed to protect National Council against any deficit in the whole

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

DEAN SHIRES ELECTED SUFFRAGAN

★ Dean Henry H. Shires of the Church Divinity School of the Pacific, Berkeley, Calif., was unanimously elected suffragan bishop of California, on the first ballot at an adjourned session of the 100th annual convention of the diocese, meeting at Grace Cathedral, San Francisco, April 19, 1950. Dean Shires was nominated by the Rev. John Compton Leffler, rector of St. Luke's Church, San Francisco, president of the standing committee. Seconding speeches were made by Mr. Albert C. Agnew, chancellor of the diocese, Mrs. Norman B. Livermore of Ross, member of the standing committee, and by the Rev. Henry M. Shires, rector of Christ Church, Alameda. There were no other nominations.

MUNDT-FERGUSON BILLS ARE OPPOSED

★ A group of religious, professional and labor leaders in New Jersey issued a statement April 19 opposing the Mundt-Ferguson "anti-subversive" bills. They declare that "these bills do not insure greater security for these United States but rather undermine those basic freedoms on which our true strength as a democracy rests." The bills are characterized as "instruments of thought control" and the opinion expressed that if passed "the right of the American people to legislate its will democratically and peacefully can be destroyed."

Among the nineteen to issue the statement were Bishop Ludlow of Newark and Canon Robert Smith of the diocese of New Jersey.

MRS. GILBERT T. CASWELL is president of the Auxiliary at St. James Cathedral, Fresno, California

PRAYER BOOK STUDIES

★ The liturgical commission is beginning the publication of various Prayer Book studies, looking toward future revision. The first book, published by the Church Pension Fund, is now on the press and includes studies on baptism and confirmation and on the liturgical epistles and gospels. The second study will be on ministration to the sick.

The commission also states, following a meeting in Washington, April 13-14, that intinction, when performed by the communicant, does not violate the rubrical law of the Church, but that, until the present rubrics are revised by two sessions of General Convention, intinction performed by the priest is contrary to the rubrics.

ST. LUKE'S HOSPITAL ANNIVERSARY

★ The 100th anniversary of the founding of St. Luke's Hospital, New York, was commemorated last Sunday, April 30th, with a service at the Cathedral of St. John the Divine. The speakers were Bishop Gilbert and Dr. Benjamin P. Watson, the president of the New York Academy of Medicine.

SHUN NEUTRALITY URGES HINES

★ Bishop John E. Hines, coadjutor of Texas, told the convention of Georgia, meeting April 21 at Augusta, that the Church must "eschew neutrality in the battle for social righteousness."

"We are standing in the midst of one of the great transitions which periodically come to pass, revolutionary in impact and lasting in effect. The Church cannot stop this revolution, once it is under way, for revolutions do not consult pious men.

"But the Church can do something for a world in revolution by way of saying, 'On the face of the clock of human destiny, it is later than you think.'

"How can church people meet with the revolution of their day? One, by the re-discovery of worship, by which we mean a decisive experience with God who made the world. Two, the Church must eschew neutrality in the battle for social righteousness and stand with Christ on the frontiers of the world's need."

DEGRADING LITERATURE HIT BY AUXILIARY

★ Delegates to the meeting of the Auxiliary of North Carolina, meeting April 24 at High Point, instructed its legislative committee to fight "degrading literature on the newsstands."

GIVING WOMEN A VOICE

★ A commission of General Convention with the rather cumbersome title of "To Consider the Problem of Giving the Women of the Church a Voice in the Legislation of General Convention," held its initial meeting in New York, April 12, under the chairmanship of Bishop Peabody of Central New York. A plan for study and research was outlined and it is hoped that the report can be completed before the summer of 1951.

GFS HAS POLICY ON RACE

★ The Girls Friendly Society has released a statement on racial policy which declares that it stands for full participation of all members in all activities, such as camps, conferences, holiday houses, meetings, with no restrictions based on race or creed. The directors do state however that if a parish wishes a branch of one racial group, on the basis of segregation, that privilege shall be granted.

AN UNUSUAL SORT OF INVITATION

★ The attendance at the three hour service on Good Friday has been so great in recent years at Trinity Cathedral, Pittsburgh, that Bishop Pardue sent a letter to each family in the diocese urging them to attend the service in their home parishes, with only those who were downtown attending the cathedral service. In spite of this the attendance this year was a record high—7862 were there for at least part of the service, with several hundred others trying to get in. Bishop Pardue has been the preacher in recent years but attributes the attendance to the efforts over a long period of Dean N. R. High-Moor.

JORDAN ADDRESSES FLORIDA MEN

★ Robert D. Jordan, director of promotion of the National Council, was the speaker at a dinner for laymen in Tampa, April 18. There were 178 present, representing nineteen of the thirty congregations in the Lakeland, Bradenton and Tampa areas. Mr. Jordan spoke on the necessity for the Church to present her claims through every known communication and advertising system.

A. DIXON ROLLIT RECTOR AT WILKINSBURG

Although the Rev. A. Dixon Rollit is no stranger to the Pittsburgh diocese it is in a new relationship that he is now greeted. He is the new rector of St. Stephens, Wilkinsburg. Mr. Rollit was born in Ottawa, Ontario, on June 4, 1912, and is the youngest son of the late Rev. Charles Gore Rollit. He is a grandson of the late Canon Charles Gore Dixon Rollit and a great grandson of Archdeacon

A. DIXON ROLLIT

Charles Rollit sometime of St. Paul, Minnesota. Thus, he comes from a distinguished Church family and one which bears some hundred names in the realm of Episcopal Church history. Members of his family have served the Church of England and Canada and the American Episcopal Church for over 105 continuous years.

Mr. Rollit graduated from Bishop's College, Lennoxville, Quebec, and attended courses in Magill University, Montreal. He was ordained deacon in 1935 and priest in 1936 by Bishop John Craig Farthing of Montreal. He first served as an assistant to Archdeacon Almond of Montreal at Trinity Memorial Cathedral and later was appointed to a missionary charge, and was priest in charge at Rouyn, Quebec, where he spent over three years. During this time he did missionary work in the mining fields of northern Quebec; a work which led to the opening of several new missions.

At the outbreak of war, Mr. Rollit was too young to be accepted as a chaplain so he volunteered for combat service. In 1940 he returned to the active ministry as chaplain to the First Battn. Victoria Rifles of Canada, and he served overseas with the 2nd Canadian Division Aids Reconnaissance and was with the 2nd Division of the Canadian Army at Normandy in June, 1944. While serving with the army he was injured in action on the western front in October of that year. After his discharge in 1945 he attended a post-graduate course at the General Seminary, New York, acting as Assistant at St. Thomas in New York.

Mr. Rollit first came to Pittsburgh in 1946 as an assistant to the present Bishop of Western New York, Lauriston L. Scaife, then rector of Calvary Church. In the diocese he has served as a member of the diocesan youth commission and chaplain of the Harry E. Sheldon Calvary camp, and last year was director and chaplain and this year is director of the diocesan Youth Summer Conference.

Mr. Rollit is married to the former Roona Donzella McKinnon, a graduate of McGill University, and 3 children are a result of this marriage, Adrianne Dorothy 11, Charles Ivan 10, and Julia Margaret 1.

Mr. Rollit was instituted as Rector of St. Stephens Church, Wilkinsburg, earlier this year. Bishop Scaife came from Buffalo to attend the service and to preach.

St. Stephen's is one of the strongest parishes in the diocese, with a communicant strength of over a thousand.

procedure. Several hundred parishes, it was said, have indicated willingness to pay for transcriptions which could be broadcast over local stations. The department feels that there are probably four hundred churches which would buy transcriptions for between $10 and $25 apiece over the whole period, and get them on the radio in their vicinities with their own commercials. In this way, the project will pay for itself. Bishop Hobson pointed out that "Great Scenes from Great Plays" had the largest audience of any so-called religious program, numbering about six million, and that this is a method for getting in contact with unchurched people.

BISHOP HOBSON
Announces New Radio Series

The department of Christian social relations reported that over 800 displaced persons had been provided for by our Church people, and it urged that by June the quota of 1200 be accepted. The suggestion was also approved that the department associate itself with other Churches in carrying out the responsibilities which will come through new legislation in this field.

The division of health and welfare services reported that this newest of divisions was now organized. The Episcopal Service for Youth and this division have been studying ways of integrating their efforts. For some years the former organization has been receiving the bulk of its financial support from the Council, though not a part of the Council. The Council adopted a resolution which continued conversations which may eventually result in the Service for Youth becoming a unit of the official division of health and welfare services.

Bishop Binsted of the Philippines spoke at some length on conditions in that district. He stated that reconstruction in the outlying provinces was now almost complete. Purposely the job in Manila had been left to the last. The site which will accommodate St. Luke's Hospital, the new cathedral, schools and theological seminary is ready. At present the buildings only house the seminary. Hopes are high that in the future this district, with Filipino leadership, will become autonomous, like the Church in Brazil and China.

The department of Christian education told of the resignation of Miss Frances Bailey from the editorial board. It also gave the final figure on the 1949 (not a typographical error) Lenten mite box offering of $509,468. The emphasis for the 1951 venture will be the rural work of the Church.

The armed forces division received the resignation of Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania as chairman, and in his place has selected Bishop Louttit, coadjutor of Southern Florida.

Bishop Bentley told the Council of a radio message informing him of the installation of Bishops Chen and Mao in China, and that the consecration of Bishop Kimber Den had taken place. The Council enthusiastically passed a motion of appreciation and good will to these brethren in China in their new duties.

WASHINGTON ORGANIST WINS PRIZE

★ Ronald K. Arnatt, organist and choirmaster at the Ascension and St. Agnes, Washington, D. C., is the winner of the third annual award for the best anthem in the 1950 competition of the Church of the Ascension, New York. The subject of the anthem this year was the Beatitudes and it will receive its first performance at the Ascension the evening of May 18.

SHANGHAI DIOCESE SHOWS GROWTH

The diocese of Shanghai, or Kiangsu, had 628 adult baptisms and 525 infant baptisms in 1949, and 579 confirmations. The diocese reports 16,442 members, of whom 8,371 are communicants. In addition to these, 2,869 are reported as unknown, i.e., not found since the war. About 3,700 "not-yet Christians" are under instruction. The staff includes forty-one Chinese clergy. Among the larger churches in Shanghai are: Church of Our Saviour, 1,725 members; St. Peter's and two chapels, 1,672; St. Paul's and two chapels, 2,025; All Saints, 811. Four others each have more than 600 members. In each case, communicants number something more than half the total membership.

St. Luke's and St. Elizabeth's Hospital, Shanghai, and St. Andrew's, Wusih, had more than 9,000 in-patients during the war, and treated more than 135,000 in the dispensaries.

St. John's University had 1,480 students, plus 571 in the middle school and 180 in the primary school. Other middle or secondary schools included St. Mary's, Shanghai, 354, Soochow Academy, 502, Mahan and St. Faith's in Yangchow, 301.

NEW DIRECTOR AT ROANRIDGE

★ Ven. Norman L. Foote, archdeacon of Montana, has been appointed director of the town and country Church institute, training center at Roanridge, Parkville, Mo. He is to take office August 1st.

AUXILIARY MAKES A TOUR

★ The national executive board of the Auxiliary, meeting April 21-24 at Seabury House, began with a tour of the Church Missions House to find out how it ticked. About half of them were in the building for the first time. Then they went to Windham House, hostel for students, had lunch and met some of the girls that they had previously voted scholarships.

At Greenwich they listened to the various reports on home missions, Negro work, town and country, college work. There were also reports on the place and work of women in the Church, including one by Mrs. Theodore Wedel on the Geneva meeting (Witness, April 13).

Appropriations were voted for about thirty scholarships; for aid to Japan; help for women missionaries in the U. S. who need cars to get around their rural fields; and several grants for the repair of buildings.

Money was also voted to complete a new building at the training center at Roanridge, Mo.; also a grant to the Bishop of Mexico to help in theological education.

The Board also voted a gift to the Ida Scudder Jubilee Fund for the Christian Medical College in Vellore, India, and increased the annual appropriation to the general budget of the interdenominational Home Missions Council.

PEACE CONFERENCE IN CHICAGO

★ A considerable number of Episcopalians are among those sponsoring a conference for peace which meets in Chicago, May 29-30. The bishops listed by the Committee for Peaceful Alternatives are Bishop Parsons, retired bishop of California; Bishop Dagwell of Oregon; Bishop Walter Mitchell, retired bishop of Arizona; Bishop Moulton, retired bishop of Utah. Others are the Rev. Roscoe T. Foust, rector of the Ascension, New York, and editor of The Witness; Dean John Day of Topeka; Dean Paul Roberts of Denver and the Rev. Philip H. Steinmetz, rector of the Ashfield parishes, Mass. The purpose of the conference is based on the affirmation that peace is possible and that alternatives must be found to the cold war.

CHILD CARE CENTER RUN BY PARISH

★ St. Mark's Day Care Center in San Antonio, Texas, is a community project sponsored by St. Mark's Church. It is a nonprofit, self supporting service for the pre-school age children of employed parents. Because it was found to meet a very real need it is now sponsored by the church on a permanent basis. State laws governing child care outside the home set strict standards concerning minimum number of qualifications of personnel, fire and sanitation regulations, building and equipment requirements. The school is governed by a parish advisory board with the rector, the Rev. Harold Gosnell, as chairman. The staff consists of a director, two trained teachers, two registered nurses, two assistant teachers, a maid and a janitor. The hours are from 6:30 a. m. to 6 p. m. six days a week. The daily routine includes naps and lunches. The maximum enrollment is sixty children between the ages of three and six. Parents pay a five dollar registration fee and thirty dollars a month for this care. There is always a waiting list.

In addition to physical needs the children receive standard pre-school (nursery and kindergarten) training, religious education not only in daily worship but in classes, dancing and other activities. They attend good children's movies and take field trips to points of educational interest. It is the aim of the school to provide as many rich and interesting experiences as possible for these children to whom normal family life is denied.

CHILDREN are dressed to represent those from foreign lands at this service at the Good Shepherd, Jacksonville, Florida, at which their offering for Lent was presented

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

CHARLES TAFT HITS FLYNN BOOK

★ Charles P. Taft, Episcopalian and former president of the Federal Council of Churches, speaking April 21 at the Yale Divinity School, charged that John T. Flynn's book, "The Road Ahead," is a part of an "irresponsible" campaign against the Council.

He also castigated "some fundamentalist groups" for what he called "their unbiblical and unethical tactics, particularly in reference to their attacks on the Federal Council of Churches." Mr. Taft said that Mr. Flynn in his book had depended largely on information given him by the Rev. Carl McIntire of Collingswood, N. J., head of the fundamentalist American Council of Christian Churches, which has consistently opposed the Federal Council.

The former Federal Council head urged churches on all levels to hold conferences on Christianity and economic life patterned after the recent National Study Conference on the Church and Economic life held in Detroit. He stressed that such conferences to be effective must have in addition to specialists in economics, a balanced representation from business, labor, agriculture, the Church, and the professions.

WALLACE PRESENTS PROGRAM

★ Henry A. Wallace, Episcopalian, presented a program for the 1950 Congressional elections in a radio program on April 22. He suggested that all candidates be rated on their replies to the following questions:

"1. Do you believe in the Trygve Lie program of continuous top level negotiation and conciliation between the great powers, starting at once, looking toward the elimination of the curtain between East and West?

"2. Do you believe in outlawing the atom bomb and the hydrogen bomb by declaring the first nation to drop such a bomb would be the enemy of all mankind?

"3. Do you believe in an agreement between all nations to reduce armaments by 30 per cent, using the money thus saved in a United Nations revolving fund . . . for development of overcrowded and under-developed areas?

"4. Do you believe in a four-power agreement to prevent the rearmament of Germany and provide for real denazification and an end to the cartel system?"

CHURCH CLUB OF NEW YORK

★ Walter A. Fairservis Jr. of the American Museum of Natural History was the speaker at the annual dinner of the Church Club of New York, held May 1. He spoke on the long lost city of Afghanistan. Elected president was Douglas M. Moffat, and vice-presidents elected were Marsden B. Candler, George N. Lindsay and Henry W. Mott.

SOCIAL WORKERS MEET

★ Richard T. Fagley, Federal Council secretary, told Church social workers meeting at Seabury House that the Church must remain a leaven of sanity to prevent hysteria and fear from gaining control in the U. S. and resulting in persecution of liberals and undue militarism. He said that the Church must prevent the destruction of democracy by the very efforts made to save it. Other speakers were the Rev. Otis R. Rice who discussed the treatment of alcoholics, and Layman M. Moran Weston of St. Philip's, New York, who urged that parishes have committees to fight for civil liberties.

SECRETARY ACHESON AT ANNIVERSARY

★ Dean Acheson, secretary of state, was the headliner at the dinner which marked the 200th anniversary of Holy Trinity, Middletown, Conn. He was once a member of the choir of the church during the rectorship of his father, Edward Campion Acheson, later bishop of Connecticut. Also attending the dinner were his mother, and his brother, Prof. Edward C. Acheson, professor at George Washington University. The Rev. Clyde D. Wilson, rector of the parish, welcomed the guests, and Bishop Gray of Connecticut, and Raymond E. Baldwin, former governor and a native of Middletown, also spoke. The Rev. Louis W. Pitt, rector of Grace Church, New York, also a native of the city, was the preacher at the anniversary service.

PROTESTS THE MUNDT FERGUSON BILL

★ A number of Episcopalians in Massachusetts have issued a protest against the passage of the Mundt-Ferguson bill, and have released a leaflet through the state's Civil Liberties Union setting forth their reasons. Bishop Nash is a member of the general committee, as are also the Rev. Kenneth Hughes, the Rev. George L. Paine and Mrs. John F. Moors.

SHELTON BISHOP LEADS CONFERENCE

★ St. Mary's Hall, Burlington, N. J., was the hostess school for a one day conference on religion for students in the southern New Jersey area, held on April 21. The Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop, rector of St. Philip's Church, New York, was the speaker and conference leader. He used as the topic of his address, "What it means to be a

McCarthy's Friends

THE Communist-Socialist phobia continues to obsess the American press. It reaches a new high (or low!) in the tirades of Senator Joseph R. McCarthy. After a series of wild statements meant to cast doubt on Secretary Acheson and our entire Department of State, the Wisconsin politician gradually changed his tune when compelled to be specific. Instead of the fifty odd Communists in the State Department as earlier charged, there was actually one on which he allegedly would rest his whole case. Speaking a few days later in Passaic, N. J., without benefit of congressional immunity, the hitherto outspoken McCarthy fenced with reporters several minutes and squirmed out of repeating any of the direct charges made in Washington.

It has come out that one of the Senator's chief sources of information is one, William J. Goodwin, a Washington lobbyist of the Chinese Nationalist government at a salary of $25,000 a year. Mr. Goodwin with an expense account running into hundreds of dollars a day has been busy influencing "leaders of United States thought" in behalf of Chiang Kai-shek's regime, McCarthy among others. Even more significant is the fact that he is a former Coughlinite and member of the Christian Front, an anti-Semitic and fascist outfit, and in his own words has long pursued "an unrelenting fight against Communism."

It is easy to see how a person of Goodwin's political record and tie-up would be out to get Professor Lattimore or anybody who told the truth about the Nationalist government in China. For some time now the sad truth about the once idealized Chiang Kai-shek has been leaking out: responsible observers are agreed that he is through and deservedly so after years of corruption and stupidity. However his Washington lobbyist is able to play on the Red hysteria in this country by labeling Lattimore, and by implication the whole State Department, Communists.

Another source of information used by the Wisconsin Senator is Joseph Kamp whose native fascist organization, the Constitutional Educational League, was cited by the Justice Department during the war as a channel for seditious propaganda. His latest pamphlet, "America Betrayed," appeared at the same time that McCarthy presented his case histories on the Senate floor, with the language used being so identical that it is apparent that both men used the same material.

To illustrate:

This is from McCarthy's speech of February 20 as reported in the Congressional Record (Feb. 20, 1950, pages 2050-51: "Case No. 3 . . . was employed with OSS in 1942. In 1945 he was transferred to the State Department and assigned to Research and Intelligence . . . he is a member of a number of Communist-front organizations, and . . . his pals are known Communists . . . He was very friendly and sympathetic toward Harry Bridges and strongly opposed any move to deport Bridges . . . he was also a close friend of Ralph Friedman, secretary of the Communist Party in California. Another security report, dated November 13, 1946, quotes his associates as saying that he favored the Chinese Communists . . . and favored Russia in most respects . . . The State Department officials . . . describe him as being . . . sympathetic to Russia and the Communist experiment . . . Another Government official said the individual blamed the capitalists . . . and . . . praised Russia . . ."

This is from "America Betrayed" by Joseph Kamp, a pamphlet which has been written and set in type several weeks before the McCarthy speech:

"Peveril Meigs of the State Department's Research and Intelligence Division . . . came from OSS to the Department of State in September, 1945 . . . he was a member of several Communist front organizations . . . he associated openly with Communists . . . he was very friendly and sympathetic towards Harry Bridges and strongly opposed moves to deport him . . . he was a friend of Ralph Friedman, Secretary of the Communist Party in Northern California . . . The next report, dated Nov. 13, 1946, details the result of interviewing Mr. Meigs' associates. One . . . stated that he favored Russia in most respects . . . One State Department official described him as being . . . sympathetic to Russia and the Communist experiment. Another State Department official said Meigs blamed the capitalists . . . and praised Russia . . ."

Other striking parallels between the Senator's speech and the Kamp booklet could be given, including the latter's charges against Owen Lattimore ("America Betrayed," pages 16-18, 24-25, 40-43) and McCarthy's charges against "Case No. 46" (Congressional Record, February 20, 1950, page 2067, col. 1).

Unfortunately few Americans know the facts behind Senator McCarthy's irresponsible attacks, for the simple reason that the newspapers do not publish them, and most people are too busy to dig them up for themselves. However it is a simple statement of fact that Kamp, one of his obvious sources of information, is an old-line rabble rouser, Hitler-lover and native fascist; whereas Goodwin, the Chiang lobbyist, has publically stated that democracy is "unadulterated slime" and "I wouldn't say fascism would be a bad thing for us at all."

Morning Prayer in Modern English

By FREDERICK J. WARNECKE
Dean, Trinity Cathedral, Newark, N. J.

(Concluded from April 20)

THAT the article I presented in The Witness April 20 might not be a wholly theoretical plea, there follows an attempt to recast "Morning Prayer" in modern English. That the language issue might be plain, there has been no revision of the Prayer Book order, nor substitution of other prayers for those now a part of that office. For the sake of brevity in presentation, only three of the opening sentences of the service are included; and only one canticle is used after each lesson. The absolution from the Holy Communion has been used because of its directness, an allowable use. The excessive repetition of the Gloria Patri is avoided, as is rubrically possible. In the versicles, the older singular form has been used for its impressive value, thus returning to the 1549 Book. Verse 16 of the Te Deum has been given the meaning which scholars agree is its true sense. The Lord's Prayer has been placed, as is permitted, with the prayers rather than with the penitential introduction to the service. The lovely prayer of St. Chrysostom has been addressed to the Lord Jesus, as it was originally, though the present language in the Prayer Book obscures this.

Other than these relatively unimportant changes, the attempt has been made to find simple, reverent language that will express the ancient truths relevantly to modern man. The attempt is far from perfect. There are obvious compromises, sometimes because of the poetry of certain lines. "Thee" and "Thou" are used in reference to God, as this presents no difficulty of meaning and avoids the harshness of the more familiar second person address.

More liberties have been taken with the rubrics. These have been ruthlessly simplified. Choices which theoretically add much variety to the service, but which in practice are seldom used have been eliminated.

A word should also be said about printing. The Book of Common Prayer is almost a tour de force of the printers art. Yet its present format is also difficult to read and unattractive to the eye in many places. The structure of the services is not made readily apparent by the printed form. Much could be done by redesigning the book. As Dean Ladd wrote in his Witness column, "Prayer Book Interleaves," "Machines serve men, but they also control him to a greater or less degree. The printing press traffics in words, which are inseparable from thoughts; hence its profound influence upon our intellectual and spiritual progress . . . Printing always interprets!"

Consider in the light of this, the comma found after the word "Lord" in the third paragraph of the Nicene Creed. Remember the strange repetition of a phrase in the Gloria in Excelsis foisted on the Church for many years by a printer's error. Printing seems to make the Sursum Corda and the Sanctus part of the Comfortable Words rather than the introduction to the great act of consecration. The printer's art has grown and progressed in the past four hundred years. Let printers as well as priests have part in the next Prayer Book revision!

THE ORDER FOR DAILY MORNING PRAYER

The Minister shall begin the service by reading one or more of the following sentences of Holy Scripture:

"The Lord is in His Holy Temple;
Be silent before Him, all the earth."
—Hab. 2:20

"I was glad when they said to me,
Let us go into the House of the Lord."
—Psalm 126:7

"May the words of my mouth,
And the meditation of my heart,
Be acceptable before Thee,
O Lord, my strength and my redeemer."
—Psalm 19:14

The minister:

Let us confess our sins to Almighty God.

A General Confession

All shall kneel and say together:

Almighty and merciful Father, we have sinned against Thee. Like lost sheep, we have strayed from Thy paths. We have followed the schemes and the desires of our own hearts. We have broken Thy commandments. We have not done the things which we ought to have done, and we have done things we ought not to have done. Our souls are sick!

Have mercy upon us, O Lord! Forgive those who confess their sin. Restore those who are penitent, as Jesus Christ, our Lord, promised.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

And grant, O Father that in the future we may live a godly, a good, and a thoughtful life, to Thy glory. Amen.

The Forgiveness of Sins

This absolution is to be said by the priest, standing:

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, of His mercy has promised forgiveness of sins to all those who with honest repentance and sincere faith turn to Him. May He have mercy upon you; pardon you, and release you from your sin. May He strengthen you in all goodness and bring you to everlasting life; through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

The Minister: O Lord, open my lips!

Congregation: And my mouth shall praise Thee!

All stand.

The Minister: We praise God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit.

Congregation: Now and forever, one God.

Minister: Let us praise God.

Congregation: We praise the Lord.

A Hymn of Praise: Venite Exultemus Domino

To be said or sung by all, standing.

Come, let us sing unto the Lord;
Let us raise joyful shouts to the rock of our deliverance.
Let us come before His face with thanksgiving
Let us raise joyful shouts to Him in songs.
For the Lord is a great God,
And a great King over all gods.
In His hands are the depths of the earth,
And the tops of the mountains are His also.
The sea is His, for He made it,
And His hands formed the dry land.
Come, let us worship and bow down,
Let us kneel before the Lord, our Maker!
For He is our God,
And we are the people of His pasture, and the sheep of His hand.
Worship the Lord in the beauty of holiness,
Let the whole earth stand in awe before Him.
For the Lord is coming to judge the earth;
He will judge the world with righteousness, and the nations with His truth.

The Psalms

Then shall follow a selection of Psalms, as appointed by the Church. At the end of the selection shall be said or sung:

We praise God, Father, Son, and Holy Spirit;
Now and forever, one God!

The Lessons From Holy Scripture

The First Lesson, from the Old Testament, shall be read as appointed by the Church. Then shall follow the Te Deum, said or sung by all, standing.

Te Deum Laudamus

Thee, God, we praise! Thee, Lord we acknowledge!
All the earth worships Thee, the Father everlasting.
To Thee all the angels sing; the heavens and all the hosts therein
To Thee Cherubim and Seraphim continually do sing,
"Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God of Hosts, Heaven and earth are full of Thy Glory!"

The glorious chorus of the Apostles praise God!
The great fellowship of the Prophets praise God!
The shining army of Martyrs praise God!
The Holy Church throughout all the world acknowledges God
As Father, of limitless majesty;
As Son, adorable, true and unique;
As Spirit, our strengthener.

Thou art the King of glory, O Christ!
Thou art the eternal Son of God.
Thou didst take manhood upon Thee to deliver man.
When Thou hadst overcome the sting of death, Thou didst open the Kingdom of Heaven to all believers.
Now Thou art with God in all the glory of the Father.

We believe that Thou shalt come again to be our Judge.
We therefore pray Thee, help Thy servants whom Thou hast redeemed with Thy precious life.
Grant them glory everlasting with Thy saints.
O Lord, save Thy people and bless Thy children;
Govern them and uphold them always.

Day by Day we bless Thee;
And we worship Thee forever, till time end.
Grant, O Lord, that today we may be without sin.
Lord, have mercy upon us; have mercy upon us.
Lord, let Thy mercy rest upon us, for we have placed our trust in Thee.
In Thee, O Lord, have I trusted! Let not my life be brought to naught!

The Second Lesson, from the New Testament, shall be read, as appointed by the Church. Then shall follow the Benedictus, said or sung by all, standing.

Benedictus—St. Luke 1:68-71

Blessings on the Lord, the God of Israel,
For He has cared for His people and brought about their deliverance.

He has raised up a mighty Savior for us in the house of His servant, David.
By the lips of His holy prophets He promised of old to do this,
To save us from our enemies, and from the power of all who hate us.

* * * *

The Apostles' Creed

To be said or sung by all, standing.

I believe
In God, Father, Almighty, Maker of Heaven and Earth.
And in Jesus the Christ, God's unique Son, our Lord.
Conceived by God's Spirit,
Born of the Virgin Mary,
Suffered under Pontius Pilate,
Was crucified; died, and was buried.
He went to the place of the departed.
The third day, He rose again from the dead!
He ascended into heaven, and is one with God, the Father Almighty.
From thence, He shall come to judge the living and the dead.
I believe in
The Holy Spirit;
The Holy Catholic Church;
The fellowship of believers;
The forgiveness of sins;
The resurrection of the body;
And the life everlasting. Amen.

The Prayers

Minister: The Lord be with you.
Congregation: And with your spirit.
Minister Let us pray.
All kneel, and say together:
Our Father in heaven,
Holy be Thy name.
Thy kingdom come!
Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven.
Give us this day our daily bread.
Forgive us our sins as we forgive those who wrong us.
Lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil.
For Thine is the Kingdom, and the power, and the glory for ever! Amen.

Minister: O Lord, show us Thy mercy.
Congregation: And grant us Thy salvation.
Minister: O God, make clean our hearts within us.
Congregation: And take not Thy Spirit from us.
Then shall follow the Prayer for the Day.
After which shall be said:

A Prayer for Inward Peace

O God, the author and lover of peace, in knowing Thee we find eternal life, for in Thy service is our freedom. Guard us, Thy children, against the attacks of our enemies, that we, confidently trusting in Thy defense, may not fear the power of any foe, being strengthened by Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen.

A Prayer for God's Grace

O God, our heavenly Father, Almighty and Everlasting God, who has safely brought us to this day, defend us with Thy mighty power; and grant that we may not fall into any sin today, nor run into any danger; but that all our life, guided by Thy Presence, may be righteous in Thy sight, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Service may here end with one or more of the following prayers, or with other prayers taken out of this book.

A Prayer for our Country and the President

O Lord, our Governor, whose glory is seen in the world, we place this nation in Thy merciful care, that, being guided by Thy will, we may live in the security of Thy peace. Grant to the President of the United States, and to all in authority, wisdom and strength to understand and to do Thy will. Fill them with love of truth and righteousness. Make them ever remember their sacred duty to serve this people under Thy guidance; through Jesus Christ, our Lord, who lives and rules with Thee and the Holy Spirit, one God, forever. Amen.

A Prayer for the Clergy and People

Almighty and everlasting God, from whom all good and perfect gifts come, send down upon our Bishops and other clergy, and upon the congregations committed to their care, Thy life-giving Spirit; and, that they may truly please Thee, pour upon them the constant dew of Thy blessing. Grant this, O Lord, for the honor of Jesus Christ, our Counselor and Minister. Amen.

A Prayer for All Men

O God, the Creator and Preserver of all mankind, we humbly pray Thee for all men. Make Thy ways known to them; Thy life-bringing Gospel to all the nations!
More especially, we pray for Thy Holy Church, world-wide; that it may be so guided and governed by Thy good spirit, that all who profess and call themselves Christians, may be led into the Way of Truth, and hold The Faith, in unity of spirit, in the bond of peace, and in righteousness of living.
Finally, we commend to Thy Fatherly goodness, all those who are in many ways afflicted or distressed, in mind, in body, or by the problems of living (especially N. and M. who desire the prayers of the Church.) May it be Thy will to strengthen and relieve them, according to their needs. Give them patience in suffering, and a happy end to all their troubles. We ask this for Jesus Christ's sake. Amen.

A General Thanksgiving

To be said by all

Almighty God, Father of all mercies, we, Thy unworthy children, give Thee humble and sincere thanks for all Thy goodness and loving kindness to us and to all men (particularly to those who would thank Thee for the special blessings in their lives).

We bless Thee for our creation, our preservation, and for all the blessings of this life.

But above all, we thank Thee for Thy love in redeeming the world by our Lord Jesus Christ, who opened to us the way of strength and gave us the hope of glory.

We pray that we may always appreciate Thy love and mercy; that our hearts may ever be filled with honest thankfulness; and that we may praise Thee not only with our lips, but in our lives; by giving up self to serve Thee, and by walking before Thee in holiness and righteousness all our days; through Jesus Christ, our Lord, to whom, with Thee and the Holy Spirit, be all honor and glory, for ever and ever. Amen.

A Prayer of St. Chrysostom

O Thou, who gave us Thy Spirit at this time, that with one accord we might make our common prayers to Thee; and did promise that when two or three were gathered together in Thy Spirit, Thou would hear their prayers; Grant now, O Lord Jesus, the prayers of our lips and those in our hearts, as may be best for us; giving us in this world, knowledge of Thy Gospel, and in the world to come, life everlasting! Amen.

II Corinthians 13:14

The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ; The love of God the Father; and the fellowship of the Holy Spirit, be with us all evermore. Amen.

Life in a Wrecktory

By FRANCES JACKSON MINIFIE

SEVERAL years ago, more than I care to mention, when the senior class of which I was a member marched solemnly into chapel to hear our baccalaureate address, there was a great deal of confusion about whether we should sit or stand. We all sat down and then seeing that the choir had remained standing we jumped to our feet and when they sat down as a group we did the same, only to have to get up again as the visiting preacher rose and began the responsive reading, Psalm 139: "O Lord, thou hast searched me out, and known me. Thou knowest my down-sitting, and mine uprising."

Well, life in a rectory has plenty of up-rising, but there's very little down-sitting. The college from which we were graduating has as its motto "Non-ministrari, sed ministrare" and many have interpreted its paraphrase "Not to be ministers, but ministers' wives" quite literally, but with no more training for their job than the thought that they were carrying on a tradition for their dear old alma mater. I was luckier than many of my sisters now living in rectories for I was born into one, but unfortunately I didn't realize that life was different there. I suppose that's a great compliment to my parents, but sometimes I feel as though the cold hard facts of life had been denied me.

There are as many different kinds of rectories as there are rectors and parishes. Some have Audobons and Oriental rugs, others have antique furniture and priceless silver, some display impressive libraries and others are noted for wonderful entertaining. Our rectory has six children. Often I dream of displaying them like Cornelia as my jewels, but I'm sure to the eye of the visitor they're apt sometimes to appear as rhinestones in the rough. No matter how beautiful they looked and acted before the rare guests arrived, somehow one or more is dirty or disheveled or cross at the wrong time. With unexpected guests there is practically no hope and I'm still unwilling to resort to the neighbors' television sets as a method of getting them out of the house. Once when matters were getting particularly obnoxious I tried to get them to go down into the basement to play, airily pretending we had a game room, but of course it served me right when one replied, "But mummy, it's so dirty down there." And no matter how I've tried to school them in the subject of personal remarks, one is bound to ask why a bald gentleman doesn't have much hair. Recently when we had guests for Sunday dinner we explained that it would be somewhat informal as it was the one meal that the children ate with us. Whereupon the man said, "Oh it couldn't be more informal than the first time we were here." I had remembered the occasion as being very pleasant and peaceful. The children had come in dressed in their night clothes, all rosy from tubs and gone quickly and quietly off to bed and we had enjoyed our supper. But it seems, unbeknownst to us, a two year old had crawled under the table and bitten our guest several times on the ankle! Since then I've decided it was never safe to assume anything, except that anything can happen.

Different Rectories

WE'VE lived in rectories next to the church and ones as far as a mile away. Both have advantages. If you're next door you're almost never on time for a church service, but you're in on everything. Sometimes of course too much so. In our first parish there was no phone in the whole church plant and I became accustomed to running over with all sorts of messages for everybody and anybody. It was sort of fun until one night after we'd had a terrific New England blizzard and I'd gone to bed early, nursing a cold, the telephone rang and I had to go downstairs to answer it. It was the mother of a child at young people's fellowship who had to speak to Johnny about something terribly important. About to become a mother myself I was most sympathetic and returned upstairs to get dressed properly for wading through the drifts over to the parish house where I finally tracked down Johnny and brought him back with me to use our phone. He came into the living room to thank me and explained, "We had some company drop in and Mom wants me to bring home a bottle of ginger ale." All rectory families living next door to the church can tell numerous stories of people just dropping in to kill time until a meeting, or the interruptions and borrowings that can occur any time of the day or night. A friend of ours, a young man, one time offered to sit with the children one afternoon while I went to a guild meeting. I came home after two hours to find the children playing happily but Jack was sitting on the sofa with his coat off, his collar and tie undone and a glassy stare in his eyes as he mumbled "Yeah, yeah, I guess so." I discovered that the parish problem, a very garrulous woman, not quite present, had some spare time and had arrived soon after I left and had been talking to him for over an hour. He said that he'd never forgive me, but I noticed that after that he was much more sympathetic about the life of a rector's wife.

Sometimes it seems as if a rector's wife were expected to do almost the impossible. She's supposed to dress in that happy medium between a fashion plate and the dowdier members of the congregation. By diligent studying of both the Sears Roebuck and Best catalogs sometimes quite an effect can be achieved. I once heard of a parish that complained that though they paid their rector a very good salary, his wife always wore the same hat.

She must be very sympathetic with other people's problems even though they seem like molehills compared to her own. How well do I remember struggling with several children, no help and a large dinner party in the offing only to have a parishioner pour out her heart over her poor daughter whose nurse had departed for a week's vacation leaving her with the baby and only the cook for help! The rector's wife (sometimes I think she should have a title too, how about Director?) is expected to attend almost every meeting and church function. Of course she usually wants to, but one year we found ourselves in the position of receiving opera tickets as a Christmas gift and being hard put to find funds to finance a sitter because there'd been so many required church affairs. Unless she can work out some long term arrangement a wife will find that while her children are small it will cost her in the neighborhood of fifty dollars a year just to be in her pew of a Sunday morning. And you can't deduct that from your church pledge!

Entertaining

THEN of course there's the entertaining that is expected. I think every wife should take a course on how to stretch lamb chops for four to dinner for eight and other helpful hints. We've tried always to have the policy of open house in our rectories and except for one time we've managed fairly well. I'd been away for several days and the larder was definitely low when my husband appeared for his lunch with a guest in tow. A smooth clerical gentleman, a bachelor who lived at a fancy club. What I had for lunch was two tiny casseroles of something or other that could not, like Gaul, divvy up into three parts. So I hastily said I'd eaten and had to go to the bank before it closed. I couldn't even bear to face the Reverend Father, for I knew his look would change from that of the cat-that-swallowed-the-canary to the guest who'd swallowed practically nothing and was still hungry. In one parish, a navy town, my husband would stand at the door of the church of a Sunday morning and invite any number home to dinner. Never was I a more successful hostess than in those days, for the guests always felt it was unexpected, and I was as prepared as if we'd asked them weeks ahead. And of course they felt obliged to give me all sorts of welcome help.

Another thing that is probably fairly unique in rectories is that the head of the house is more or less public property. Sometimes it's hard to get used to that and I remember one time being particularly ungracious about anything coming before me! It was necessary for me to go to the hospital on an especially busy Sunday, and when I got there I discovered that the next day I was to have some fairly serious surgery done and I waited all day for my husband to appear so that I could tell him and show him how brave I was. When at the end of his long hard day he finally arrived I greeted him sniffingly, "If I'd been a funeral I'm sure you would have had time to work me in before this." I know of a clerical wife who had to make an appointment with her husband in his office to discuss a domestic matter with him! Some weeks the rectory will be used by the male member of the household only as a bedroom and quick snack bar, for he'll be going from morning until night. During one such period my husband had had twelve nights (not in a barroom) of never getting in before eleven and without an hour to himself during the day and was finally taking the morning off to do some raking out in the front yard. An acquaintance driving by stopped and seeing him sighed enviously and remarked, "Oh I do wish my husband were a clergyman and just had to work on Sundays." It's amazing too to discover how many women feel that although they'd never dream of telling their lawyer how she should dress or comb his hair, it's perfectly all right to tell the wife how the rector should look. One parishioner tried to get me to use my influence with my husband not to wear his glasses in the pulpit. "He's so much handsomer without them!"

Compensations

BUT oh the compensations are many! There's the joy of feeling that you are really sharing your husband's most important vocation and perhaps contributing to his doing a more creative work. There's the discovery that people can be wonderfully imaginative and helpful and appreciative. There's the fun of being invited out to meals and treated like royalty: "We saved these flowers, or this cream, or this piece of meat because our rector and his wife were coming." There's the excitement of having all sorts of people visit you and the pleasure of finding some that actually expect your children to act like children and delight in them because they do. There's the surprise that contrary to popular belief no matter what you do "You can please a few of the people some of the time and none of the people all of the time,"—actually friendliness and good will do prevail. And then there's the knowledge that with the right rector, life in a rectory is just plain wonderful.

A Word With You

By HUGH McCANDLESS
Rector of the Epiphany, New York

Middle Names

AN item entitled "Farewell, John Knox," in a recent number of the New Yorker, poked fun at the display of middle names the author claimed was a habit of the Protestant clergy of the city. Richard Rovere is usually well informed, and the New Yorker is usually funny. This was neither. However, I do not mean here to criticize the article, but to discuss middle names.

With the terrific increase in the world's population in the last century, parents began to give children middle names for the purpose of identification. All but one of the present John Knox's in the New York 'phone book have middle names; it would be the blindest form of self-centeredness not to. It would be a nuisance, too. You could not avoid confusion with a simple "G. Washington" today.

Names are useful, therefore, only when they distinguish people from one another. But no one wants a name that is too distinguished. "H. Worthington Smith" is good; it keeps you from having to forward mail to every other Henry W. Smith in town. But "H. Worthington van der Omsterdam" would be unnecessary.

We inherit our names, like our faces, from our parents, and are no more to blame for the one than the other. When we get to the stage of adolescent shyness, we usually underrate both. It is part of our unconscious rebellion from our parents' livelihood, their home, their church, and everything that is theirs. It is at this age that our handwriting becomes formed, and our signatures become fixed. We usually begin to tamper with our names, and with the revolutionary conservatism of youth we want something else, something distinctive, but not too different.

Unconsciously we seek arrangements of our names which will have an unostentatious rhythm.

Copyright 2020. Archives of the Episcopal Church / DFMS. Permission required for reuse and publication.

"Gus Schmuss" might seem like a good plain name, but actually its heavy unrhythmic quality and the fact that it rhymes makes it stand out. The rhythms we want must be subtle. "Harry Truman" is perfect trochaic meter, but too obvious; it would lend itself too easily, in the ears of a young man, to derisive cat-calls. Therefore the middle "S," which stands for nothing, but which makes the name an example of cursus planus, more satisfying to the ear and less noticeable. (To detect the difference, read Psalm 23 in the Prayer Book. This is cursus, or cadenced prose, and sounds wonderful when read aloud. Then read it aloud in the King James Version. This is ordinary prose, most of it, and sounds less well. Then read it aloud in the Hymnal at number 345. This is fairly simple iambics and has a dull sing-song beat without the music). The usual reference seems to be for the subtle cursus rhythms, when this is possible without accenting irrelevant syllables or the louder vowel sounds; and failing that, the less obvious of the poetical meters. "Edna St. Vincent Millay" has a fine flourish, as "Percy Sylvester Malone," who writes for The Churchman, has pointed out long since.

This may seem like a bit of useless information, but I found it of some value when I was hospital chaplain on Welfare Island and at Grasslands Hospital in Westchester. I felt I always had to be on discreet guard against facetious internes who might suggest names for infants like "Hernia" or "Amnesia" when asked by grateful and ignorant mothers. Armed with a pamphlet on the meanings of proper names, and an old school book from which I had learned to dislike poetry, I was invincible.

In New England and the South, middle names became necessary for purposes of identification much sooner than in the melting pot of the rest of the country. It was too easy to confuse Phillips Standish with Standish Phillips, especially as they were probably second cousins. Most of our writers and orators and suffragettes came from these parts, as witness Henry Ward Beecher, Harriet Beecher Stowe, and their sister, Isabella Beecher Hooker. (This last indomitable lady's name has a slightly menacing rumble to it, and I cannot prevent myself from picturing her as a combination of Carrie Nation and Jack the Ripper).

At the turn of the century, people in private life began using middle initials, a practice I consider useful only when it helps the rhythm. Otherwise, especially when the name is a rather pretty one, it is as disconcerting as finding an old truck tire in a rose garden. When I was on Staten Island, my civic duties frequently included speaking at grammar school graduations, where many of the children were Italian, and most of their names should have dripped from the tongue like honey from the pot, or honeysuckle from the wall. But stern custom required that little Victorina Camparelli should be summoned for her diploma as Victorina R. Camparelli, and that middle initial emphasized with a righteous upward jerk of the voice.

When I moved to Rockland County and interviewed the local paper to make the usual request for a "the" in front of "Rev." and no middle initial, I was somewhat cheered to hear that the practice there had long ago passed its peak. But the peak of it must have been awful. A typical social item would say that Mr. and Mrs. Jasper L. Van Brunt had moved to town, with their children, Bert R., William F., George P., Daisy J., and Minnie T. Daisy J. may have been a very pretty girl, but when you call her that, you make her sound like a tugboat.

One's name is music to one's ears, but most people want theirs pitched on a low and harmonious tone. So if your clergyman, or any other friend uses his full middle name, or two middle initials, don't take it for a sign of ostentation. Usually, the reverse is the case.

Christian today." He also discussed questions submitted by the groups.

Other features of the program were a "get acquainted session," at the beginning of the conference, a fifteen minute devotional period in the school chapel, discussion groups and a buffet supper. Miss Florence Lukens Newbold, headmistress of St. Mary's, was the official hostess, assisted by Joan Menzel, West Hartford, Conn., member of the senior class and president of the Schools Service League.

UNION PROGRESS IN CANADA

★ As a step toward facilitating union of the United Church of Canada and the Church of England in Canada, the former is ready to accept a polity of bishops. This was disclosed last week by a United Church commission which has been negotiating with the Anglicans for five years. Like the recent report of the commission on unity of the Episcopal Church (Witness, March 30) the Canadian churchmen state "that the most fruitful approach to ultimate union will be through the encouragement of fellowship and sympathetic understanding at the local level of our respective Churches clear across Canada."

BISHOP DAGWELL HITS LIP SERVICE

★ Bishop Dagwell of Oregon, addressing the convention of the diocese in Portland on April 19, hit at "lip service" Christians who "profess with their lips that which they deny with their acts. He said there "are glaring evils in society: broken homes, lax sex morality, sub-standard housing, industrial strife, badly-run penitentiaries, overcrowded asylums, racial discrimination, war-mongering. All are contrary to the Christian profession."

EASTERN OREGON CONVOCATION

★ Bishop Barton, in addressing the convocation of Eastern Oregon, meeting April 15 at St. Andrew's, Burns, urged a series of training courses for lay workers, leading to the program next fall for missions, in which laymen are to take a leading part. A resolution was later passed recommending such courses.

WOMEN TURNED DOWN IN OREGON

★ The convention of Oregon for the second time refused to admit women as delegates. The amendment of the constitution, first proposed last year, would have doubled the number of delegates, with one-half women.

The convention voted to raise $100,000 as a centennial fund to purchase new sites and to aid new congregations. A committee was also appointed to study clergy salaries and to report in 1951.

GILBERT PREACHES TO FIREMEN

★ Bishop Charles K. Gilbert of New York was the speaker at a breakfast last Sunday for the St. George Association of the New York fire department, which followed their annual communion service held at the Incarnation. There were 800 uniformed men who marched to the hotel following the service. The Bishop praised the firemen for their services to the city and the association for "its very notable contribution to the religious life of the community." The major difficulties facing the Church today, he said, were indifference to religious life and the divisions between churches.

INTER-RACIAL SERVICE AT THE ASCENSION

★ The second of two interracial fellowship services took place at the Church of the Ascension, New York, recently. On this occasion, St. Philip's Church, one of the leading Negro parishes of the Church, was the guest of the Ascension parish. Choral evensong was sung by a choir of forty-five voices from St. Philip's under the direction of Walter E. Witherspoon, their organist and choirmaster. The Rev. Roscoe Thornton Foust, rector of the Ascension, presided at the service and welcomed the many guests from St. Philip's, speaking of the great work of that parish, and of his personal friendship of many years for its rector, the Rev. Shelton Hale Bishop, who preached the sermon.

After the service a largely attended reception was held in the parish house at which the fellowship forum and the young people's fellowship of the Ascension acted as hosts.

PARISH HOUSE FOR WARREN, PA.

★ An ugly building next to Trinity Church, Warren, Pa., was recently purchased, and reconstructed into a building which is modern in every respect. The two top floors of the five story structure were dismantled and the entire front was replaced to correspond to the church. The building provides room for expanding activities, including the church school which has grown under the rectorship of the Rev. Beecher M. Rutledge, from 160 in 1943 to just twice that number.

She is the widow of a chaplain killed in action in 1945 and Prof. Miller's first wife died of polio in 1948. He has four daughters and Mrs. Fowlkes has a son and a daughter.

BILLY GRAHAM'S TOUR IS PROTESTED

ST. CYPRIAN'S, DETROIT, IS CONSECRATED

★ St. Cyprian's, Detroit, was consecrated by Bishop Emrich on April 16 at a special service attended by a large congregation. It began as a mission in 1920 and was supervised by the Rev. Robert Bagnall, then rector of St. Matthew's. It was fitting therefore that the present rector of St. Matthew's, the Rev. F. Ricksford Meyers, should lead the litany which he had adapted for a pre-consecration processional around the boundaries of the parish property. The rector of the parish is the Rev. Malcolm G. Dade. Taking part in the service was the Rev. Tollie L. Caution, secretary of Negro work of the National Council; the Rev. J. Clemens Kolb, rector of Christ Church, and the Hon. G. Mennen Williams, governor of Michigan. St. Cyprian's became a parish in 1944.

COMMITTEE TO DEFEAT MUNDT BILL

★ A meeting of organizations and individuals was held in Philadelphia May 3 at which Congressmen of the city were asked to state their position on the Mundt bill, now before Congress. It was sponsored by a local committee to defeat the bill. The Rev. Kenneth R. Forbes, Witness editor, the Rev. D. Wilmot Gateson and the Rev. Allen Kremer are among the sponsors.

WEST VIRGINIA CONSECRATION

★ The Rev. Wilburn C. Campbell will be consecrated coadjutor of West Virginia on May 18 at St. Matthew's, Wheeling. Henry St. George Tucker, former Presiding Bishop, will be the consecrator, with Bishop Strider of W. Va. and Bishop Goodwin of Va. the co-consecrators. The candidates will be presented by Bishop Budlong of Conn. and Bishop Pardue of Pittsburgh, with the Rev. W. T. H. Cripps of Pittsburgh and the Rev. Charles R. Stires of Bloomfield, N. J., the attending presbyters. The preacher is to be Bishop Scaife of Western N. Y., and the litanist will be Bishop Heistand of Harrisburg.

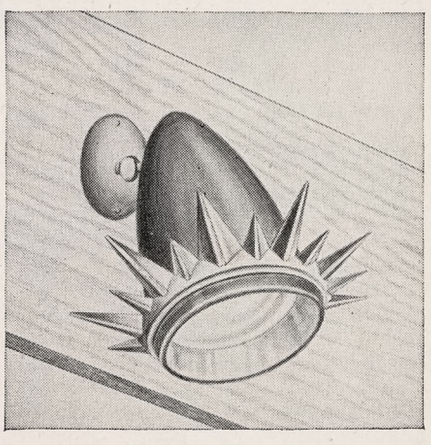
CHINESE CLERGYMAN RETURNS HOME

★ Rev. Edmund R. F. Penn, chaplain of St. Hilda's Girls' School, Wuchang, China, who has been visiting in the U. S. for almost a year to observe and learn about the mother Church, returned to China last week. After part of last summer spent observing and preaching in the diocese of Central New York he studied at Bexley Hall for 6 months, returning to the diocese in March.

On his return to China he will attempt to bring a closer understanding between the people of the Church there and those of this country. He has already created a better understanding of the Chinese people among those here.

Mr. Penn will join his wife and six children who have been living near Hong Kong during his absence. His oldest daughter is a librarian, another was in training as a nurse. Two daughters are in high schools and two sons attend primary school.

AGGRESSIVE WORK FOR KENTUCKY



★ More aggressive work in the diocese of Kentucky was recommended at the diocesan convention, held at St. Andrew's, Louisville, April 18-19. The recommendation followed a survey conducted by the Rev. Clifford Samuelson of the town and country division of the National Council and the Rev. Joseph Moore and the Rev. E. Dargan Butt of Chicago. The last two were present to present the report. They pointed out the need for new congregations in the Louisville area and the relocation of several down-town churches. Another feature of the convention was an address on laymen's work by Mr. Stephen Cushman of Chicago.

Morelite IN YOUR CHURCH
THAT'S LIGHT ON YOUR BUDGET

This church, which took the Christian Herald Prize in 1928, was equipped with very handsome wrought-iron chandeliers which undoubtedly gave enough light to satisfy the congregation of that day. Recently, however, a study was undertaken to find inexpensive means of providing more light on the pews—without spoiling the general effect. The choice was Rambusch MORELITE (illustrated below). Behind each truss there are four of these units installed. They are adjusted to throw their light in a slightly forward direction down over the pews, providing ample yet inconspicuous reading light. This is typical of many churches throughout the country where a marked improvement in lighting can be attained by simple and economical means. Why not let Rambusch solve your lighting problem? METHODIST MINISTERS GIVE OPINIONS

Congressional investigations should "afford greater protection to the accused" in the opinion of the majority of 69 Methodist ministers attending a seminar at Washington, D. C. Likewise 63 percent were of the opinion that the U. S. is not dealing intelligently with Russia. They were evenly divided on aid to Europe, though a majority were in favor of aid to under-developed areas. They were also about evenly split on recognition of Communist China. Nearly 70 percent opposed a government-sponsored health program but three-fourths favored a national fair employment practices commission.

KAGAWA TO VISIT U. S. IN JULY

Toyohiko Kagawa, a Protestant leader of Japan, is to arrive in the U. S. the middle of July and remain through the rest of the year. He is to devote two months to the united evangelistic advance, sponsored by the Federal Council of Churches, and is also to be a speaker at two world conferences of Churches that meet this summer in Canada.

PROTESTANTS TELEVISE PUPPET MOVIE

A puppet movie "The Good Samaritan" has been televised by the Protestant radio commission and was screened in New York last week before Church leaders, television executives and newsmen. It is the first of 13 puppet films on Bible stories. Three now in production are "The Prodigal Son," "The Lost Sheep," "The Ten Talents." If those now planned are successful the program will be expanded to 52 films.

WANTS CHURCHES BUILT MORE OFTEN

New churches for each generation, economical and of simple design, were advocated at a conference of architects, church building committees, ministers and students, meeting in Milwaukee. John R. Scotford, head of the conference on church architecture, said in building, congregations should not tie the hands of tomorrow. "Each generation should build churches all over again," he said. "Unfortunately you can't do that. So quite properly you should remodel your buildings to express your own ideas." Other speakers urged bright colors, with Keith Gebhardt, artist of the local public museum, describing a church with pews and choir stalls painted in the spectrum colors. He ruled out pastels as too dull.

CLERGYMAN OFFERS UNIQUE PRAYER

Wracked by controversy whether Oregon's schools should continue to emphasize "progressive" methods of education or revert to the "little red schoolhouse" approach, 3500 teachers from all over the state were little prepared for the prayer that opened the annual convention of the Oregon Education Association. The Rev. Richard Steiner, pastor of First Unitarian Church, summed up the problem that has set school administration officials, parents—and to some extent, the teachers themselves—sparring at each other through meetings and the press. This was his prayer:

"We pray for some of the teachers here who are weary of the routine of teaching in uninspired surroundings the uninspired children or uninspired parents.

"Let them see that every child has divine possibilities; every parent some pride and love for his children.

"We pray too for some of the teachers here who are weary of being doormats for bullying supervisors, principals, superintendents and school boards. Give them the courage of their convictions and let them not be afraid.

"We pray for some of the teachers here who would like to teach as they were once taught, out of a love for learning and for teaching, but who find themselves the automatons of a machine process—afraid to be persons lest they gum up the works.

"Give them the courage to love and be loved as teachers.

"We pray for all who think they know about all there is to know about teaching. Give them humility, for it is a way of growth.

"Above all, we pray for our children committed to the care of these teachers. Give them wisdom, strength, courage and a love for learning, that they may become good citizens of a great nation—to lead the world into paths of peace and stability."

WOMEN OPPOSE ENVOY TO VATICAN

Members of the Council of Church Women of Pa., meeting in convention in Lancaster, reiterated their opposition to sending a representative to the Vatican. They also asked all government personnel to "keep the way open for new peace approaches." Addressing the meeting was Eddie Wu of China who said that the withdrawal of American missionaries with the advance of Communists "had a bad effect on Chinese Christians and created a bad impression on the Communists. We should look to the Communists as a challenge. I would like to be a Christian who is not afraid of Communism."

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

GERMAN CHURCHES HIT SOVIETS

Sharply worded protests against anti-Christian policies in the Soviet zone of Germany were read April 23 from the pulpits of all Protestant and Roman Catholic Churches in the zone. The Protestant statement declared that parents had complained of children hearing the Christian faith ridiculed in school and being taught by teachers that "there is no God and Christ never lived." The R. C. statement said that "materialism is fundamentally godless, anti-religious and anti-Church. Therefore nobody can be simultaneously a true Christian and a true materialist. Whoever adheres voluntarily and in full freedom to the materialistic ideology must not be admitted to the sacraments and whoever spreads this ideology will be excommunicated."

Prime Minister Otto Grotewohl of the East Zone denounced the statement of the Evangelical Church as "an attack on the constitution, the government and the republic" and branded it "an illegal act" especially since it was issued "while negotiations between the government and the Church on the subject of the Church declaration had not come to an end."

PLAN TO CONFISCATE MONASTERIES

Roman Catholic sources in Prague predict that the Czech government will soon confiscate a large number of monasteries and convert them into workers' apartments, hospitals and other social agencies.

URGE NEGOTIATION ON H-BOMB

The British Council of Churches, in closed session, discussed the H-bomb after which they issued a statement calling on the British government "to take the initiative in promoting international consultations."

BRITISH CHURCHMEN WARN ON H-BOMB

The hydrogen bomb makes war in the future "nothing less than suicide" was the warning issued by the annual congress of the Free Church Federal Council, meeting in Birmingham, England.

MARC BOEGNER VISITS SOVIET ZONE

The Rev. Marc Boegner, president of the Federation of French Protestants and a president of the World Council of Churches, visited the Soviet zone of Berlin April 23 for a religious ceremony. It is held in connection with the 250th anniversary celebration of Berlin Academy. Dr. Boegner, before leaving Paris, urged fellow citizens who had been invited also to attend as a contribution to a united Europe.

NEGOTIATIONS IN POLAND

Negotiations are going on between the Polish government and Archbishop Wyszynski of Warsaw regarding the fate of six priests sentenced to death by military courts for treason. It is thought that the government will take favorable action in return for assurances from the hierarchy that it will support the government's land collectivization program. One of the clauses in the proposed agreement states that the Church is to instruct priests "that they must refrain from opposing the development of the cooperative system in Polish villages."

BACKFIRE

Readers are encouraged to comment on editorials, articles and news. Since space is limited we ask that letters be brief. We reserve the right to abstract and to print only those we consider important.

JAMES P. JOSEPH
Layman of Brooklyn, N. Y.

I suggest for light and delightful diversion the reading of the Roman Catholic "Home Messenger?" There is never a dull number. Take these few excerpts from a recent issue. Under "Question Box" we have this comforting item: "What saints may be invoked for aid in afflictions of the eyes and ears?—P. S., Boston, Mass." Answer: "The following saints have long been patrons of those afflicted with eye troubles: St. Augustine, St. Aloysius, St. Clare and St. Lucy. For affliction of the ear, St. Kadoc." No reply has been so far received to my query as to the proper saint for housemaid's knee.

Then there is the department, St. Anthony's Friends, of never-failing entertainment. Take these: "Dear Father: Enclosed you will find a small donation in gratitude to St. Anthony for the success of my midterm exams. I feel deeply grateful to this saint for his kindness and hope that he will come to my aid in the future whenever I am in need.—K. K." (I have had to keep this one hidden from my high school daughter). "Dear Father Superior: Some time ago I asked for the help of St. Anthony in securing a job for me and he did so. Although it only lasted for a week and a half, I am very grateful to St. Anthony. —J. H." (We think St. A. ought to be ashamed of such a poor job). "Dear Father: No sooner had I sent in my petition to St. Anthony than my prayer was answered. The tenant who was giving me much trouble finally moved out of my house. May God be praised. —Mrs. L. L." (Is St. A. taking over rent control, too?).

But the "Messenger" offers a real bargain in an advertisement for Gregorian Masses. We can only quote excerpts, alas. "It is a pious belief, confirmed by several apparitions, that at the end of the 30th Mass the soul will be delivered from the flames of Purgatory. These thirty Masses must be said in thirty consecutive days, without interruption. If interrupted, they must be resumed from the beginning. Have the Gregorian Masses offered for your dear departed and arrange to have them said for yourself immediately after your death. Nobody else may think of having them offered for you. Why not take out an insurance policy for this? Your soul's best friend is yourself. The Fathers of St. Paul accept a minimum stipend of $30 for the Gregorian Masses. If they are to be started without delay the offering will be $60."

Who was it that said laughter is close to tears?

MARY LACEY
Churchwoman of Nashville, Tenn.

Some naive churchmen sent a resolution to the last General Convention urging clergymen not to be "Communist dupes." Can it be that there are churchmen who not only read the Luce publications but who also believe them? What has become of our boasted intellectual Church?

JOHN V. FISKE
Churchman of New York

The issue of April 27 has just arrived and I want to congratulate you for presenting both sides of Voluntary Euthanasia so well. I predict that letters will flow into Backfire on this much debated matter.

STORY OF THE WEEK

The Ascension, Hickory, N. C. Has Remarkable Growth

Fine Program Carried on Under Leadership Of The Rev. Robert B. Campbell

★ Last fall, the new Church of The Ascension, Hickory, N. C., was formally opened by the laying of the corner stone—exactly 71 years to the day after the laying of the corner stone of the first church of the parish. The service was delayed until the church was completed in order that this date might be commemorated. Bishop M. George Henry of Western North Carolina preached the sermon. The Rev. Boston Lackey of St. James Church, Lenoir, N. C. and the Rev. Richard Lee of St. Luke's Church, Lincolnton, N. C., assisted in the service.

The handsome edifice of limestone, from nearby Grandfather Mountain, with its tall spire standing triumphant over the house of worship—occupies a lot 187 feet wide and 420 feet deep. The lot on which the church stands, valued at $20,000, was given by Major and Mrs. Thomas A. Mott, Mrs. Robert E. Simpson, and T. Manly Whitener.

The building committee, composed of Major Mott, chairman, and senior warden at the time, T. Manly Whitener, Jay J. Dell, Ervin C. Yount, G. Norman Hutton and the rector, the Rev. Robert B. Campbell, worked untiringly toward the erection of the church. Those on the building fund committee were the same men and J. Lenoir Cilley, Joseph C. Cobb, R. G. Hafer, E. M. Fennell, J. L. Friday and E. W. Walton. Other members of the vestry at the time who ably assisted the building and the building fund committees, were Dan H. Ligon, William P. Brandon, Dr. Kenneth Cloninger, Vernon Lackey, Joseph Moye, Richard W. Turkelson and Joseph Wingo.

When the Rev. Robert B. Campbell came to Hickory in 1947 there was $300 in the building fund. The budget for the running of the church was $4000. The budget today is $14,000. One hundred thousand dollars was raised for the building fund. The new church was started in January 1949. The church is of Gothic architecture, with a parish house of stone and stucco. There are 300 sittings in the nave pews and 32 in the choir stalls. The floor is of flagstone and the church is heated by radiant heat. The steel beams overhead are covered with oak wood. The walls are grey-green. The acoustics are excellent. The chancel has indirect lighting. The church is equipped with a new Wicks Pipe Organ. A beautiful stained glass altar window, depicting the Ascension of our Lord has been given by the women of the church. There are 12 Gothic windows in the nave, of antique seeded diamond shaped squares, in soft colors. All of these unusually beautiful windows were designed and executed by the High Point Glass and Decorative Company.

Mrs. J. L. Riddle gave the handsome altar brass, and altar service book in memory of her husband. She also gave a rector's pew in memory of Thomas Mutter Johnston, beloved former warden. The pulpit is a memorial to the former rector, the Rev. Samuel B. Stroup. Mrs. E. M. Fennell gave silver cruets in memory of her grandmother. The altar was given in memory of Miss Ada Schenck. The altar hangings were given by Mrs. R. E. Simpson, Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Lackey and the Woman's Auxiliary. Mrs. Alex Menzies gave imported fair linen cloths. The remaining chancel furnishings were given by Mr. Vernon Lackey, in memory of his son, Vernon Lackey Jr., who was killed in World War II. Major T. A. Mott gave the litany desk in memory of his father and mother.

Rapid Growth

In the past two and one-half years 90 people have been received into the church and church attendance has more than trebled over the months prior to September 17th, 1947.

The parish house is modern in design and equipment. The main assembly room has a stage, a movable altar can be placed on the stage for worship service. Curtains across the stage may be drawn; they are of sound-proof plastic material. Class rooms, choir and robing rooms for the men and women are off the assembly room. The kitchen is large and convenient. The ladies' parlor and secretary's office is known as the Sara Lee Gifford memorial room. It was furnished by friends of Miss Sara Lee Gifford a beloved member of the parish and daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. C. Gifford. The rector's study was furnished by the young people's fellowship. There is an upstairs room being furnished as a play room for young people.

Young People's Fellowship

The young people's fellowship was organized shortly after the Campbells went to Hickory. The group met in the rectory every Sunday evening until the new church was completed. The young people paid for the furniture in the rector's study—which cost over $500. They have contributed to the missionary work of our Church. They have taken part in programs for Woman's Auxiliary. The group meets every Sunday evening in the parish house for program of worship, study and fellowship. Supper is served each evening by the Bishop Horner and Bishop Rowe circles of the Woman's Auxiliary.

The Woman's Auxiliary

Two and a half years ago, there were about 10 active members of the Woman's Auxiliary. Today there are five circles. The Bishop Rowe, Bishop Horner, St. Catherine, St. Hilda and St. Mary's Circles. Under the leadership of the president, Mrs. Lawrence Cline, an excellent program is worked out for a year ahead. The various circles meet once a month and the general Auxiliary meets six times a year. At present, two circles serve the young people's fellowship each Sunday evening and the other three take turns at conducting a nursery school each Sunday at the eleven o'clock service, in order that parents who attend church may have a place to leave their children. The different circles also serve a supper to the men's club once a month.

The altar guild meets every fourth Friday in the parish house. Two different women have charge of the altar for a month at a time.

A new rectory is being constructed on 16th street in Hickory. It is a seven room ranch type house. It is all one floor and is made of brick. It will be completed in June.

THE REV. ROBERT B. CAMPBELL, Rector of the Ascension, Hickory, N. C., who has done a remarkable job

Diocesan Convention

The Church of the Ascension is the scene of the annual Diocesan Convention on May 10th and 11th. The convention will hear President Harold L. Trigg of St. Augustine's College discuss "Christian race relations." An important spot on the agenda is the presentation of the proposed budget, for undoubtedly the budget will reflect the growing life of the Church in the diocese. The convening of the convention in Hickory will give the delegates opportunity to see the fine new edifice of the Ascension.

NOTABLE SERVICES IN NEWARK

★ In accordance with the resolution of the 1949 General Convention recommending that congregations of the Episcopal Church and the Presbyterian Church worship together, two historic churches in the center of Newark, N. J., Trinity Cathedral and Old First Presbyterian Church did so on the two Sundays following Easter. On April 16, the congregation of Old First Church came to the Cathedral for morning prayer. The Rev. Lloyd Foster, pastor of the church, read the second lesson. Dean Frederick J. Warnecke of Trinity preached the sermon. He spoke of the peculiar genius of Anglicanism stressing that attitude which holds Catholicism and Protestantism in tension rather than in compromise within itself. No service was held in Old First Church on this Sunday morning.

On April 23, the Cathedral congregation worshipped in Old First Presbyterian Church. The clergy of that church conducted the service with Dean Warnecke reading the New Testament lesson. Dr. Foster preached the sermon, pointing out ways in which God can use us in this modern world to further the advancement of his kingdom. No service was held in the Cathedral at this hour, though there was an early celebration of the holy communion, and evensong in the afternoon.

Despite the fact that one Sunday was Low Sunday and on the second one it rained, tremendous congregations attended both services. There was deep interest in the services by the lay people of both churches. Old First mailed an outline of morning prayer prepared by Dean Warnecke to its congregation before the first service.

Old First Church, founded in 1666, is the church of the settlers of Newark. Trinity Cathedral, founded in 1739, is the second oldest church of the city. Its first senior warden was a former elder of Old First Church. There has been a fine record of respect and friendship between the two churches, enhanced now by the common experience of worship.

WALTER H. STOWE A CANON

★ The Rev. Walter H. Stowe, rector of Christ Church, New Brunswick, N. J., was installed as honorary canon of Trinity Cathedral, Trenton, on May 3rd by Bishop Gardner at the parish church in New Brunswick. Dr. Stowe is the editor of the Historical Magazine and president of the Church Historical Society.

ST. MARTIN'S FORUM

★ About 150 persons were present the afternoon of April 30 for the forum held at St. Martin's, New York, at which Scott Nearing, economist and sociologist, was the speaker. Dr. Nearing maintained that it is only government spending to the tune of forty billion a year that is holding up the so-called free enterprise system. He also pointed out that over three-fourths of this went for military purposes, just as it had previously in Japan and Germany under Hitler, with war the inevitable result. In answering a question about "what has youth to look forward to," Dr. Nearing said: "Depression and war, in that order. But it does not have to be, since we have the means for a planned economy which can prevent both. It is up to you to see that this is done."

The forum, which was scheduled to last about an hour and a half, starting at four o'clock, was so popular that it was nearly seven before Dr. Nearing was allowed to leave to catch a train.

The next forum is to be on May 14th, at the same hour, when the speaker will be Mary van Kleeck, formerly director of industrial studies of the Russell Sage Foundation. The concluding meeting of the spring series will be the afternoon of May 28th when the speaker will be the Rev. Prof. Joseph F. Fletcher of the Episcopal Theological School. He is to speak on the possibilities for world peace.

Plans are now being made to resume the forum in the early fall under the direction of the Rev. W. B. Spofford Sr., managing editor of The Witness, and a committee composed of members of the parish, together with representatives of organizations and institutions outside the parish. The chairman of the committee is Mr. David Johnson, son of the rector of St. Martin's, the Rev. John H. Johnson.

MRS. R. B. CAMPBELL, wife of Rector of the Ascension

ROBERT B. CAMPBELL OF THE ASCENSION

★ The Rev. Robert Bailey Campbell, whose family background is linked closely with the Lee family of Virginia, became the rector of the Ascension, Hickory, N. C., in the fall of 1947. Prior to that he has been the rector of the Incarnation, Cleveland, Ohio.

When he arrived at the Ascension there was $300 in a building fund. Today there is a new church and parish house, pictured in this number of The Witness, and a modern rectory is now under construction. Over $100,000 was raised for this building program. In addition the budget of the parish was raised from $4,000 to $14,000 and all of the organizations of the parish have shown remarkable growth.

In all of this the rector and Mrs. Campbell, who is outstanding in her leadership, have had the wholehearted cooperation of large numbers of faithful parishioners, the story of which is featured on page three.

BISHOP HART ADDRESSES SERVICE FOR YOUTH

★ Opportunity, security and responsibility are democracy's objectives, Bishop Hart of Pennsylvania told those attending a dinner of the Episcopal Service for Youth, meeting in Atlantic City in connection with the national conference of social work. Referring to E. S. Y., he stated that the organization provided the Church with an agency to help youth develop spiritually, mentally and physically.

Also addressing the meeting was Miriam B. Van Waters, superintendent of the Reformatory for Women of Massachusetts, who said that social work done by the Church "should be skilled—of the highest type. Church people should back science and approach the problems of human behavior in the Christian spirit of dealing through knowledge."

CHAPLAINS MEET THE DEANS

★ For the first time in the history of the two provinces, members of the boards of examining chaplains of the diocese of the fifth and sixth provinces and the deans of the seminaries in that area, met for a conference April 24, at Seabury-Western Theological Seminary. The meeting was initiated by the dean, Alden Drew Kelley, who invited the 20 men for a conference.

The conference had a 10-point agenda, fulfilling two main purposes, Dean Kelley said. The first purpose of the meeting was "to provide an opportunity for inter-change of experience and practices of the various boards of canonical examiners in the hope that more uniform procedure in time may be developed." The conference was also held in order to discuss matters relating to canonical examinations as affected by the revisions of the canons by General Convention in 1946 and 1949 and the new syllabus of theological studies.

The examining chaplains went on record that "canonical examinations should not be scheduled during the academic year except as in accordance with recommendations in the report of the joint commission on theological education presented to General Convention in October, 1949, to wit: the first week in May."

The examiners also felt that of the three types of questions set for candidates for holy orders (whether factual, comprehensive, or the type involving practical applications) that the comprehensive-type is preferable.

CHURCHES CHALLENGED BY MRS. ROOSEVELT

★ Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, Episcopalian, speaking in Jamaica, N. Y., challenged the Churches to help put democracy into action. "If we are to hold the place of leadership in the world," she declared, "we have got to show at home what democracy really means; that in a democracy men have a chance to live as brothers, a chance to live unafraid. Until we achieve this, not all our economic and military power will win the struggle we are in."

CONVENTION OF CONNECTICUT

★ Bishop Donegan, coadjutor of New York, is to be the speaker at the dinner on May 16th held in connection with the convention of the diocese of Connecticut, held at Christ Cathedral, Hartford. Prior to the convention, on the 14th, Bishop Budlong is to confirm candidates throughout the diocese who were prevented by illness or other causes from being present at the time of the regular visitation in their parishes. This service also is being held at the cathedral.

CONVOCATION OF WYOMING

★ The convocation of the district of Wyoming was held in St. Mark's Church, Casper, on April 18-20. Bishop Hunter in his charge to Convocation, called for the consideration of a step by step procedure to become an aided diocese. The first step would be to increase the endowment fund which will call for sacrificial giving, over and above present giving. Bishop Hunter also asked convocation to consider the building of a new Canterbury house at the University of Wyoming—which he called the biggest piece of advance work in the district. The Convocation in adopting its largest budget in history noted that Wyoming had given very little in past years to the Indian work in the district, so as a step forward toward more adequate giving in this area the amount of $500 was added to the budget.

Bishop George H. Quarterman, district of North Texas, gave a stirring address at the annual banquet. Bishop Quarterman challenged Convocation to think in terms of a program

ELSA HOLDS DINNER

By ANDREW M. VAN DYKE
Executive Secretary of ELSA

★ In conjunction with the National Conference for Social Work held in Atlantic City, the Episcopal League for Social Action had a dinner and informal discussion at which Church social relations people and other social workers from twelve different dioceses were present. For many in the group, the League was something of which they knew practically nothing. The Rev. William B. Spofford Jr., former executive secretary, gave a short talk about its history and motives. Recalling that the late Archbishop Temple had often insisted that the Church must work with the whole of man's relationships, with his God, with his fellowmen and with nature, Mr. Spofford said that the League has always since its founding in 1919 sought to show the way for man in his religious, political and economic life. In ELSA, the speaker affirmed, there have been historically four main centers of interest and activity. In the Episcopal Church, its members and the League as an entity, have sought to stimulate the social relations work of the Church, on the level of General Convention, the national Church, the diocese, and in local parishes, stirring the Church to act in society for the gospel. A main focus was always that of the rights of labor, and he recounted the many exploits of members of the League in the intense labor struggles of the twenties and early thirties. He also remarked that labor relations was now a technical subject, and though it is most necessary that the League be alert to the problems of organized and unorganized workers, some of the battle has been won. A third matter which has been of concern is that of Christian social analysis, and the League's sponsorship of the spreading of knowledge of the Malvern conference and its endeavors to arouse action on it, along with the publishing of the book "Christianity and Property," a result of a League conference under the leadership of Dr. Joseph Fletcher. As a fourth point he mentioned the role that the League had played in developing interest and program for urban church work.

Following Mr. Spofford, Mrs. Muriel Webb, program director for Christian social relations of National Council, discussed the role of official and unofficial social action groups in the Church. She stressed that official departments must follow the pronouncements of conventions and councils. It is the unofficial groups like the League which can and must be prophetic, forward groups, taking stands on particular social questions.

Spencer Miller Jr., newly elected president of American International College, spoke briefly of his deep conviction that ELSA must always be a gadfly, a group of concerned churchmen who will be leading and prodding the church "recumbent" into paths of action so necessary. Mr. Miller hoped that the Episcopal Church would never be left without the courageous witness that deeply socially-minded people had always given it, and called upon the League and all interested persons to be together in such endeavor.

CONVENTION OF GEORGIA

★ The convention of the diocese of Georgia met where the first one had met—in St. Paul's, Augusta, which has been celebrating its bi-centennial this year. A former rector of the host parish, Bishop Coadjutor Hines of Texas, preached at the evening service April 18th on what Church members must do as the present civilization dies. He called for a "rediscovery of worship," a challenge to man-made institutions, and upon members to "stand up and be counted."

Bishop Barnwell, diocesan, addressing a joint session of convention and Woman's Auxiliary next morning, declared that church folks must learn to distinguish between the ways of the world and the ways of Christianity.

One new mission was admitted to convention — Grace, in Cairo, served by the Rev. Harcourt E. Waller, of Bainbridge. The department of missions was authorized to work with the Bishop in subdividing the diocese into archdeaconries. The secretary of the Diocese was reelected, and the Rev. Johnson H. Pace, Jr., of Christ Church, Dublin, will become acting Secretary in June.

He Who Was Nailed Is Lord

He Who Was Nailed to the Tree
Is the Lord, and the Ruler of all things.

THERE are many differing emphases put on Ascension day in various devotional systems. St. Augustine says our Lord's ascension means he is now present everywhere, not limited as to place. Bonaventure says it is the proof of our resurrection, since the heavenly spirits now see the Christ in his humanity, as well as his divinity. But our hymnals, which represent the consensus of Anglican devotion, emphasize chiefly the fact that this is the final triumph of Jesus. In his triumph also triumphs the humble power of love over the forces of this world. It is a day of realistic optimism.

This realistic optimism is much needed in the year 1950. It was easy for us to see, and to say, that "The Lord God omnipotent reigneth" just after the war. But now the one world has split. The soldier, after witnessing unimaginable sacrifice on the battlefield, has come home to a scene of selfishness. The magnificence of humanity during the horrors of war has changed to grubby snatching for advantage in the softer fields of peace. One might expect that some of the leaders of the vanquished would do away with themselves; what can we say when some of our own intellectual and political leaders have done so?

The small mind takes refuge in scapegoats, in "monolithic thinking." Some believe that every Wall Street denizen is part of a gigantic conspiracy, whether he be the boss of a bond house or an office boy; some believe every labor leader is an agitator; some believe every liberal is a dupe or spy of the Communists; and some believe that every Roman priest is in entire agreement with his superiors about the desirability of clerical fascism and an immediate crusade against Russia. Even when one knows that none of these generalizations is true, there is a tendency to absorb the invisible vapors they throw off and to become disgusted with everybody in general, even if with no one in particular.

We are even disgusted with ourselves as a race. We forget that the H-bomb is no wickeder than whatever weapon Cain used on Abel; that more people died in Tokyo than in Hiroshima. We have used atomic energy as a symbol of our wickedness, when in fact in itself it is no more wicked than electricity.

Nothing has more momentum than fear. Fear makes earnest groups give Americanism medals to publicity seeking politicians; fear caused the Salem witch trials and the inquisition; fear lay back of the Dreyfus case and the Nuremburg laws. Fear has caused more wars than pure greed or pure hate, and they have all been wars that ended with regret and disgrace about evenly divided.

It is true that individuals in many groups gave the initial momentum to this wave of fear we now observe all about us. Spokesmen, official or otherwise, representing journalism, clericalism, ancestor worship, and business, sounded the first alarms. But now it has become a fashion. Educators speak of bringing up children in the atomic age; scientists revel in gory variations on the theme of complete destruction; moneyraisers assure us that their project is the only defense, or, at least must go on; and so forth. Much of the scare talk parades under the banner of preventing the next war; a great deal of it, however, has a certain subtle relish in its tone.

What can we do? Too often this question is merely a rhetorical expression of complete despair, an excuse for jumping onto the juggernaut for personal safety.

What can we do? We can do everything. The lonely figure on the Cross has overcome the world. His followers overcame their world after his ascension, in spite of every disadvantage of numbers, rank, and ability that can be conceived. We can witness to our faith that God's spirit is infinitely more powerful than the blind thrashing monster of hysteria. We can be outnumbered, outvoted, outmaneuvered, shouted down; we can be defeated. But the Kingdom of God cannot be defeated. If what we seek belongs to that Kingdom, it will come. What we seek may not come in our time, but it will come. To have less hope than this means that our faith is incomplete; it goes up to Good Friday, but it does not continue through to Ascension Day.

Family Is Sacred

AMERICA is celebrating the family this week, and we of the Church are 100% behind it. The Church has a stake in the family, and the family in the Church. After all, the Church began in a family with a child who was subject to Mary and Joseph. And ever since the Church has had much to do with marriage and with the home. Many of our Christian concepts derive from the family—for example, the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. To say the very least, the Church and the family are tied up with each other in our western civilization.

It might well be said that the Church has nurtured that which is basic to the survival of the family unit: the institution of marriage. The Church has fostered reverence for marriage, marriage as a holy estate, marriage as an indissoluble union between one man and one woman under God, marriage as a sacrament and a sacred contract. It is this teaching of the spiritual nature of the marriage bond, this word of Christ himself, what God hath joined together let no man put asunder, which has been the safeguard of the family and the home for generations. In truth we have something to glory in and to preach from the house tops in this Christian tradition of reverence for marriage. Let that slip away from the young and the older as well, and we shall see the dam burst.

We often think of the disastrous effects of the swift social changes and wars of this half-century upon the family. But perhaps even more it has been affected by the shift from a religious idea of marriage to a secular one which quite leaves God out of the picture. If this should increase and prevail more and more, if marriage were to become simply a legal contract made and broken in the Hollywood manner, then we would have universal social disintegration. We would face the increase of everything that goes under the name of sexual license. No man or no society which fails to govern its vitalities can escape decay and dissolution. We would mar and disfigure the lives of little children if we became a nation of broken homes. We would raise up a generation of rebellious-embittered youth, insecure and hostile, because the beginnings of their lives were poisoned by parents who failed them.

To counteract this the Church stands in the way of all interpretations of life purely on the level of this world and of man's selfish nature. The Church teaches reverence for life — which means that another person is never to be used as a means to satisfy lust, but respected and treated as a person, as an end. The Church teaches reverence for marriage—which means that it is never to be profaned or lightly set aside, but honored and preserved as a holy estate, God's intention for man, woman and child. The Church is the foundation of the ideas and the qualities of life which are essential to the family at its best and for its survival.

Give! Giving! Gave!

By PHILIP H. STEINMETZ
Rector of the Ashfield Parishes

WHEN you love, you give without figuring costs. A boy on a date with his best girl stops spending only when he is out of money or they have done everything she asks. Parents mortgage their farms to provide education or medical care or help for their children. When you love, you give.

When you are giving, you are saying that you love. And how freely you give tells something of how deeply you love. Giving is at the bottom of the greatest joy in life. It is our closest approach to the heart of God revealed in the fact that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son . . ."

And he did it without being asked and to those who did not deserve the gift but rather already owed him everything.

There is no getting away from or changing this utterly clear fact of history. We may think that God was foolish and decide that we will be more careful and give only when we can expect a good return. We may look about for some ulterior motive. We may take the line that since we did not ask to be given a Saviour, we don't have to accept him and have a right to continue to live our lives to suit ourselves.

Or we may respond to God's gift by putting all we have from him back into his hands to be used as love directs in meeting the most urgent needs, ours and others and in bringing joy into the world.

What line do you take with your time, your thoughts and your money? Have you found the joy that lies in unstinted giving?

Praying for the Harvests

By HUGH McCANDLESS
Rector of the Epiphany, New York

THE Rogation days, which fall on May 15, 16, and 17 this year, are far less known and observed, by the majority of Americans, than Thanksgiving. In one sense, this is a good thing; gratitude is a healthier state of mind than importunity. On the other hand, probably because they are less well known, the Rogation Days have not been discolored and diluted by commercialism and purely social observances.

Thanksgiving derives from the experience and custom of the Pilgrim fathers; indirectly it may hark back to the harvest festivals of England. It has its spiritual precedent in the feasts of the Jews, which were almost always thanksgivings, rather than supplications.

The Passover came in the Spring, at the time when new born lambs were sacrificed, and the people had the unaccustomed pleasure of eating fresh meat. The regular harvest was observed at Pentecost, about fifty days after Passover. The feast of Tabernacles, a vintage festival, took place when the grapes were ripe and when work on the farms was interrupted until the Autumn rains softened the soil.

The Rogation tradition goes back indirectly to pagan Rome, where there were Spring processions in honor of Ceres and other agricultural divinities. These were superseded by Christian days of prayer for crops which eventually were put in place of the days of general supplication which preceded Ascension day.

Prayers just before Ascension day for good harvests were very timely in Gaul and northern Europe, and the custom spread back to Rome, and became widely observed.

In England and northern France, the season was especially suitable for the type of prayer used on these days, a litany, or praying in procession. The people would proceed from their church to the barns and fields and orchards of the community, saying prayers at each station, and along the way. In England, this was called "beating the bounds" of the parish. There was an element in it which resembles our contemporary "clean-up" weeks: as they went about, the villagers could notice how each landholder was fulfilling his obligations in keeping up the roads and hedges, the ditches and dikes, and especially the landmarks, which adjoined his property.

The urbanization and industrialization of the past century have made such praying for the crops appear more or less academic to many people of the world. The purchase of foods in packages which guaranteed the contents gave many city dwellers the idea that modern science had guaranteed harvests, and that famine was a thing of the past, possibly only as an anachronism in backward countries. Rogation Sunday became therefore "Rural Life Sunday" and it was observed with more concern for the work of the Churches among isolated rural people than for the harvests. Feeling as we did about the certainty of enough food, and good enough food, for all, it certainly appeared to be more realistic and unselfish to consider the most important crop of all, our future citizens, a great percentage of whom would come from the country.

Duty of Conservation

IN the last few years, however, the effect of turning industry over to tools of destruction, rather than tools of production, and of the withdrawal of farmers and farm lands from useful activity, due to the demands and results of war, has shown all men how contemporary starvation can be. The rapid increase in the world's population, in spite of war, and the hunger of so many of them, due partly to war, have led to a reconsideration of our former optimistic ignorance and indifference; and Rogation day prayers can be said this year without fear either of selfishness or more antiquarian sentimentality. Such matters as the conservation of topsoil and other natural resources are now felt to be implied in the ancient prayers. Conservation is now seen, more and more significantly, as a duty of the religious or conscientious citizen: a duty both to God and to posterity.

Processions and prayers will therefore mark the observance of this season by many religious bodies. A note of modernity will be struck in places where farm machinery will be the subject of prayers and thanksgiving. In some parishes, "Lord's Acres" will be dedicated with the income for religious and charitable projects. In other places, community-owned equipment and storage places will be considered in a sense part of the church property.

In city churches, this observance will be rather nostalgic, but it will not be a mere sentimental gesture. Some parishes will have prayers in the gardens they maintain in the midst of troubled busy cities.

On Rogation Sunday, the first part of the morning service will be held in the gardens of some of these city churches. There will be prayers for the husbandmen, for the lands and harvests of the world, and for those beset by famine; and a thanksgiving. Then the people will enter the church as hymns are sung, and say the litany kneeling, according to the modern custom. City dwellers, people whose work is far removed from the life-giving soil, their prayers are both more inclusive and more intense, in their fellow feeling for all men, for having begun them out where God reveals himself again in the miracle of Spring.

At the Epiphany

ONE such garden is at the Church of the Epiphany, New York. In the back of the buildings, surrounded by the ivy-covered walls of neighboring tenements, is a haven of leaves and flowers. It is small but serene, and it does not "crowd" the visitor who comes in for quiet meditation and a bit of green-dappled sunshine. An ivy covered Celtic Cross, removed from the Church of the Epiphany in Winchester, Mass., when that building was enlarged, sets the tone of the whole place.

It began as a rubble heap. There one might dig and find bricks and plaster and boards and broken glass, and the solid rock of Manhattan, and almost anything but soil. The first earthworm did not appear until yards of soil from Connecticut, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and New Hampshire were brought in.

No donations were ever asked, but they have come in a steady stream; from neighbors and parishioners. Next door is a stable from which issue every Spring the flower vendors, the men who drive their wagons through the streets and cry their wares. They have contributed buckets of manure, all carried generously and reverently through the church, and unsold flowers. People have given choice tulips and begonias, yuccas, roses, an alligator pear, peony and larkspur plants, pussywillows whose roots had developed in a glass of water in Rhode Island, violets from country walks, irises from a friend's garden, herbs from the Washington Cathedral garden, pansies as memorials, "Live Forevers," a rhododendron, and the daffodils and narcissi which pop up with enthusiasm every year. The girls at the Chapin School contributed marigold seedlings one year. The white geraniums left over from the children's Easter service also find their way in.

A very young contributor brought in what she called "onions," but she said her mother had sent them and they would have marvelous red flowers. During the war, a vague lady appeared wanting to start a victory garden. She planted morning glory seeds instead, but beets came up, to everyone's amazement.

In late May and June appear the house plants of people leaving town. These are taken "at the owner's risk." Some have flourished, some have died, but all have been welcome as representing at least a pot of earth.

Twice, one year, the garden supplied flowers for the altar of the church. It has been a wonderful place for vacation Bible schools, picnics, luncheon meetings, and nervous bridegrooms. The anonymous bent back of the gardener seems to invite confidences. One troubled party, waiting for her son's wedding to begin, confessed that she was nervous about her daughter-in-law. "You see, she's never been to a wedding!"

One neighbor is an old lady living in a back apartment. She oversees with frank satisfaction any small bit of activity. Once, after she had regarded a busy cultivator for some time, the latter broke the silence by hoping she enjoyed the garden. "Sure de," she replied, "I enjoy everything that goes on in there!"

In the Winter the garden is soft with snow, but it is frequently brightened by the gay laundry of the industrious neighbors. In the Summer there are Japanese beetles and weeds and droughts and lovely rains, and the hopes and dreams that have haunted gardeners since the world began. Always the garden changes, and only the sparrows and the changing seasons come again.

Hospitality of the Lord's Table

By SAMUEL M. DORRANCE
Clergyman of Noroton, Connecticut

WHAT right has he to do it? The question is asked when one of our clergy invites "Christians of other names" to receive the holy communion. It is asked by those who disapprove. It is asked also by those who approve, but wonder whether the invitation is lawful. For at the close of the order of confirmation there is this rubric: "And there shall none be admitted to the holy communion, until such time as he be confirmed, or be ready and desirous to be confirmed."

To answer this question I turned first to the notes I made in Dean Hodges' course in liturgics over forty years ago. There I found this statement: "There is an apparent excommunication against unconfirmed persons, but that is not intended to repel devout strangers. Its purpose is to apply to people within the Church." Next I turned to my notes on Dr. E. S. Drown's lectures in systematic divinity. He had this to say: "Confirmation is normally and properly required of those who come to communion. It is a normal and just use of discipline. But the rubric has no bearing on the question of admitting the members of other Christian Churches to our communion. Even in the earliest case where the rubric appears confirmation is not made sacramentally necessary to receiving communion. The matter is one purely of discipline. The rubric had nothing to do with the present situation, which did not exist at the time the rubric was made." Then Dr. Drown made the following statements: "(1) The real reason we may not keep the unconfirmed members of other bodies from communion lies in the idea of the Church and sacraments. (2) If the Church does keep them away, it becomes sectarian; it sets up some other test than that of baptism. The only Catholic test of Church membership is baptism, and that carries with it all the rights of membership."

This question of the hospitality of the Lord's table was the subject of a furious controversy in England some eighty years ago. The scholars commissioned to revise the New Testament were about to begin their labors, and Dean Stanley invited them to receive communion at a special service in Westminster Abbey which was held on June 16, 1870. A number of these scholars were not members of the Church of England. But what provoked the angriest criticism was that one of them, Vance Smith, was a Unitarian. Fifteen hundred and twenty-nine priests and deacons of the Church of England signed a memorial, sent to the Archbishop of Canterbury, Archibald Campbell Tait, in which they voiced their "grief and astonishment at the admission, in Westminster Abbey, to the Blessed Sacrament of the Body and Blood of Christ, of teachers of various sects, openly separate from our own communion, and more especially of one understood to be a denier of the Divinity of our Lord." The Memorial closed by stating the belief of the signers that "the Church expressly guards against such a cause of offense" by the rubric we are discussing. The Archbishop replied in a long letter to Canon T. T. Carter, who had forwarded it to him. After saying that Vance Smith, "feeling he could not accept the great doctrine which the Church most distinctly proclaimed, committed an error in being present, though I doubt not with the best possible motives," he continued as follows: "But some of the memorialists are indignant at the admission of any Dissenters, howsoever orthodox, to the Holy Communion in our Church. I confess that I have no sympathy with such objections. I consider that the interpretation which these memorialists put upon the rubric to which they appeal is quite untenable. As at present advised I believe this rubric to apply solely to our own people, and not to those members of foreign or dissenting bodies who occasionally conform. All who have studied the history of the Church, and especially of the reign of Queen Anne, when this question was earnestly debated, must know how it has been contended that the Church of England places no bar against occasional conformity."* The last mutter of the storm was a resolution passed by the Lower House of Convocation expressing "deep regret at the offense caused by the reception of the Holy Communion, in Westminster Abbey, by a member of one of the companies of Revision who denies, and has publicly declared his rejection of the Creed commonly called the Nicene." It is significant that nothing was said about the other Dissenters.

Bishop Tuttle

A GREAT missionary bishop on this side of the Atlantic who lived to become the revered Presiding Bishop of the Protestant Episcopal Church, Daniel Sylvester Tuttle, tells in his autobiography how he came to hold the same position as Archbishop Tait. In a letter too long to quote in full, written less than two years before the historic service in Westminster Abbey, he gave careful advice to one of his clergy who had asked how he was to treat "other denomination communicants." Confirmation was to be urged at the right time, but "your leaning should be towards mercy, and all your doubts construed towards mercy." "Publicly, give no other invitation than the regular church service gives. Privately, act your own pleasure, use your own discretion." "I think you must be misinformed as to my having publicly invited 'other denomination persons' to the holy communion in Virginia City. I never did so. Though on the day of the first celebration while the communicants were coming to the chancel I did nod my head to Mrs. F. and Mrs. I. who seemed to be hesitating whether to come. And I told Mr. D. the night before that I should be happy to have him come to partake of the blessed sacrament. And I did tell Mrs. C. an evening or two afterwards that we are not close-communion as you call it."

Almost forty years later, recalling how cautious he had been, he says: "In after times I changed my own views and practice. When administering the holy communion in towns where perhaps my visit was almost the only religious service of the year I did not hesitate to invite people publicly in these words: All Christians, by whatsoever name they call themselves, who will come with us in faith and charity to partake of our blessed Lord's body and blood in the holy communion this morning will be cordially and lovingly welcomed. And I grew to interpret the rubric after the confirmation office as applicable, in the strictness of its warning, only to the children of our own Church homes and Sunday schools, not to devout Christians of other names, who, in the hunger of their souls, might desire earnestly to be fed by us at the Lord's table. * So, circumstances and experience constrained a mellowing of my thoughts and an erasing of some of the hard and fast barbed lines, that as a strict sort of churchman I had deemed it my duty to set up." *2

Have our ministers the right to invite "Christians of other names" to the Holy Communion? Those who do it believe they have not only the right, but the duty. They do not conceive of themselves as guards set to turn away all but the certified members of one branch of a family. Rather, thinking of that "holy Church universal" for which we pray "more especially" in the prayer for all conditions of men, they think it their duty and privilege, as spokesmen for their Master, to invite and welcome "all who profess and call themselves Christians" to that holy table "which is not ours, but his."

Clothes Make the Man

By CORWIN C. ROACH
Dean of Bexley Hall

FOR the small boy it is an achievement to be able to dress himself. The man takes it for granted. So Peter, when told that the risen Lord was waiting for the disciples on the beach, quickly put on the outer garments he had stripped off while hauling in the nets. It was a simple, commonplace gesture of reverence and respect. The apostle probably did it without thinking, so excited was he. His Lord, however, noticed the gesture and used it to point a moral. Clothes make the man. The very fact that a person is able to dress himself shows that he possesses independence of action. He can do as he pleases. When a man is old, he reverts to the helplessness of the child and finally at death the shroud replaces the swaddling clothes. Yet clothes are a constraint. That is why Peter stripped off his garments while working at the nets. Out of respect he put on his fisherman's blouse. "He put on his clothes"—Jo. 21:7. Will he be willing to wear the cloak of his Master, even if it means being girt to a cross? Clothes make the man, but what kind of clothes and what sort of man? Are we wearing the prophetic mantle or the pale liveries of this world?

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

Christianity and History. By Herbert Butterfield. Scribner's. $2.75.

This thin slip of a book, less than 150 pages long, is one of the most important books on its subject to appear during the past fifty years. The author is Professor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge, in a succession of great historians, beginning with Lord Acton—to whom he is a worthy successor. He does not hesitate to hold that the writing of history involves more than the accurate presentation of facts; that it requires a philosophical grasp of the whole human process; that such a theory as the Nineteenth Century notion of universal and endless progress is inadequate; that every generation is as close to the Kingdom of Heaven as any other; that only God and his purposes can give meaning to history; and that this meaning stands out clear in the teaching of the prophets and above all, in the teaching, life, death, and resurrection of Our Lord.

The contrast with such theories of history as have been advanced by some other eminent historians, viz. that history has no meaning, no pattern, no "lessons," is very marked. The lessons of history are grim. God's judgments are not limited to one nation or one generation. Britain and America have something to answer for at the bar of God's justice, as well as Germany and Russia and Japan. Professor Butterfield's book is accordingly of tremendous practical importance as well as being of interest to the philosopher of history. It will make the reader think and think hard, not just about the long involved pageant of the past, but also of the tumultuous present, where we ourselves stand "in jeopardy every hour," faced with decisions that involve life and death and the world in which our children's children will have to live. This is a good book for preachers; but every educated person in America ought to read it too.

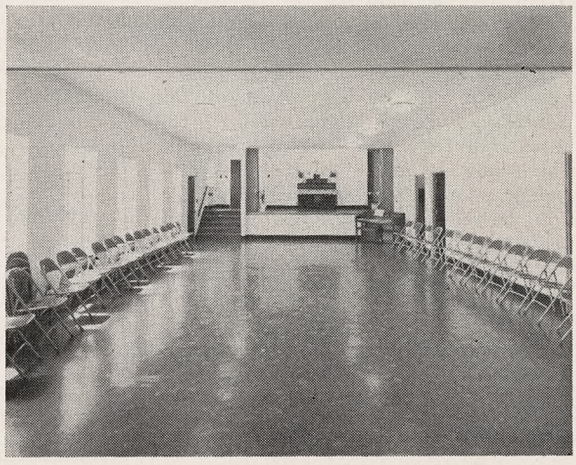
Psychotherapy and a Christian View of Man. By David E. Roberts. Scribner's. $3.00.

The correlation of religion and psychotherapy, and their practical cooperation in hospitals and elsewhere provide one of the most fruitful areas in modern religious and theological activity. Professor Roberts, of Union Theological Seminary, has a wide experience in this area. For one thing, he conducts a course in collaboration with an expert psychiatrist; this course includes actual field work on the part of the students in a large mental hospital. Moreover, Dr. Roberts' background is that of philosophical theology. He is in a good position, therefore, to help interpret religion and psychotherapy to each other. The book is full of profound insights and genuine understanding of difficult mental cases. It is, moreover, written with modesty and a sense of proportion—qualities not too common in areas where polemics have often been the order of the day. He does not write of "the" Christian view of man, for there are many, though certainly every Christian view of man looks upon man as a sinner. Dr. Roberts does not go the length of a theoretical portrayal of "the total corruption of man's heart;" nor, on the other hand, does he lambast everyone who disagrees with him by calling them "superficial liberals." This wise and well-proportioned treatise ought to be in the hands of every parson, teacher, theological student, vestryman, and intelligent layman throughout the church.

Dante The Philosopher. By Etienne Gilson. Sheed and Ward. $4.00.

This book is written in the best tradition of French scholarship: it is lucid, thorough, conclusive. But it is not profound. The title is misleading; it does not deal with Dante the philosopher, but with the attitude of the poet towards philosophy. A great part of the book is devoted to polemics, especially directed against Gilson's fellow-countryman Mandonnet, who in his book Dante le theologien, defended the awkward thesis that Beatrice means nothing in Dante's works but sacred theology; Gilson of course has an easy play in winning his attack. Dante, as Gilson portrays him, is a "moralist" whose chief concern was Justice, and whose supreme virtue was loyalty. Dante's work does not constitute a system, but is the dialectical and lyrical expression of all his loyalties. Gilson inquires into the main works: Vita Nuova, Banquet, Monarchy, and Divine Comedy. Some "eclaircissements" are added, one particularly interesting on "The Thomism of Siger of Brabant" in which Gilson discusses carefully the doubtful position of this Averroist. He emphasizes that Dante was not an orthodox Thomist, but felt free to make his own decision. He holds that Dante believed in the relative independence of philosophy, the "donna gentile" of The Banquet, from sacred theology, as he also believed in the relative independence of the state from the church.

—RICHARD KRONER



Vessel of Clay. By Leo Trese. Sheed and Ward. $2.00.

One day in the life of a Roman priest—a perfectly fascinating and beautifully written account of the ministry of an earnest, devout, and self-sacrificing pastor.

The Weight of Glory And Other Addresses. By C. S. Lewis. Macmillan. $1.25.

The famous author of "The Screwtape Letters" has gathered together five addresses made during the late war and immediately afterwards in this small book. He deals effectively and incisively with modern man's superficial and mistaken ideas of Christianity — negative Unselfishness instead of positive Love, especially in man's desire for heaven; symbolism instead of sacramentalism in transvaluation; religion as an individual and private matter instead of as unity with the Body of Christ; secular learning instead of holy learning; the approval of social groups instead of the approval of Righteousness. A worthy book by a worthy author.

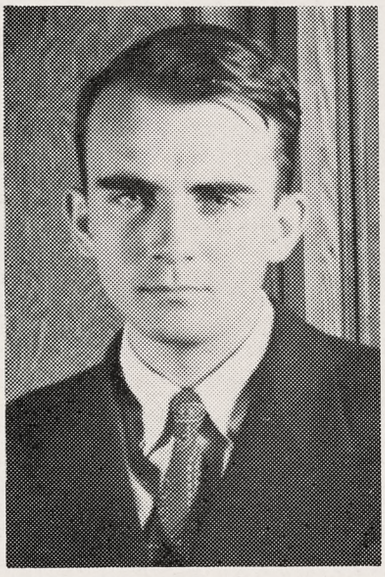
Youth of the Church

By JOHN BOOTY

Ex-Chairman of the National Youth Commission



THERE are administrators in the Church who believe that the adolescent is a little more mature than the kindergarten child but still ought to be rigidly taught and poured into a mold and fashioned into a "tin soldier" of Christ. The United Movement of the Church's Youth seeks flesh and blood soldiers for our Master, flesh and blood soldiers who have fought through to their belief in the eternal and loving God in their age of anxiety, their so-called adolescence (and when you mention the word you are supposed to imply, by the tone of your voice, some inferior and slightly diseased animal). Religion which is "hammered" into a young person is temporary, blown away by the passage of time. The religion of a tin soldier is not inspirational, but rather as time passes appears foolish in new situations. The United Movement of the Church's Youth seeks to confront each young person with the meaning of being Christian. Many of us will never forget the national youth commission meeting when Dave Gordon (now a student in a seminary) led us in considering the implications and meaning of this statement regarding evangelism drawn up by the commission on evangelism of the Church of England:

"To evangelize is so to present Christ Jesus in the power of the Holy Spirit, that men shall come to put their trust in God through him, to accept him as their Saviour, and serve him as their king in the fellowship of his Church."

We began by asking if we really believed in Christ Jesus, believed that he is Saviour, King. UMCY seeks to have the young people of the Church face this and find him. Then program can have meaning and efficacy, for it is based on a living faith. This approach may seem to be too adult. Large numbers of young people do not believe that it is. For it is in high school that the young person ceases to rely on the faith of his parents and must either find faith for himself or join the growing ranks of the lost. It is when the Church's young people face and accept Christ for themselves that the Church's teachings about boy-girl relationships, vocations, and the like have real, valid meaning and can be applied to everyday living.

This whole reasoning explains to some extent why the division of youth believes that young people should lead the United Movement of the Church's Youth. It is sincerely felt that young people who have won their faith on the battleground of doubt and fear can and should stand up in this world of doubt and fear to be living examples, epistles of the Kingdom of God on earth. But even with the growing examples of the values of youth leading youth, there are still those who believe that this is dangerous.

I sincerely wish that those who

JOHN BOOTY
Writes About Young People

doubt the ability and worth of youth leading youth could meet the newly elected chairman of the national youth commission, Lindley Hartwell, and others like him. Lindley is a young man. He has had much experience in youth work. He is stable and has a vitality of spirit which inspires those who know him. I can readily state that this young person knows our Lord and eagerly seeks to let his life and his leadership be directed by the Holy Spirit. Lindley is strong with the strength of the gospel. And his sense of humor graces any fellowship of which he is a part. I believe that he will lead many searching young people to the throne of God.

One of the truly joyous things connected with the Church's youth work is the foresight those adult leaders of the division of youth and the acting executive secretary have in allowing the growth and expression of youth's faith through UMCY. The division has the authority to clamp down and autocratically direct the movement. But instead, under such leadership as that provided by its chairman, Dean Watson, youth is given full opportunity to rally its numbers to the Church, to Christ.

But there needs to be more of this kind of vision, for not only is the young person who bears the mark of conversion upon him able to lead, but in his time of life needs to learn the responsibility and the rewards of providing leadership in the Church. Too often the relationship in a youth group is one in which the whole business is dominated by an adult who lacks faith. Ideally the relationship should be one in which the advisor is present to represent the clergy in challenging youth with the reality of Christ (this is particularly true of the new youth group) and to be present to help or advise when he or she is called upon to do so. In a way this is the most difficult kind of leadership for any adult to have to give. But I am convinced that it is the most fruitful leadership in the Church youth group.

In a way this is the answer to our leadership need today. Young people and young adults can, if they are supported, shoulder much of the load. And they have demonstrated that it is not wrong. If only everyone would take to heart this statement made by William Temple, late Archbishop of Canterbury, to the youth of England:

"Some of your adventures will end in disappointment; some of them will bring rebukes from ecclesiastical authorities, middle-aged folks like myself may be shocked and horrified. Never mind! Sometimes the adventurers will be right and the authorities wrong. But we need men who will seek the guidance of the Spirit of Christ to determine what is right and will then give themselves to it heart and soul."

THE RELIGIOUS PRESS

Selected by GEORGE MACMURRAY

BULLETIN (Federal Council): One of the problems the Church faces in its public relations springs from the fact that like many other specialized fields, the Church has a language all its own. Some laymen even accuse clergymen of talking a dead language. If what the Church has to say about the moral and ethical, as well as the spiritual, is to be readily understood by everyone, perhaps we need a vocabulary that will save our messages to the world from languishing in waste baskets.

CHRISTIAN CENTURY, commenting on the judgment barring union of the Congregational Church and the Evangelical Reformed Church, registers its amazement at the sweeping terms in which Justice Steinbrink issued his permanent injunction. It prevents not only this proposed merger, but also prohibits union "with any other body or organization whatsoever." Says the editorial: "This is by far the most sweeping assertion of jurisdiction over a religious body by a civil court in American history. It makes the word of one judge control the life and policy of a great denomination, not only for today but for all time to come. And the implications for all other congregationally organized denominations are so sweeping as to constitute a virtual prohibition against any of them participating in any Church union movements." The editorial ends by urging an appeal to the Supreme Court if necessary.

WATCHMAN-EXAMINER (Baptist): after praising Belgium for its industry, economy and enterprise, following the war, says it was too much for the R. C. clergy whose ambition it is to control this community of hard-working and dependable people. It is this group who seek to restore Leopold as king, thus threatening the peace and stability of the country. He is opposed by workers and war heroes. The country, says the editorial, is proving ground that Fascism is far from dead. In the anti-communism furore, now engaging world attention, this may be overlooked. Meanwhile Christianity is again discredited by being identified with reaction and with a monarch's vainglorious lust for pomp and power. And that is not true of the real kind of Christianity with which we would be identified. The medieval habits of the Roman Church, however, die hard.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND NEWSPAPER: The first essential in the upbringing of children must be the example set by their parents. There must be no deceiving, no lies, no broken promises, but complete faithfulness. In that way alone could the terrible increase in juvenile delinquency and "problem children" be checked. They were problem children only because their basic needs of truth and faith had not been fulfilled, and because they had no security left.

WATCHMAN-EXAMINER (Baptist) warns against organic union based on bigness and avoiding essential distinctions of truth and duties for the sake of harmony. As human beings, we are prone to think in terms of bigness, imposing titles, grandiose organizational frameworks, and wealth. It is not impressive how God again and again by-passes these to do a great work through some humble and oft-times despised channel which affects the whole course of history.

BOSTON PARISH CELEBRATES

★ St. Cyprian's, Roxbury, Mass., observed the 40th anniversary of its organization on May 4. It marked also the 35th anniversary of the rectorship of the Rev. David LeRoy Ferguson. The parish now has a membership of about 1,000. Special services of worship and thanksgiving were held on May 7th.

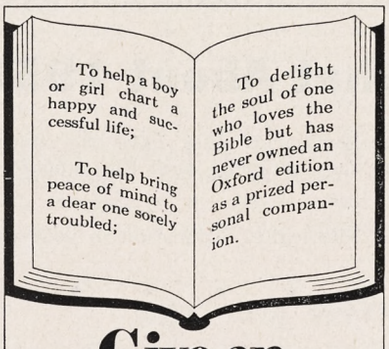
CONVOCATION OF SALINA

★ The ordination of Glenn Walker as deacon was a feature of the convocation of the district of Salina, held April 22-23 at Garden City, Kansas. He left immediately for British Guiana to be a missionary. Advance steps adopted for the district included a church school by mail; a survey to determine a long-term program of advance; and the further development of the two homes of St. Francis Boys' Homes, located at Salina and Ellsworth.

LARGE CLASS AT SEABURY

★ The largest class in the history of Seabury-Western Seminary, thirty, will be graduated on June 30. President Virgil M. Hancher of the University of Iowa will be the commencement speaker; the Rev. Walter H. Stowe, editor of the Historical Magazine and the president of the Church Historical Society, will be the alumni speaker; the newly consecrated bishop of Rochester, Dudley Stark, will speak at the alumni dinner.

RUSSIAN ORTHOROX EASTER MUSIC



★ An unusual vesper concert was held in Trinity Church, Fayetteville, N. Y. on April 30th when the pastor and choir of St Peter and St Paul's Church, Syracuse, presented excerpts from the Easter music of the Russian Orthodox Church. Portions of the litany and of evening prayer from our own Prayer Book were sung by the rector of Trinity Church, with the choir responding in Russian.

Five members of the choir were displaced persons, brought to the Syracuse area and now happily settled at the request of Church World Service. The Trinity Church rector, the Rev. E. Walter Chater, is chairman of the displaced persons committee of the diocese of Central New York.

CHAPLAINS MEET AT GRAND CANYON

★ College chaplains of Arizona conducted a four-day conference for college students at the bottom of the Grand Canyon during Easter Week. Students from the University of Arizona were on vacation; students from Arizona State College at Tempe and Phoenix College were excused from classes for the event.

Instead of going to the ordinary tourist's view-point at the south-east end of the canyon, they traveled over seventy miles of one-way dirt roads, part of them cut out of the wall of the canyon itself, to Hualpai Hilltop at the western end where they were met by a party of Supai Indians with riding and pack horses. Over half the students chose to walk down the eight-mile trail to the Indian village of Supai; those not so confident in their legs rode down, leading the pack horses laden with bedding and food.

The women in the party were quartered in a lodge and the men slept on the grass under the stars. Each student assisted in the preparation or clean-up of three meals, which had been planned especially for the trip by the department of home economics at the University of Arizona.

Activities centered around the chapel, a quonset hut which the Church flew in by helicopter several years ago. All but two Indian communicants participated in the services. In the mornings the Rev. John W. Ellison, chaplain to Episcopal students at the University of Arizona, and the Rev. Donald B. Robinson, chaplain to Episcopal students at Arizona State College, gave lectures on Christian theology, cosmology, Christology, and anthropology. In the evenings, the Rev. Canon Morton T. Kelsey, Trinity Cathedral, Phoenix, lectured on the devotional life. The afternoons were free for exploring the canyon, swimming beneath any of five water-falls (one of them 220 feet high), roaming through the Indian's fruit and nut orchards, or attending a tribal council which happened to coincide with the conference.

Although most of the party started out of the canyon at 9:00 a. m. on Sunday, the Rev. Mr. Robinson and Canon Kelsey remained behind to conduct the regular Indian worship service, but only on the condition that the Indians reserve for them the fastest horses in the village. Perhaps the agreement suffered in translation: the clergymen were provided with Rodeo ponies. As soon as Canon Kelsey put one foot in the stirrup, his horse took off and did not touch the ground again until it reached the first ford in the river, a distance of a mile and a half, at which point he dismounted and, when his guide arrived, insisted on trading horses. Although the main party had a head start of an hour and forty minutes, the two clergymen reached the rim of the canyon almost simultaneously with them, two hours later. The only explanation is that the ponies were trying to equal the helicopter's record flight of 7½ minutes for the same 8-mile trip.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

MONTREAL ANGLICANS HIT MOB ASSAULT

Anglicans of the Montreal diocese, meeting in their 100th anniversary synod, declared that the recent mob assault on a chapel of the Christian Brethren at Shawinigan Falls, Que., was "an open and shameless disregard" of fundamental human rights. The synod unanimously passed a resolution stating that it "viewed with deep concern recent happenings in this province, and especially the outbreak of violence at Shawinigan Falls."

Neither the Shawinigan Falls nor the provincial authorities provided adequate protection for the victims of the assault, the synod declared. It urged an immediate provincial investigation and "such consequent action as will provide compensation for the material damage done and will secure, without prejudice of race or creed, the free exercise of fundamental human rights."

Earlier, the delegates took a further step toward admitting women as delegates to the all-male synod. By a vote of 103 to 68 they adopted a notice of motion which would admit the women. The action will have to be ratified by a two-thirds majority at next year's synod sessions, however, before taking effect.

At a luncheon attended by 719 lay men and women, the centenary of the diocese was celebrated. Bishop T. R. Ludlow, suffragan of Newark, N. J., the featured speaker, deplored the "competition" between "rich" and "poor" churches. He criticized "rich" churches which offer large stipends to able clergymen to entice them to leave poorer parishes. "Adding to a man's salary does not add to his strength," he said.

GERMANS ADOPT PROPOSALS TO PROMOTE PEACE

Proposals intended to promote world peace were drafted by the synod of the Evangelical Church in Germany for submission to the World Council of Churches. One suggestion was that the World Council instruct the commission of the Churches on international affairs to "work out a basis for a just and lasting peace and forward the findings to competent governments."

The synod also suggested that a conciliatory spirit might be strengthened by effecting more frequent meetings between Christian political and economic leaders. In addition, it recommended that "other leading figures representing politically opposite camps be invited to meet under church auspices for free discussions."

Also proposed was the setting up of a permanent commission by the World Council of Churches to deal with peace problems.

IMPORTANT CONFERENCE IN GERMANY

Representatives of the Evangelical Church in Germany and the Roman Catholic Church met with officials of the Democratic German Republic to discuss Church-state relations in the eastern zone. The conference lasted nearly six hours. According to Church circles, the conference met in a "frank atmosphere" and the East Zone officials appeared willing to find a modus vivendi between Church and the state.

A statement issued after the conference said that the Church representatives had insisted that full freedom of religious life was the churches' "specific concern." It said the government leaders assured them that the Churches can carry on their activities on a constitutional basis, as before.

Minister President Grotewohl was reported as having said that no reprisals against clergymen of religious institutions are intended by the government despite recent sharp criticisms of East Zone "anti-religious" policies by Protestant and Roman Catholic leaders. It is expected that further conferences between government and Church leaders will take place in the near future.

OPTIMISTIC ABOUT REUNION

The Archbishop of Canterbury, in addressing the British Council of Churches, expressed himself as being optimistic about the chances for Church reunion. "We are far nearer reunion than we were twenty years ago," he said, but then added: "We are as far apart from Rome as we were 25 or even 300 years ago."

LOUIS WALLIS
Author of The Bible and Modern Belief

Professor S. L. Terrien, of the Union Theological Seminary, complains that my new book, "The Bible and Modern Belief," does not confront the central issues of the Bible in such a way as to supply a treatise on "Creation," going thence to "Redemption," thence to "Righteousness by Law," and finally dealing with "Forgiveness and Grace."

As a matter of fact, what the book undertakes to show is that the concrete and relatively limited historical framework within which the religion of the Bible evolved must be taken into account more fully by those who seek to adjust the Judeo-Christian tradition within the broader scientific and cultural framework of today.

Professor Terrien's mind is overshadowed by the practical and constructive task of helping young people to do religious work for the present generation. He is rightly preoccupied by the severe pressure of that task. But this does not release him from the obligation to be scientifically accurate in so casual a matter as a book notice. A lay reader of the notice in question could not possibly get an inkling of what the book is about. Dr. Terrien defines the book as an "attempt" to provide religious and theological instruction about what he calls the "core" of Hebraism and Christianity. But from the terms of his notice, one may find grounds for suspicion that he is attempting to deal with a subject that is beyond his technical power. This is not the first time that a critic has disposed of a book by the old method of setting up a straw man and then triumphantly knocking the straw man down.

JOHN COLE McKIM
Clergyman of Peekskill, N. Y.

It seems to me that if the proponents of various forms of legalized murder really know of any facts which support their contentions, they might easily state them with a closer approach to clarity than is exhibited in your issue of April 27. From a number of similarly defective passages, I cull the following sentence from page 8, column 1.

"It is true that the Christian Church has sanctioned existing legislation that permits capital punishment, killing in self defense, and mass slaughter in war for purposes of political security or territorial aggrandizement."

What, exactly, is here meant by "Christian Church?" Through precisely what organ of utterance, or with what penalties, does it "sanction" secular legislation? When and in what language has it "sanctioned existing legislation that permits capital punishment . . . and mass slaughter . . . for purposes of territorial aggrandizement?" What existing legislation permits mass slaughter for territorial aggrandizement?

BRITISH HUMANITARIANISM

Essays Honoring Frank J. Klingberg

Edited by SAMUEL CLYDE McCULLOCH

The copy, $4
Beautifully Printed and cloth bound

THIS VOLUME of essays, dedicated to Professor Frank J. Klingberg, has been written by his doctoral students as a testimonial of their regard for a sympathetic and stimulating teacher, a great scholar, and a fine administrator, who is retiring after serving the University of California, Los Angeles, with effectiveness and distinction for thirty-three years.

The essays devote their attention to the field of British humanitarianism, not only because it represents Dr. Klingberg's major interest, but also because unity of subject makes a more solid contribution. The subjects range geographically and chronologically, but keep within the framework of the British Empire. . . .

Although the essays are widely dispersed through the field of British humanitarianism, there are many vistas yet unexplored. Professor Klingberg's pioneer work in this field has marked trails and set signposts for the world of scholarship. — From the Editor's Introduction.

STORY OF THE WEEK

Church and War Conference Is Held in Detroit

Hope Is In Individuals and Small Groups Rather Than Official Churches

By W. B. SPOFFORD JR.

★ Expressing little faith in Christian testimony against war "by the pronouncements of bishops or of synods or conferences or conventions," Clarence Pickett, honorary secretary of the American Friends Service Committee, told some 400 delegates to the Conference on the Church and War, meeting in Detroit, May 8-11, that small groups of Christians, renouncing war as incompatible with their faith, should serve as "constant irritants to the smug and sometimes casual attitude of the majority of church members."

Sponsored by seventeen unofficial church peace organizations, including the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship, the three-day conference met under the leadership of the Rev. Dr. Albert Edward Day, Methodist pastor of Baltimore, to mark out the theological basis for Christian resistance to war, the social and political implications of that resistance, and what steps Christians must take to make that resistance effective.

Leading speakers at the conference included Prof. Robert C. Calhoun of the Yale Divinity School; the Rev. Henry Hitt Crane, pastor of the Central Methodist Church, Detroit; Dean Walter G. Muelder of the Boston University School of Theology; Prof. Walter M. Horton of the Oberlin School of Theology, and Dr. Culbert G. Rutenber of the Eastern Baptist Seminary.

In speaking of the role of the individual and the small group within the Churches, Mr. Pickett said: "In these times of uncertainty, of fear, of the assertion of unprecedented power, those who play the role of the inner fellowship of the Church have laid upon them more extensive responsibilities. There is almost no one in this country who can absolve himself from the influence of large-scale military preparation by our country in the economic life of America. Nor must he stand aside and only hurl the critic's ban at those in public office who must face the increasing tendency to divide the world into two camps and the increased feeling that only armed force under such circumstances will be effective.

"It may be that the Pope could be envisaged as ordering all Catholic churches to oppose war but even he with his great power could not control the individual's attitude. Much less can the ecclesiastical authorities of the Protestant Churches accomplish what is needed. A saving remnant of committed individuals, supporting each other in times of doubt and difficulty, fully expecting to suffer for their convictions, kindles so that their influence gradually permeates the large membership of the Church in which they belong —this is the true Church of Christ."

In one of the study documents prepared for the conference, Prof. Pitirim A. Sorokin of the Harvard department of sociology called on the Churches to make an unequivocal break with modern war which he described as "the greatest possible evil that can befall mankind." Stating that history may be giving the Churches a last chance to revitalize and re-spiritualize, the famed sociologist added that a democracy or communist state "that kills millions of innocent people ceases to be a democracy or communism and simply becomes 'Murder, Incorporated'."

Theological Basis

In another study paper, Prof. Horton declared that the Churches must speak to a divided world "arousing a sense of common human danger," the common enemy of both East and West, "that ghastly menace, total war." Citing the development of fifth columns and psychological warfare, Dr. Horton claims that "methods of fighting are now undergoing one of the greatest revolutions of all time." In view of these developments, he said, Christians can exert political pressure and effect social change non-violently even in the face of military force. "The story of Christian resistance under persecution, from the stoning of Stephen to the most modern trials of strength with totalitarian states is full of evidence that determined and disciplined groups willing to suffer for a believed truth are really formidable adversaries to subdue."

In presenting the issues involved in the theological basis of pacifism, Prof. Calbert Rutenber scored as "nothing but heresy" the theory that "when

WORLD PACIFIST CONFERENCE

By JOHN NEVIN SAYRE
Clergyman of the Episcopal Church

★ The world pacifist meeting held in India last December was a signal of hope which came at the end of a half century marked by more extreme violence than any other fifty years in history. There is encouragement in the fact that despite this violence pacifism is becoming global. To India went men and women of peace from east, west, north, and south to share ideas and experience as to how religious pacifism can so order itself as to lead the nations away from war and toward cooperation in building a world community for the one human family. The non-violence of Gandhian Hinduism, the conscientious objection of pacifist Christianity and the passivity of Asiatic Buddism were represented in this meeting.

It was also a sign of hope that this conference occurred in a sub-continent that had been set free from imperialism in our time and that the pacifism of Gandhi and the pacifically minded socialism of the British Labor Party had played dominant roles in bringing this about peacefully. So instead of war devastated cities, you find the Republic of India trying to fit itself into the undamaged buildings of grandeur that empire has vacated to the new tenant. And on the Indian side, they have not yet troubled to change the names of such streets as "Curzon Road," where I stayed in New Delhi. The good will now existing between Indians and Britishers is indicative of the fact that as soon as the venomous propaganda of two opposing national interests is removed, the people of the two nationalities do not exhibit serious hostility toward each other.

WILLIAM K. RUSSELL
President of the E.P.F.

Again, to us pacifists of the west it was something out of this world to be guests of honor at a reception given by the Governor General of India in the super-magnificence of Government House in New Delhi. As we ascended the marble staircase lined on both sides by palace guards in gorgeous livery, I felt like Cinderella at the ball. Mixing around in the dazzling reception hall in the medley of radical pacifists and the heads of a new power state, I wondered, "Is pacifism getting on in the world?" Or, would the clock of the world strike twelve and send Cinderella scurrying back to her mice and pumpkin and poverty?

Gandhi and Christ

The world pacifist meeting was valuable as an agent of cross fertilization, a means whereby ties of personal trust, mutual encouragement, and future cooperation were set up. The conference sessions occupied two weeks and there was an interval of a fortnight between them during which those of us who had come from abroad traveled in small groups to various cities where we were entertained in the homes of Indian families. There were some large public meetings in Calcutta and other places. The number of conference members totaled 122 of whom 67 had come from 33 countries outside of Indian and 36 belonged to the Fellowship of Reconciliation. Unfortunately there were no persons present from Russia or South America and only 3 from Pakistan of whom only one was a Moslem. Most of the sessions at Sevagram were presided over by Dr. Rajendra Prasad, president of the Indian National Assembly, who a few weeks later was elected president of the Republic of India. Pandit Nehru addressed the conference on its last day.

In general, the conference meetings proved to be more of a forum for speech making than a seed bed of creative group thinking. Much was said about Gandhi's contribution to peace but very little about Christ's. There was a lot of oratory in favor of decentralism and against imperialism but little real willingness to consider the possibility of getting peace through world government or functional agencies of the United Nations. The conference lacked effective leadership and advance planning such as might possibly have avoided the prodigious waste of its valuable time on declamation. No steering committee should have been guilty of scheduling 20 speakers at a single afternoon meeting in Calcutta, an offense which was almost repeated on Christmas afternoon at Sevagram.

Even when the conference did attempt in the final week to break up into groups small enough for real discussion it tackled too many world problems. There was not time enough to come to grips with the complex issues involved. The conference fell between the two stools of an outward fanfare of publicity — although the press was excluded from most of the sessions—and then not having any adequate program of pacifism which marked an advance in pacifist thinking on which it could unite and which it could set before the world at this critical hour of world crisis.

Suffering Service

I am convinced that neither Gandhi nor Dick Sheppard nor George Lansbury nor Gerald Heard have evolved techniques that can be learned and applied to world pacifism as a universal pattern. The differences of human beings and conditioning of national cultures are too profound. For example, Gandhi was able to ride the tiger of Indian nationalism so as to rally to his standard of non-violent non-cooperation hundreds of thousands of Indians in a struggle for emancipation from the British Raj. But today there seem to be only a handful of his followers who will oppose the militarism of their own Indian government or attempt to settle the mounting tension between India and Pakistan by methods of non-violence. Indian pacifists are now up against a situation which western pacifists have had to confront all along—namely, "Are you willing to lose your influence by joining the unpopular pacifist minority which cleaves to the way of love and non-violence in all cases?"

Of course, the fundamental principles of love, of truth, of suffering service are one in all nations and for all men. But the programs and techniques by which these principles are to be translated into practical action do differ according to national environment and changing circumstances. The art of pacifism consists in so living the principles that they attract one's neighbors. Thus can the stream of world pacifism be fed from innumerable native rivulets of peace.

BISHOP BOYNTON ELECTED IN NEW YORK

★ Bishop Charles F. Boynton of Puerto Rico was elected Suffragan Bishop of New York on May 9th on the second ballot. There were 241 clerical and 149½ lay votes cast on the second ballot, with 121 clerical and 75 lay votes required to elect. Bishop Boynton got 128 clerical and 80 lay votes. On the first ballot he received the same number of clerical votes but only 65 lay votes. Second in the voting was the Rev. Samuel Shoemaker who got 90 clerical and 51½ lay votes on the second ballot.

Bishop Gilbert, presiding at his final convention, said that he would mark the 20th anniversary of his consecration on October 28 when he will have completed 48 years in the ministry, all in the diocese of New York. Bishop Donegan, coadjutor, told the delegates that a service of thanksgiving for the ministry of the retiring Bishop will be held on that day in the cathedral, with a public dinner in his honor on October 29th.

NORTH DAKOTA CHURCH HAS ANNIVERSARY

★ Probably the first church services held in what is now Williams County, North Dakota, were held at Fort Union more than 100 years ago. The fort was situated a short distance east of the boundary line between North Dakota and Montana, and the managers who were in charge of the fort were Englishmen, who were Church of England men. Fort Union was not a government military post but was the largest trading post west of St. Louis, one hundred years ago, situated as it was at the junction of the Missouri and Yellowstone rivers. Fort Buford, in Williams County, was established by the war department as a military post in 1866 and continued to be so until it was abandoned in 1895. There were regular Episcopal services held at Fort Buford, and there was a church building at the fort. The prayer books and hymnals were left in the church building after the fort was abandoned, some of the books having been turned over to the members of the Episcopal Church in Williston after the establishment of St. Peter's Church there.

From the date of the abandonment of the military post at Fort Buford, it is probable that there were no regular Episcopal Church services held in the county until 1900, though various bishops of the Church visited Williston from time to time and a few clergy held occasional services. There is no official record of these visitations until 1900. In April, 1900 on one of the visitations of Bishop S. C. Edsell of North Dakota, it was decided to establish an Episcopal Church in Williston, and on April 27, 1900 the Church was formally established. There is a complete report of that meeting in the Church register. The only surviving member of this meeting is W. D. Overson, honorary warden of the church.

Bishop Atwill was the preacher at the anniversary service April 30. The Rev. William E. Powell is vicar.

ASK NEW APPROACH TO SOVIETS

★ The report of the Quakers on approaches to the Soviet Union was widely used by discussion groups in other churches, including many Episcopal churches. There will be interest therefore in a new statement of the Friends committee on national legislation, issued May 5, which states that American relations with the USSR must be treated "as a problem to be solved rather than as a combat to be won or lost." The committee condemns "the present totalitarianism and the ruthlessness" of the Soviet government and called on the U. S. "to take the moral initiative in seeking to combat the idea that war is inevitable."

The Quaker group declared that the present international crisis was "partly a reflection of the deep fears which each country has of the other's policies and intentions" and appealed for "a sincere and thorough effort to reduce these fears." "We call," the statement said, "for prophetic leadership by the United States in an all-out effort for universal disarmament. The United States should seek new and creative ways to break the present deadlock over the control of atomic energy. The atomic bomb is not a police weapon. The goal should be the complete outlawry of the atom bomb and weapons of mass destruction, and the utilization of atomic energy for peaceful and creative purposes."

At the same time, the Quaker body reiterated its "determined opposition to universal military training, to the selective service system, to the increasing militarization of America through military training in the schools, to the military control of research and atomic development, to the military domination of American foreign policy and to the large proportion of federal expenditures which go for military purposes."

BETHLEHEM HOLDS CONVENTION

★ The convention of the diocese of Bethlehem was held at Hazleton, Pa., May 9-10, with Mrs. Harry E. Brown, delegate from Tunkhannock, again blowing out the fuses. It was the second time she has been a deputy and on both occasions was the only woman to serve. The first time, at a convention in Reading, the lights went out. This year, while she was seated at the head table at the convention dinner, the lights again went out. All of which prompted Bishop Sterrett to say that if Mrs. Brown is to represent the Tunkhannock church a third time she must guarantee not to put out lights.

Bishop Sterrett made a strong plea for support of the Federal Council of Churches, the objective of which "has been to emphasize Christian principles and to urge their courageous application to the conditions under which we live, with scrupulous care to avoid any commitment either to partisan politics or to any schemes or methods about which honest Americans greatly differ."

The budget was increased and is now $97,000.

CONVENTION OF WASHINGTON

★ A diocesan service of rededication, attended by men and women of parishes and missions, opened the convention of the diocese of Washington on May 7. The service was held at Washington Cathedral, with Bishop Dun preaching.

Highlights of the convention the following day, meeting at St. John's, Norwood parish, was an address by Canon Richard Williams on social service work in the diocese, and one by Col. Joseph S. Harbison on the present situation in Japan.

CLERGY JOIN IN ORDINATION

★ Priests and ministers of other Churches joined with the Episcopal clergy and Bishop Hall of New Hampshire when he laid his hands on the head of the Rev. Marc Anton Nocerino to make him a "priest in the Church of God" in Grace Church, Manchester, N. H., on April 25. They were Rev. John C. Tierney of Sanbornville; Joseph Soltysiak of the Polish National Catholic Church of Manchester; Robert H. Dunn of Portsmouth, and the widely acclaimed rector of the significant film "Lost Boundaries"; John Hendrickson of the Westminster Presbyterian Church, Manchester, and president of the Manchester Federation of Churches; Whitney S. K. Yeaple, executive secretary of the N. H. Council of Churches, and a Congregational minister; E. G. Triantafyllides of St. George's Greek Orthodox Church, Manchester; Bradford Young, rector of Grace Church; Harold Kocher of Keene, and Elsom Eldridge of Nashua, all in New Hampshire. A Lutheran and a Methodist minister were prevented at the last minute from taking part. Ministers of other local churches invited but who felt unable by their own rules to be present were the Roman Catholic, Russian Orthodox (patriarchal), and Ukrainian Uniat.

A service note by Mr. Young explained that "the participation of ministers of other Churches helps to emphasize the intention of the Episcopal Church (and most other Churches) to ordain its ministers to the universal ministry in the Church of God, rather than only to that of its own particular denomination. In the present fragmented state of the Church universal, no fragment, Orthodox, Roman Catholic, or Protestant, has a ministry officially accepted by every other part. But God has manifestly blessed all these ministries, which are thus recognized by him, and some day according to his will they will all by mutual accommodation and recognition be reunited in one flock under one shepherd, Jesus Christ our Lord."

The service, which was held in the evening in order to make possible the attendance of men and business women, was crowded by people of the parish and community most of whom received the holy communion in accordance with the invitation to "communicants of any Church of Christ." They also responded to the note in the calendar that "ordination to the priesthood is by the bishop acting for and with the priests and people of the Church of God. Every baptized person therefore has a part in this service and is asked to join heartily in the hymns, responses and prayers."

Although this is by no means the first time ministers of other communions have laid their hands on ordinands to the priesthood in company with the bishop and his own clergy, it is believed to have included an unusually wide representation of Christendom in a visibly ecumenical ordination.

CENTRAL NEW YORK CONSIDERS REPORT

★ The survey of the diocese, made last year by Prof. William V. Dennis, was the chief matter before the convention of the diocese, held May 9-10 at Calvary, Utica. The report was released last fall and since then has been a matter of study by various groups in the diocese.

A proposal to permit women to serve on vestries was decisively beaten by a vote of 134 to 91.

A record breaking budget of $198,200 was approved after little discussion.

The Rev. Stanley Gasel of Utica successfully piloted through a definition of the word "communicant." In part it says that a person who makes his communion at least once a year and supports his church qualifies. No attempt was made to define "support."

NEARLY A MILLION SHORT OF GOAL

★ Russell E. Dill, treasurer of the National Council, reported on April 27 that $4,151,198 had been pledged for the program of the national Church. Of this amount, $3,225,832 was reported after the canvass last fall, and $925,366 pledged as a result of the March appeal. The goal set by General Convention was $4,932,507.

BISHOP LUDLOW HITS SMEAR CAMPAIGNS

★ Smear campaigns "are giving the Communists the initiative in the war of nerves," according to Bishop Ludlow, suffragan of Newark. Speaking at the diocesan convention, held at Trinity Cathedral, May 10, he denounced Communism as "a growing menace to religion," but warned that "we are playing into the hands of the Communists when we resort to smear campaigns and begin suspecting our neighbors. The more McCarthys we have the greater the danger. They succeed by reason of our fear and failure rather than by their own worth."

YOUNG ADULTS DISCUSSED AT PACIFIC SYNOD

★ There are more than five hundred organized groups of young adults in the Episcopal Church, of which 130 are in the eighth province. Most of these groups are of post-war origin, and are open to both married and single persons, who meet monthly or twice a month on week-days in parish houses. This information was given to the May meeting of the synod of the province of the Pacific, which at its 1949 meeting had requested that a survey be undertaken of Church work among young adults. Further studies are being made of the organization and program of these groups, of their achievements and problems encountered with a view to the compilation of a handbook by the National Council's department of Christian education, offering guidance to the clergy and lay leaders who are concerned for the most adequate functioning of young adult groups.

Reasons for the survey were reviewed by the Rev. A. Ronald Merrix, in presenting an interim report to the synod. First was the fact that, among hundreds of thousands of young men and women who had established new homes in the west, were Episcopalians who had joined young adult organizations of other churches because there was no satisfying program for them in their own church. Second, was the discovery that many showed a deeper awareness of the value and need of religion, as a result of their wartime experiences, yet had expressed dissatisfaction with institutional religion as they knew it. A third factor was the recognition that, humanly speaking, Christianity had been launched as a religious movement of young adults by young adults. Jesus was "about thirty years of age" when he began his ministry. Presumably, his disciples, and some of those who accompanied them, both men and women, were about the same age. Fourth, the Church in this post-war period needed desperately the adventurous spirit of dedicated young adults who could pioneer in finding new ways for a new age. "The launching of the Church's new parent-parish program of Christian education clinches everything," Mr. Merrix stated. "The Episcopal Church must develop plans for enlisting more young adults in its organized life and work. They can be led in the way of continuing their own Christian education and of participating actively in the religious education of their children. They may discover the necessity of conversion and of life-commitment to Christ and his cause."

WILLIAM H. MARMION
E.P.F. Chairman in IV Province

This report followed a statistical survey of religious educational progress in the province, prepared by the dean, Richard S. Watson of St. Mark's Cathedral, Seattle, and chairman of the provincial department of Christian education.

The synod met at Stockton, May 2-4, in conjunction with meetings of the provincial Woman's Auxiliary and the youth commission. Delegates were present from twelve western dioceses and districts, and also from Alaska and Honolulu.

BISHOP SCARLETT HAS ANNIVERSARY

★ Bishop Scarlett of Missouri was honored with two special events at the convention of the diocese held at Christ Church Cathedral, May 2-3. There was a service at the cathedral marking the 20th anniversary of his consecration, with Bishop Tucker of Ohio and Prof. Reinhold Niebuhr of General Seminary the speakers. Earlier that day the annual convention dinner took the form of a testimonial affair. Warden Cecil C. Pangman of St. Michael and St. George presented the Bishop with testimonials from various parishes; the Rev. W. W. S. Hohenschild of University City, acting for the clergy, presented him with a television set; Ethan Shepley of the cathedral parish presented him with a watch from 400 vestrymen of the diocese.

At the convention Bishop Scarlett asked for a coadjutor who will be elected at a special convention in November. The standing committee is to receive nominations, augmented by Mrs. Clark C. Bland, Mrs. William C. Sinker, the Rev. Ned Cole Jr. and Chester Brewer.

IOWA CONVENTION AT KEOKUK

★ Bishop Gordon V. Smith presided at his first convention which was held May 9-10 at St. John's, Keokuk, which is celebrating its 100th anniversary this year. The business was routine.

The Church and War

THE conference on the Church and war held in Detroit from May 8th through May 11th could be historic and a turning point in the outlook and determination of the Christian Church really to lead into the way of peace. For many months, nearly a year, a national committee and a smaller planning committee have been at work. Thoughtful preparatory papers were written on the theological background, the political and social background, and the day-to-day practical expression of Christian peace action. The conference presented a call which we in the Church may not in conscience ignore.

It is not the function of the Church to dictate a state policy, but it must act as a sign post to show the way to truth, and the Church has every right to say what the state ought to do. It cannot blindly follow what the state dictates, for frequently states do wrong. And to the Church, we believe, is given a point of view with regard to war to which she must adhere unswervingly. Back of our problem is the fear of aggression, of war. We have been told ad nauseum, "If our civilization is to be saved . . . if the world is not going to crash . . . if the human race is not to perish . . ." And the Church and most individuals have succumbed.

Some years ago, maybe twenty, a little book was written on public and private morality, and it contrasted the morality of the individual, which is fairly high, and the morality of the state, which is lamentably low. This continues to be a most disturbing phenomenon of our time. The man who in private life is decent, truthful, loyal, and kind, as a member of society acting corporately becomes hypocritical, false, brutal, and frequently treacherous. There is apparently one code for the individual and another for the community. The community may act morally, or it may not, as circumstances or necessity dictates, but it recognizes no imperative obligation to act morally and very frequently fails to do so.

No plea of expediency excuses the conscience of the individual. Every man in his heart believes, "He has shown thee, O man, what is good," and knows what good is and acknowledges that he ought to follow it and means to do so. When that individual morality stems from Christ's law of love and unselfishness, it is the most difficult of all laws to fulfill, but it is the most glorious of laws when practiced.

No one of us is ever excused for doing wrong to some one else to save himself. The brother who throws his brother overboard to lighten the raft stands in the public mind condemned. How different this is with nations. They frequently do wrong, and the public condones that wrong, if they do it to save themselves. Selfishness passes unchallenged in state policy, and we can apply any test we like in regard to armaments, money values, tariffs, immigration, communication, and we shall find that no state in the world recognizes any duty except to itself. The paramount principle which governs any state today is selfishness, pure and simple. States frequently tell lies; they ignore signatures; they repudiate treaties; they by-pass constituted international organizations, for they live to no law but expediency.

But the morality of Jesus, as we find it in the gospel, was for the state as well as for the individual. One duty of the Church is plain. It must condemn war and armaments. The Church must stand out boldly against aggression and force, as being un-Christian. It should not touch war or be party to it in any form; it should resist war with every power at its disposal. The Christian Church's tolerance of the state morality has been and is its great apostasy.

The need and call are for renewal—renewal of the Christian mind and a recognition of an all-out commitment to the way of Jesus. For the followers of Christ, this way is peace and not war, and Jesus gave dramatic emphasis to it when he chose

ALMIGHTY GOD, from whom all thoughts of truth and peace proceed; Guide, we pray thee, with thy strong and peaceful wisdom, those who take counsel for the nations of the earth in the United Nations. And that we may worthily support them, deliver all thy people from selfishness and false ambitions. Grant that we may prepare our minds through study, our hearts through compassion and our souls through prayer and sacrament for a new world in which justice shall be assured to all and in which peace shall be enduring, through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

the cross on calvary. The Church need have no fear; so long as its desire is for love and unselfishness among the peoples of the world, its cause will in the end triumph. It is fear that is holding the Church back from doing the Christian thing, and instead of being a moral force, it is timidly allowing its moral values to be overridden by secular considerations.

To follow this way involves a great responsibility of which we need not be afraid. We must follow it without worrying unduly as to what will happen next. In the life of Lord Salisbury we are told of an occasion when, as foreign secretary, at a moment of acute international crisis, that great Christian was visited by some friends who expressed their sympathy because he had to bear so great a burden of responsibility. When all but his family had left, he said, "They would have been terribly shocked if I had told them the truth —which was that I did not understand what they were talking about." The biographer continues the story thus: "He was about to start out upon a walk and was standing at the moment at the open door, looking out upon the threatening clouds of an autumn afternoon. 'I don't understand,' he reflected, 'what people mean when they talk of the burden of responsibility. I should understand if they spoke of the burden of decision.'"

Those from the Episcopal Church and other Churches who attended the Detroit conference were not many in number. They were sure that the Church in these bewildering days is not witnessing to the way of her Lord. But the wisdom of the world is against them. They urge the Church to take courage and realize that there are occasions when it is better to wade right in, in lonely witness, however bad others may think it, than to stand aside weakly and wait for the clever and wise—who are in the saddle—to ride on. As many of us see it, the function of the all-out Christian today is to assail the leaders of Church and state with noisy shouts of expostulation and exhortation, because called to lead, they do not do so. We require passionate Christians, and we have only wise referees.

There is nothing more certain than the fact that if the cause of Christ is to count and his Church to be reborn, it can only happen through death or the cross of many wounds. There must be a determined assertiveness for the way of Christ, to establish his truth in the lives of men and his peace among them. "It is the paradox of our religion," writes a very wise teacher, "that while in one aspect it is the most pacific of all religions, in another it is the most warlike. It follows a Prince of Peace, but it follows him with a sword in hand, practicing sweet reasonableness to its utmost limits, but ready also for the moment, which is sure to come, when persuasiveness takes the form of disciplined courage and the Church becomes an army 'marching to war,' every saint a potential warrior 'girded with all the armor of God'."

Christianity is not an accommodating religion. It is a challenge. The willingness to counter the opposition of the world's mind is the very breath of the Christian life. If the cross means anything, it means that. Controversy is inevitable and is already too long delayed. The need is not to popularize the Church but to renew what is now so timid a witness to the values of Jesus Christ our Lord.

His peace is the peace of a crucified and rejected Lord, who through his dark hour was unshaken in his faith and his love. It is God's peace for which we work, not Mammon's. My Peace—not as the world giveth.

Back to the Jungle

THE morbid fantasies that represent our thought climate today could have no more shocking and insenate example than the recent utterance of Herbert Hoover, calling for a scuttling of the United Nations. This is much more than sheer defeatism; in its stark ugliness it is an unabashed call to men to retrogress; to go back to the balance-of-power policies so often discredited in blood; back to the law of the jungle. Had such insidious counsel obtained at the time of the founding of this country or at the time of the civil war there would be no United States today.

To call this the utterance of an "elder statesman" is to mock that expression. Yet many, emotionally conditioned by the panic atmosphere in which we live, will take this seriously; therein lies the danger. If we are to avoid the catastrophe Hoover summons us to, the United Nations must be vastly strengthened, not weakened. His declamation is a vicious attack on the one way open to us to possible world peace. If we fail to follow that way then surely we must abandon even the "life expectancy" of three years, which Norman Cousins allows the human race if we continue at the present pace along the road of destruction. We trust that at least this frenzied notion of Hoover's will reveal to us our peril and arouse us to combat such calamitous suggestions with all the power at our command.

GIVE peace for all time, O Lord, and fill my heart and the hearts of all men everywhere with the spirit of our Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Church and Annihilation

By WILLIAM R. HUNTINGTON
Episcopal Layman of New York

THE problem of how the Church should stand in relation to war has come to involve the whole question of man's survival. Is the Church interest, in this, only in the survival of its members and friends, or in the survival of mankind as God's creation and servant? Incidentally, on what depends the Church's own survival?

There are those who say that the hydrogen bomb poses no new moral problem. This is a half-truth, and doubly dangerous because, even if it were a whole truth, the statement that no new moral problem is posed obscures the urgent duty still before us to solve the old ones. The facts are that not only must we face the old moral problem without further evasion but also we must solve the new complications that are part of the wholly new and desperate material circumstances now prevailing.

The old problem is here because, as E. B. White has said, the hydrogen bomb is but the pea-shooter come home to roost. If it is wrong to use the bomb is was wrong to use the pea-shooter. But, say the good Christian non-pacifists, the Sermon-on-the-Mount to the contrary not withstanding, there has been historically much noble and fruitful use of the pea-shooter, and so there is no reason why we should change our principles of practice. This answer if insufficient. It was relatively easy to justify the sword and the pea-shooter and the rifle, and many have found it easy even to excuse the cremation of thousands of Germans and Japanese in the mass bombings of the forties; but now one of the strangest devices of logic, the reductio ad absurdum, is being used against man's rationalizing stubbornness and wickedness and forces him to look afresh at his pea-shooter morality. The H-bomb is the reductio ad absurdum of the use of force to reach agreement and policy and it now becomes a practical question of obedience to the Sermon-on-the-Mount or else.

The old eye-for-eye and tooth-for-tooth concept, specifically dismissed by Christ, takes on a new menacing importance as it becomes the sole justification invoked for modern weapons. With side-arms or even cannon it is possible to distinguish a defensive use which is wholly directed towards stopping or restraining attack. Not so with bacteriological warfare or hydrogen bombs. But, for instance, the executive committee of the Federal Council of Churches, on March 22, 1950, after "soul-searching" debate, to quote the New York Times, comes out with a compromise, of which one sorry half says that some support the attempt to construct the new weapon "believing that our people and the other free societies should not be left without the means of defense through the threat of retaliation." Defense through the threat of retaliation—vengeance and the threat of vengeance—these are not new moral problems, but is it not a new sin to take these special prerogatives of God as justification alone for our unthinkable schemes for mass-murder? And this is now also a reductio ad absurdum, for the units are no longer an eye and a tooth but whole communities, cities, ten-million-or-so individual human lives at once perhaps. Or the whole planet.

Ultimate Absurdity

HERE is the ultimate absurdity. Annihilation, having become not only a premise of logic but a possibility clearly to be seen ahead on our present reckless road, is considered seriously as a riskable alternative. This is the new immorality —our blind vanity and arrogance in refusing to humble our individual wills before even the possibility of wiping out all of God's work in us. Man he created in his own image, for his own purpose, part of which is the bold concept of giving this creation a will of its own. With this joker we can destroy ourselves if we want to, if we have lost confidence in God's faith in the outcome of the experiment. But how pathetic and disappointing.

To save the principles he stood for as well as to save his enemies, Christ died himself. He did not try or even threaten to kill off all his enemies, much less use his divine power to doom the whole world if they did not immediately repent.

In contrast, look at ourselves today. The president of one of our largest and most important institutions of learning said recently: "Far better risk a war of possible annihilation than grasp a peace which would be the certain extinction of free man's ideas and ideals." There are two important irresponsibilities here. One is that, although the statement might sound as if it meant only self-annihilation—and in that sense, in Christ's sense, it could be in part a good statement—it clearly contemplates not Christian, loving, physical submission but war in the total modern sense with the objective of turning any unavoidable annihilation to affect the enemy; and, in the light of the modern weapons, it thus inevitably embraces with complete abandon the possibility of total annihilation.

The second irresponsibility is in the use of the word "certain." Here is a serious lapse of faith in God and man. A curious paradox moreover is used to couch the issue. Evidently, in the event of the annihilation of only the protagonists of free man's ideals, there is assumed to be a chance of the survival of the ideals, whereas, a "peace" on any supposedly compromise terms would mean their "certain extinction." But such a survival would only be possible because of the immortality of the ideals as things of spirit which cannot be overcome by any physical means. This very immortality refutes the word "certain" and makes the whole statement basically fallacious unless we believe all live men are weak and corrupt in character and can only be steadfast and loyal to their ideals when they dominate physically those who oppose those ideals.

The ideals are indestructible by force. They will certainly live even if all their present champions are wiped out. Would they not prosper even more if, in the face of no matter what physical persecution, they were upheld by these champions with patience, with disarming non-violence, and with a determination to win over all men to their recognition based on the Christian and democratic faith that man in the long run responds to right more than might?

The Church is the communion of Christ's followers on earth. Its power, its message, and its tradition lie in its being an open communion, knowing no boundaries wherever men dwell, speaking to all men, welcoming all men. It has grievously erred in the past in allowing itself to be identified with parties and nations. In spite of this contradiction, it has survived, though weakly, because neither the physical nor the conscious unity of the world neighborhood had developed to a critical point. Now that point has been reached and the Church is challenged to fulfill its role as the world-wide moral party, so to speak. If it cannot meet that challenge, what future has it except, in the case of man's survival anyway, as an antique, a curiosity of history, a subject for doctors' theses and for scholars' and artists' research? Christianity would live no matter what, and in that the Church might be reborn, but it would not be the present Church.

Role of Church

WHAT does the Church's world role call for now? First, a forthright standing for the good of the whole community, manifesting a loving concern for all the brotherhood of men. Second, a position, therefore, in relation to world warfare (which in any outbreak now threatens the whole community with abominable if not final disaster) above the contestants, denouncing unequivocally resort to world warfare for any reason whatever, and calling imperatively for an approach to a reconciliation of worldly conflicts and differences through mediation of law. The Church's role in the world is like that of the parish priest in his smaller community. He must have moral care for all of his flock. He must throw the whole resources of his person into keeping them from destroying themselves and each other in mortal civil conflict. He must remain the symbol, medium, spokesman, and agent of God's love for all the persons in the flock, of the priority of this love and of their brotherhood over all other matters in their relationships.

The conference on the Church and war in Detroit last week was planned by those who believe the Church can rise to play its world role, can be a voice above the conflict calling to that which will respond in all men. To play this role, to make this call, the Church must see the issue much more clearly than it did at Amsterdam. It therefore must now, with a persistent determination that will not rest until the goal is reached, seek to resolve its doubts and uncertainties and come to a precise definition of its faith and purpose in the question of peace and war. A position confessing disunity and uncertainty does not live up to what the world has a right to expect from the Church, and destroys any chance the Church has of being morally effective in the crisis. The planners of the conference believe the Church can come to a oneness of mind if it searches boldly. They look to the conference to take the initiative in this search not by reason of any special wisdom of its own but in the faith that if its findings point towards truth others will lead further, and the whole Church will thus come into the power to speak. The search must begin, for if the voice is not heard in the world soon, there may be nothing but the silence of death.

THE INCARNATION

THE Incarnation means nearness—the nearness of strength to weakness, of wisdom to ignorance, of wealth to poverty, of purity to uncleanness, of God to man. —BISHOP BRENT

Peace--A State or a Spirit

By SHELTON HALE BISHOP
Rector of St. Philip's, New York

THOSE who love peace and work for peace are not always able to define for others what it really is that possesses them. Most of us have had the experience of attempting to make the nature of our dedication clear and being certain that we had failed. Peace cannot be argued. It can only be lived.

Even to say that creates something of a dilemma. There are two "horus" (di-lemma) or two phases of peace that are not always recognized. Peace is a state, and peace is a spirit. To put it that way is almost to confound. It certainly is not a convincing way to describe what confuses so many.

It may clarify the thinking of those who try to give a reason for the faith that is in them if we explore the implications of these two words and of some of the ideas conveyed in the implications. We use the word "state" commonly to mean "a settled condition." "The state of society" and "our state of mind" are two frequently used phrases, and in general, we know what they mean. Certain things have become organized, or disorganized. Certain things have been eliminated, or added. There has been a process and a goal. The process has been more or less completed and the goal at least partially attained. This is a state.

For many people this is a sufficient objective. They just want to arrive. Perhaps a state of mind is their goal. Certain things become settled. A not-too-disturbing condition has been reached by a process of elimination. They hope for little more. As a matter of fact, careful examination might reveal that this represents the hope of many an institution, many a home, and many a life. It is as far as many want to go. It is as far as many think it is possible to go when multitudes must be considered.

Manifestly this appears to govern such an organization, for instance, as the United Nations. It is understandable. No matter how ideal the goal of the United Nations may seem or may at first have seemed to be, it is only the best possible goal in a complicated and over-strained world situation. It is the most serious and the most stupendous effort to create "a state of peace" in the world. It can probably undertake only to promote agreements that are the mechanics for such a state. It is a step, a logical and necessary step. The doubt that arises in the minds of so many throughout the world lies in the fear that the first step will bog down the ultimate goal toward which men have come to look, that something static will supplant something creative. Prostitution of creative goodwill into a mode of international agreement partly superimposed by the majority vote of a few representatives motivated by national interests can lead not only to the impossibility of a second step but to the failure at long last of the first.

This is to face the facts of experience. "A state of mind" may not be the most auspicious eventuality. To work for a state of peace that really sees only the elimination of strife, armed or bitter political strife that leads to militarization, may be totally unrealistic in terms of ultimate human goals.

This raises the question, of course, as to whether we work for ultimate human goals, or who works for ultimate human goals. Is that the role of an organization? Can we only organize for temporary or immediate goals, and hope that ultimate goals will emerge for a few, for a minority, out of the organized effort?

Limited Horizons

MORE of us are involved in the dilemma that peace projects than we know. Too many—I can't say "of us"—are willing to settle for a "state of peace." It would seem to be near to the coming of the Kingdom in this torn world of which we all are a part if strife were to be wholly eliminated among nations. This is a state most to be hoped for. How is it arrived at? Even if it became a reality, we should still have to ask that question. That is what an armed truce is—a state of peace without strife. To work for that, without calling it that, constitutes the limit to the horizon of many people.

Secretly people have the unconscious reaction that such a state is as far as they can go, as far as the world can go. Their thoughts are mundane. But psychologically and spiritually they are undercut. They know peace is a spirit. To live in a home or in a family where an unsigned agreement was extant to have no open strife would be next to intolerable, and within limits less preferable than an occasional exchange with the understanding that brought an interim.

Strife is a spirit, and is only counteracted truly by the spirit of peace. There is a state of strife but that is overcome not by "a state of peace" but by the spirit of peace. How pervasive and transforming that can be! It is the only adequate counteracting agent to strife, the spirit and the state. But this is what many do not see. They do not trust the spirit to transform. They trust rather to organization. If they trust spirit, they prefer to have it organized. They believe that it must inevitably and always be organized. To organize peace is like organizing love. Marriage is not an organization. The family may be an institution, but it is not conceived of as such by those who truly love and live in happiness and peace. To organize for peace is a misnomer, but an understandable one. We can only create a fellowship for peace. Is a fellowship of nations beyond the range of human imagination? It is not beyond Christ's. It takes imagination to envision peace anyway. The Peace of God, the only true peace there is, comes through the Spirit of Christ. It is impossible to think of Jesus Christ in terms of a state of anything, mind or peace. To have "the mind of Christ" is to have nothing static. The whole idea of state or station is that of a place or condition where you stop. This is why peace is basically a spirit, and to make it anything short of that, to work for anything short of that, except through a fellowship of men, a fellowship of nations, men and nations of kindred minds, is to stultify and make psychologically unacceptable the most earnest efforts in that direction.

The Church could be the greatest proponent of peace in the world. It should be. It is by genius. Let it be by action!

Things Which Belong To Our Peace

By J. R. YUNGBLUT
Rector of St. Thomas, Terrace Park, Ohio

H. A. OVERSTREET has an arresting word in "The Mature Mind": "Newspapers have developed what might be called a vested interest in catastrophe . . . When we lay our nickels and dimes on the line for our daily dose of vicarious catastrophe and conflict it is almost as though we were paying the newspapers for getting us ready to commit human suicide." So the same edition of a morning paper blazoned in headlines on the first page, "U. S. Arms Cut Below Safety Point, Eisenhower Says . . . Weakness As Bad As War Until Others Cut Down Too" and relegated to page 16 the statement of a distinguished member of the British Atomic Scientists Association, Dr. G. O. Jones of Oxford: "No one pretends that the development of hydrogen bombs can be anything but a war measure—no new peacetime blessings are promised to salve the consciences of scientists and the public. And if I, personally, am asked to help in developing a super-bomb I shall say, 'No, I am sorry, it is too disgusting'."

The newspapers may have a vested interest in catastrophe, or at least in the threat of catastrophe. But all of us, including the publishers of newspapers, when we are honest with ourselves, have a still more deeply vested interest in peace. The real trouble is that we do not agree as to the "things which belong to our peace." At San Francisco a few years ago we professed our faith in the "collective security" of the United Nations. We still give lip service to that idea. But actually the foreign policy of this country indicates that our leaders are placing their real confidence in the Atlantic Pact and still more specifically in our military might, our stockpile of atomic weapons, and the proposed hydrogen bomb. It is openly advocated in many quarters that these are precisely the things which belong to our peace, which alone can hold Russia in check and prevent war. And many of those who take this position are sincere Christians. Meantime, there is another group of Christians who believe that, so far from belonging to our peace, these are the very things which threaten our peace.

Those who have placed their confidence in the Atlantic Pact and in our atomic weapons are now confronted by a radically changed world picture. In an article entitled "Break-up of the Two-Power World" in the April "Atlantic," Walter Lippmann lists six developments "of critical significance:"

"The first is that the American monopoly of atomic weapons ended sooner than the State Department, the Pentagon, and the Congress and the public expected. The second is that Mao Tse-Tung has succeeded in capturing the leadership of the Chinese revolution in the whole of continental China. The third is that in Southern Asia the British Empire and the Dutch Empire have been dissolved and have been succeeded by the independent Asiatic states of India, Pakistan, and Indonesia. The fourth is that in the rich colonial area of Southeast Asia, in Indo-China, Malaya, and Burma, there are civil war and anarchy because the authority and power of the European empires have been undermined, but no native independent states capable of governing themselves have emerged. The fifth is the secession of Marshal Tito from the Soviet orbit in Eastern Europe and the tendency of Titoism to spread to Poland, Bulgaria, Hungary and Czechoslovakia. The sixth is the revival of Germany as a power in Europe."

Two Worlds

IT has been taken as axiomatic that the world had aligned itself in two camps, the one directed from Moscow and the other from Washington, and that all other powers must of necessity become part of one of these two coalitions. But the last five developments indicated above have interfered with rather than furthered the organization of the world into two great alliances. In each case one or both of the world powers has lost control in an important region, and there is no certainty at present that where one has lost out the other will gain the advantage. The tendency is toward national independence and neutrality. This fact together with the first development, namely possession by Russia of an atomic weapon, certainly alters the military picture. We who have promised other countries protection from invasion by the Red armies through our atomic weapons have nothing now to offer in defense against the atomic weapons of Russia. Henceforth they are likely to be as anxious to eschew an alliance with us as with Russia.

From the point of view of military strategy, Mr. Lippmann, I believe, has made an important observation. He concludes, "It cannot any longer be the object of our policy to meet the Soviet expansion by organizing a military coalition in which Western Germany, Japan, and China are to be, as we once conceived it, the principal outer bastions—in which the United States, Great Britain, and France would be the arsenal, the citadel and the headquarters." But what does Mr. Lippmann offer in its stead? "The paramount object of our policy from now on will have to be to frustrate and to disorganize and to disintegrate any Soviet attempt to form a global coalition." For example, as Germany recovers we are to use our strategic air power to make it plain to the Germans "that if they ally themselves with Russia they become the first target in a case of a war with Russia." So, our strategy is to be different but our basic confidence is still to remain in the weapons of war. But since our military superiority is now in question because of Russia's atomic weapon, that confidence, to say the least, is somewhat shaken.

The Essential Heresy

NOW those who place no confidence in the weapons of war, and believe that they are not among the things which belong to our peace, point to what they believe is the essential heresy in all such attitudes: namely, the unspoken implication that God needs our force of arms to secure his victories for him. One of the central convictions in both historic Judaism and historic Christianity has been the doctrine that God is the God of history, that he keeps the reins of history in his hands, and that not even the perversity of man can take those reins out of his hands. God is not mocked. Nations may rise and fall; even civilizations with a small "c" may pass away. But Civilization with a capital "C" will not perish from the earth. There will always be a "remnant." God's ultimate plan cannot be thwarted. He who came among men in Jesus Christ will not let his whole plan of redemption go to smash. And the end does not justify the means. Indeed, it is the means which determine the end. It still remains true: "Whatsoever ye sow, that shall ye also reap." We do not serve God's ends by the implements of war. Paul's word still states our case: "For though we live in the world we are not carrying on a worldly war, for the weapons of our warfare are not worldly but have divine power to destroy strongholds." The kingdom of God comes only by the methods of that kingdom.

When our scale of observation is the whole process of evolution we regain the right perspective. As DeNuoy expressed it in "Human Destiny:" "Evolution continues in our time, no longer on the physiological or anatomical plane, but on the spiritual and moral plane . . . We are living in the midst of a revolution on the scale of evolution (the development of man's conscience) in comparison with which the revolutions we witness (wars and rumors of wars) are but tragic children's games and will leave no trace in the future." What matters most is individual effort, the victory of the individual conscience in response to him who said, "Be ye therefore perfect." So DeNuoy concludes, "Everything has taken place as if ever since the birth of the original cell, man has been willed . . . The way he behaves, discharges his humblest or highest duties . . . can make him either a co-worker with God or a drag on evolution. Efficient, disinterested help can only come to him from the wise, inspired human traditions presented by the Christian religion, keeper of the eternal flame which the greatest and purest men have passed on to one another from time immemorial over the bodies of dying civilizations."

These are the things which belong to our peace. Individually we may choose God's way or another. But the future is still in God's hands.

Psychiatry and Pacifism

By ADELE E. STREESEMAN
Physician and Psychiatrist

THE builders of our modern world have always rejected scornfully the stone the pacifist or peacemaker continues to prefer. The stone of non-resistance, of understanding love of your enemy, of refusing to meet violence with violence, or hatred with hatred was used only by the saintly Gandhi in building a nation. Our Western and so-called Christian civilization has rejected it steadily as impractical.

Nations have sought peace through force since cave-man days. Might and power have been used to settle every substantial dispute. Only in churches and in poetry do we even pay lip service to the way of love as a real method of conquering hate and fear. We love to hear John Oxenham's . . . "The few that love are stronger far . . . Than all the rest who hate." We are comforted as the choir sings "How beautiful upon the mountains . . . The feet of them that bringeth glad tidings . . . That publisheth peace."

We listen reverently to the gospel message, "But I say unto you, that ye resist not evil. Love your enemies. Bless them that curse you. Do good to them that hate you." But no one but a handful of pacifists takes any of this seriously. These are ideas and attitudes for church and songs and books and they must be kept there, and never get out into the market place. This stone is of no use to a practical engineer in planning our future, or the world's future. He discards it, and goes on using the time-honored materials, might and fear and strength and evermore-terrible force.

But suddenly, in an entirely different field, the golden rule turns up as practical, even scientific! Unexpectedly, the Apostle of Peace — gained-without-force—is the modern psychiatrist using the method of psycho-analysis. The bringer of peace to the sick mind in conflict does not use force and fear and repression. He uses insight, understanding and the way of wise compassion. The practicing psychoanalyst is an arch-exponent of the doctrine of non-resistance every day of his life. As he deals with the fury of emotional conflict he never resists nor resents evil in his patient. He does better. He understands it. He interprets and releases it.

For the method of psychoanalysis is the method of non-aggression and understanding. It speaks the language of brotherhood and mature love, wise and unsentimental. It acknowledges no enemies, only strangers who fear it because they do not understand it. It recognizes hate and deals with it, but does not partake of it. It takes the neurotic, with his buried fears, his unconscious hatreds, his deep guilt and it attacks none of them. It knows how devastating all three are, but it lets them alone. In the friendly warmth of intelligent sympathy it teaches the neurotic to unwind and unravel his hatreds and his fears and to understand the infantile source of his overwhelming hatred with its resultant guilt and fear. These evaporate slowly because they seem unreal and unfounded, in the light of the patient's growing understanding of himself.

The Pacifists Method

THAT is the pacifists method of dealing with hatred or aggression directed against him. Pacifism, like psychoanalysis is essentially a method. Pacifists do not differ from others in yearning for and valuing peace in our time. Everyone is for peace. But pacifists everlastingly insist that their way of getting it will work, and force will not, just as the psychoanalyst insists that his methods of preventing crime will work while brutal punishment will not.

The pacifist, too, gambles heavily on his ability to turn a foe into a friend. He acknowledges no enemies, but accepts the implications of his brotherhood to all mankind. The hatred directed toward him expends itself, futilely, without return on his part, until it seems unreal to the donor. The British soldiers could not go on mowing down the unresisting ranks of Gandhi's followers. Their own hate would not last. You just plain cannot go on hating someone who understands your hatred, does not blame you for it, and does not return it.

Today in the press, on the stage, in the school rooms and on the air there is overwhelming emphasis on psychiatry and psychoanalysis. Would that the method of psychoanalysis were as popular as its jargon! It has become the theme of the day, impossible to avoid.

Truly this method of non-resistance, of love and security as the conqueror of hate and fear, has become the important headstone of this corner of our culture, no longer rejected. Pacifists may well take pride in having valued that cornerstone long before it became so respectable and so respected.

THE NEW BOOKS

FREDERICK C. GRANT, Book Editor

On Being Human. By Ashley Montagu. Henry Schuman. $1.95.

A book by a sociologist who insists that man is by nature intended for cooperation and love, rather than for rivalry and competition to the death, and for a rigid, mechanical process of "natural selection" as it is popularly understood. He is not only dealing with the problem of war, upon which his basic thesis has of course a direct bearing, but also with life in the family and the community. The book is, let us hope, the harbinger of a new approach to human nature and politics which may get us a little further in the right direction. The world is still sick from its hangover of nineteenth century biological theories!

The Illusion of Immortality. By Corliss Lamont. Philosophical Library. $3.95.

This is a second edition of one of the most keenly argued and beautifully written briefs for the prosecution that has ever been submitted. We call it a brief for the prosecution, because surely the affirmation of faith in immortality is on the side of the defense. So thorough is Dr. Lamont's argument that we could wish every clergyman and seminarian might read it: here in full force is the argument they will have to face.

One wonders, in spite of the brilliance of the argument, what is the good of it. If immortality is not true, human life is left pretty thoroughly frustrated and incomplete. In the next place it seems clear that the same kind of argument could be advanced against belief in God, and often is (Humanism); or against belief in goodness (viewing it as only a kind of impersonal selfishness, perhaps social rather than individual); or against beauty (in nature it has only a kind of utility); or even against truth (some philosophers argue that truth is merely an instrument for achieving certain desirable social ends). But when God, human freedom, truth, beauty, and goodness are all crossed out—as by some of our current "philosophers," of what further use is human life?

One lesson to learn is that whatever the arguments pro and con, and whatever the evidence, scientific or other, the Church's faith in eternal life is not a matter of argument or proof, but is and ever must remain a matter of faith. If it were proved, it would cease to be faith, and all the values that inhere in it as an act of faith would peter out. Finally, it is not the people who can handle the arguments cleverly pro or con, who either advance or defeat this mighty faith which lives in the hearts of millions: it is the people who have really lived, faced the tragedy of life, have themselves gone through the Valley of the Shadow of Death, and have found something to support them in the midst of great trials and defeats—these are the people who have something to tell us, not the clever debaters on either side.

Pan-Anglican: A Review of the world-wide Episcopal Church. Edited by the Rt. Rev. Walter H. Gray. 207 Farmington Ave., Hartford 5, Connecticut.

This little magazine, just founded, is devoted to a descriptive account of the whole Anglican communion, and is designed to stress its unity. The opening number has a series of eight articles on the Canadian Church, an editorial page, and then a series of eight articles on the Anglican Church throughout the world. The number opens with an article by the Archbishop of Canterbury on "the Mission of the Anglican Communion." There are many interesting illustrations. The only thing we cannot find in it is the price—subscribers are not told what to send, but only to send a contribution. We wish the magazine every success.

Easter: Its Story and Meaning. By Alan W. Watts. Schuman. $2.50.

A year ago Henry Schuman brought out Theodore Gaster's fascinating and beautifully illustrated book on the Passover (recently reprinted). Now he has published the equally fascinating and well-illustrated book on Easter by Father Watts of Evanston. It is full of liturgical lore, and also of comparative religion. Easter, of course, goes a long way back. The Christian festival is really the "fulfillment" of an age-old primitive yearning for life beyond this life.

Atoms of Thought. By George Santayana. Ed. by Ira D. Cardiff. Philosophical Library. $5.00.

Devotees of Santayana—and they are found in all schools and throughout this country—will be pleased to have this anthology of his thoughts. Dr. Santayana has himself written a foreword in which he says, "This collection of passages . . . planned and well advanced before I had heard of it; and even now, when it goes to the press, I have seen only a few pages . . . which suffice to assure me that he would not peel off the baroque facade of my philosophy without also displaying in patches the prehistoric blocks of the substructure." Most of the passages have to do with philosophy, but many with religion.

The Religious Revolt Against Reason. By L. Harold DeWolf. Harper. $2.50.

This book censures the so-called Neo-orthodox movement in theology. The author is undoubtedly right in countering the extreme anti-rationalism and anti-philosophical attitude of some theologians today. However, he evades the real issues and runs into open doors. Even the most paradoxical representatives of Christian thought (e. g. Pascal, from whom by the way—and not from W. James—the idea originated that belief in God is "a forced and momentous option," p. 186) did not and do not deny that reason has a part in theological discussion. If they did, how could they struggle so much to prove the truth of their own position! Neither Barth nor Niebuhr nor any of the dialectical theologians are so naive as to believe that there can be any theological "revolt against reason" without reason! Things are much more difficult and lie much deeper than the author guesses. The serious question concerns the kind of logic which has to be applied in order to express Christian truth in the form of a "theological" system. The author calls himself a "rational believer in God" (e. g., p. 113). Would St. Paul have accepted such a designation?

—WAR AND PEACE

the state speaks, the Christian must obey." Stating that no Christian can surrender his conscience to another, not even the state, Prof. Rutenber said that "the capacity of the human spirit to rationalize when great issues are at stake is practically infinite. The Churches have never failed to find justice in every war, and on behalf of every side," and then stated that "never has the Church rebuked a war of its own government."

He cautioned his audience against assuming immediate political success from a campaign of non-violent direct action against war which "like war, gives expression to the concern for justice but, unlike war, the life which is at stake is one's own." In urging Christians to try Gandhian programs of non-violence, he reminded his audience that the emphasis of their Christian faith was not on results, but on the will of God. He said, "Modern science has put into the hands of rulers a capacity for wreaking devastation upon the rest of the world which is unparalleled in history. Never before was it possible for so few to damn so many."

In welcoming the delegates to the conference, Dr. Henry Crane, pastor of the host church, said: "Repudiating the various popular methods of his day, Jesus actually did meet the world's worst tyranny in just one way: he did not run away, nor seek to appease, nor in any way compromise, nor did he adopt the means he had condemned in those who were determined to kill him. He took the way of the cross—and revealed a new way to triumph over his enemies."

To aid in the broad dissemination of the findings of the conference, the national sponsoring committee, which includes Episcopalians Mrs. Henry Hill Pierce of New York, Bishop Wm. Appleton Lawrence of Western Massachusetts, Prof. Joseph F. Fletcher of Episcopal Theological School and the Rev. William K. Russell, rector of St. Bartholomew's Church, Brooklyn, New York, has appointed a representative group of Church leaders, under the leadership of Ray Newton of the American Friends Service Committee, to plan regional meetings of churchmen during this summer and fall.

Delegates of the Episcopal Pacifist Fellowship to the conference, and friends of the organization, met for a corporate communion and breakfast at Christ Church, Detroit, on May 10th. Discussion at the breakfast centered around the program of implementation of the conference findings that the Fellowship could sponsor within the Episcopal Church. The Rev. William B. Sperry, a contributing editor of The Witness, is rector of Christ Church.

NEWS OF CHURCHES OVERSEAS

JAPANESE EPISCOPAL CHURCH HOLDS GENERAL SYNOD

Sixty clerical and lay delegates from ten dioceses attended the triennial general synod of the Nippon Seikokwai Anglican Episcopal Church which held a four-day session under the chairmanship of Bishop Michael Yashiro of Kobe. In his opening address, Bishop Yashiro stressed that the Japanese Church is now an independent body looking after its own affairs, and taking full responsibility for the evangelization of the people.

"Only the devastation of the war justified our Church receiving aid from sister Churches in Great Britain and North America for the rebuilding of destroyed buildings," he said. "But now, five years after the surrender, the Church has been nearly restored, both materially and spiritually, and we must go forward with courage and determination."

"However," Bishop Yashiro added, "in this advance, we want to cooperate fully with the missionary enthusiasm of the sister Churches abroad, because there cannot be any monopoly in the work of evangelization."

Mr. G. Budd, a representative of the Episcopal Church in the United States, pledged that his Church would give "first priority" to the work in Japan, and "would stand behind the Japanese Church both in supplying personnel and material." "That does not mean," he said, "that the American Church will establish missionary districts of its own in Japan. It means that her service will be given to the Japanese Church, which is independent in the family of the Anglican communion."

CHURCH CARRIES ON IN CHINA

A report May 2 from Hongkong gives a picture of the Churches in China after a year of Communist rule.

Chinese Christians, Christian organizations and foreign missionaries settled down to living and working under a new regime that had come to stay. Looking back upon a year under the Communist government, most Protestant leaders are of the opinion that "we have fared better than we dared to hope."

Although conditions vary in different localities, certain generalizations can be made. Some Christian leaders take a gloomy view of things, others appear overly optimistic, but all agree that the experiences of the past year have shown that Christianity has sunk its roots deep into the good earth of China. The faith of Chinese Christians has held firm against intimidation, ridicule and social and economic pressure.

Letters and reports from all over China indicate that church attendance has grown markedly in the past year, both in the country and in the big city churches. A Chinese Christian leader in close touch with rural churches believes they may once more become the vital force they were before the war years, although their resurgence is bound to be slow.

SEEKS CLOSER CONTACT BETWEEN CHURCHES

Proposals to bring about closer contact between churches in England and Germany were made by Bishop Hunter of Sheffield, England, at a conference held in Germany with leaders of the Evangelical Church. He proposed an intensified exchange of pastors, theological students, and more frequent visits of churchmen of both countries. A first step will be the visit of 18 youth leaders from Sheffield to the Evangelical Church day at Essen in September, with an equal number of German youth leaders visiting Sheffield.

POLISH BISHOPS SIGN AGREEMENT

All but one of Poland's R. C. bishops have signed the Church-state agreement with the government. The sole exception is Adam Cardinal Sapieha of Cracow who recently returned from Rome where he had two conferences with the Pope over the situation.

WORLD COUNCIL TO MEET AT EVANSTON

The second assembly of the World Council of Churches will be held in 1953 at Northwestern University, Evanston, Illinois. Plans for the meeting will be drawn up in detail at the meeting of the central committee which will be in Toronto this July.

An Introduction to

New Testament Thought

By Frederick C. Grant

Broad in scope, penetrating in treatment, this volume analyzes and relates the key ideas in the New Testament.

Dr. Grant explains the nature and scope of New Testament thought, its relation to Old Testament thought, and the influences that have helped to mold it. He studies each of the great doctrines and interprets it in light of its basis, development, and significance in contemporary attitudes.

Here is an authoritative survey of a vital field which no writer with the benefit of recent critical discoveries has so comprehensively covered—a wealth of essential fact and sound interpretation.

NEWS OF OTHER CHURCHES

METHODIST YOUTH HIT FLYNN BOOK

Delegates representing 50,000 Ohio Methodist youth condemned recent writings of John T. Flynn and Stanley High as "immoral attempts" to "degrade certain Christian gentlemen and institutions."

A resolution criticizing the two authors was drafted at a meeting here. It will be sent to the Methodist Council of Bishops. The resolution was directed at statements in Mr. Flynn's book "The Road Ahead," and a recent article by Mr. High in Reader's Digest.

"We, the elected delegates of the 50,000 Methodist Youth of the Ohio Conference," the resolution said, "hereby reaffirm faith in the spirit of Christ which is naturally opposed to any ideology, be it Communism, Capitalism, or otherwise, which denies the law of love working in all human endeavors.

"In recognizing this position we look with abhorrence on the insipid Fascism represented in the immoral attempts of John T. Flynn and Stanley High to degrade certain Christian gentlemen and institutions. Such misrepresentations are the greatest danger in Christianity."

HARRISON ELLIOTT IS HONORED

Harrison S. Elliott, professor at Union Seminary, was honored by 250 former students at a testimonial dinner given May 2 in New York. He is to retire this June, after heading the department of religious education and psychology for 25 years. One of the roles of the religious educator, he said, should be to help bridge the gap between those who place their faith in science and those who place it in God.

FOREIGN MISSIONS JOINS COUNCIL

The 56-year-old Foreign Missions Conference has voted to dissolve and surrender its function to the foreign missions division of the National Council of Churches which comes into being this Fall. This reverses a stand taken last year when delegates voted against becoming a part of the new organization.

SUPREME COURT TO REVIEW FREE SPEECH CASE

A person can speak on about any subject from street corners of New York City, except religion. There is a police station around the corner from The Witness office in N. Y., with the sign outside: "Apply here for gun licenses and permits for religious meetings." The reason for the law is said to be that in the early days people got so excited over religion that riots resulted. A case growing out of this law is now going to be argued before the Supreme Court by attorneys for the American Civil Liberties Union. Carl Kunz obtained a permit to preach from the police. Later it was revoked on the ground that he "ridiculed and denounced religion" and that his meetings caused disorders. So he went ahead and preached anyway; was arrested and fined $10. He went to the court of appeals which upheld his conviction in a 4-3 decision in which the judges stated that the city has a right to stop a man "from starting religious wars" on its streets. ACLU has initiated the case in Supreme Court as a test of free speech.

ROMAN CATHOLICS ASK PTA BACKING

Roman Catholic churches of Grand Rapids last week demanded that the Michigan congress of the Parent-Teachers Association support federal aid for parochial as well as public schools. The national PTA supports federal aid for public schools only.

EAR PLUGS SHOULD BE FURNISHED

An FM station owned by the Texas Baptists, with station at Dallas, is to broadcast music into offices, stores and factories, presumably to make workers more contented. Business concerns have to pay for the service, and the manager of the station thinks it will make the station self-supporting.

METHODIST WOMEN LAUNCH NATIONAL VOTE DRIVE

A nationwide campaign to get Methodist women to vote was launched at the assembly of Methodist women, meeting in Cleveland. It followed addresses by Thelma Stevens of the Church's social relations dept., Vera M. Dean, research director of the Foreign Policy Ass'n and President Benjamin E. May of Moorehouse College, Atlanta. Their theme was that "citizens who do not vote affect the issues at stake by their very indifference." Mrs. Dean wanted the U. S. to be in the vanguard of reforms "instead of bringing up the rear because of our fear of Russia and Communism," while Dr. May made a plea for better race relations. Earlier in the conference Bishop Oxnam of New York hit at "hysterical men whose political ambition causes them to label distinguished public servants as subversive" and at "self appointed vigilantes masquerading in patriotic robes who ride the national highways and, like their forebears, contribute to lawlessness."

CHURCH SCHOOL GAINS FOR METHODISTS

A gain of 21% in church school membership for the past five years has been reported by the Methodist Church. The report also states that there are 218,677 students in colleges related to the Church. More than 795,000 children are enrolled in 14,000 vacation schools.

WILLIAM GILMAN
National Executive Committeeman of Jewish War Veterans

Several years ago, Rev. Morris Arnold, then of Medford, Mass., now of Cincinnati, Ohio, gave me a subscription to The Witness which I have been reading ever since. I find that this publication is now one of the "musts" on my reading list. It is truly straightforward, penetrating, and courageous in its editorial attitudes.

I have passed it on to many of my co-religionists (Jewish) who wish to join me in offering a verbal orchid to a bright light in a rather dismal, dim world.

May you go from strength to strength.

LEWIS F. SCHENCK
Rector of Christ Church, Macon, Ga.

I think it would be advisable if you would place in your magazine a memorandum in regard to someone who is working parishes for help with a letter signed by me. I have signed no letters of recommendation for help to anyone and I think people should be warned in regard to the persons purporting to possess such a letter. It was called to my attention by the Rev. Mr. Marshall of St. Margaret's Church, Washington, D. C. The man gives his name as Charles DeBrusk.

E. A. CALLAHAN JR.
Lay Vicar of St. James,
New Castle, Ind.

In running through back numbers of The Witness I came across Prof. Walter Clark's article on "The Church: No Appeal to Men (Dec. 8th). It seems to me that this brilliant article should have wider circulation. I am beginning my ministry at a small, almost extinct, parish, and one of the great needs is for an articulation of the real gospel of Christ to the men. I have long believed what Prof. Clark has to say on the matter, but he says it so much more clearly and compellingly that I wish we might have reprints of this work.

CLARK CROSSLAND
Layman of New York City

Lately I have been getting my copy of The Witness on Wednesday. A friend of mine reads The Living Church, and he gets his on Saturday or Monday. He has always said that I ought to read The Living Church if I really wanted news. We often compare the two as to news of the Episcopal Church, and he is now admitting that The Witness not only has more news of our beloved church, but prints it a few days ahead of his magazine, and sometimes even ten days. I'm working on him to subscribe to the best magazine in the Church.

JOSEPH C. MASON
Rector of Grace Church, Cortland, NY.

Surely the R. C. "Home Messenger" was remiss in not enlightening James P. Joseph (Backfire, May 4), as to the proper saint for housemaid's knee! If not listed in their "compartmentized religion" Baedeker, Saint James should be, since according to tradition he prayed so long that his knees became caloused and resembled the knees of a camel! He's right—laughter is close to tears.

FRANK L. TITUS
National Council's Overseas Dept.

The Bishop of Alaska is desperate. He must get a doctor and at least two nurses or a nurse and a good secretary to take care of business affairs at Hudson Stuck Memorial Hospital, Fort Yukon, by the first of July. At that time there will only be two nurses to care for this hospital which is the only medical service for hundreds of square miles in the Yukon Valley. The closing of the hospital, which will happen if nothing is done, will deprive all the inhabitants of this part of the country of medical service.

Chapters in Church History leaves me breathless! It's a long jump from St. Polycarp to the World Council of Churches, and yet, on the way, Dr. Dawley has been able to discuss the outstanding events in Church history, explain the developing thinking which brought most of them about, and frequently relate them to our present problems in a most forceful way . . . This book is really tremendous. I want to own it and reread it and tell my family and friends and every Churchman about it.—Mrs. George W. STORY OF THE WEEK

Alexandria's Christ Church An Expanding Parish

This Historical Colonial Parish Emphasizes The Present and the Future

★ Although the congregation of Christ Church, Alexandria, Virginia, has completed over 200 years of life, using the same building continuously for 177 years, it is this year expanding its facilities for a wider ministry in a growing community. This church, which meant so much to George Washington and Robert E. Lee in the 18th and 19th centuries, is resisting the temptation to become just a national shrine or museum in the 20th century. Well over 100,000 tourists visit the church each year so that it is necessary to employ a full time tourist hostess. Admission fees, which were collected for forty years, were abolished in 1947 and the church is open daily from 9:00 a. m. to 5:00 p. m. for sightseers and worshippers.

Christ Church now has a congregation of almost 1,000 communicants and in addition has about 750 other adherents and about 400 in its church school. There has been no addition to its building facilities in 96 years. The present parish hall was built the year after Robert E. Lee was confirmed in Christ Church. There are so many children enrolled in the church school that two sessions are required. Attendance at the main service on Sunday mornings average 450 for the year. During the past five years 449 people have been baptized and 297 have been presented for confirmation. Christ Church has two choirs under the direction of Mr. Robert Hawksley, F.A.G.O. There are three branches of the Woman's Auxiliary, three parish guilds, a men's group, a young people's service league and a parent-teacher group.

For several years it has become increasingly evident that the 96 year old parish hall is inadequate for the present day life of the congregation. The decision had to be made whether Christ Church would maintain its place of spiritual leadership in the community or whether it would be content to bask in the glory of its past history. When faced with this choice the congregation decided that Christ Church is not George Washington's church or Robert E. Lee's church, but that it is God's church and therefore must not be content to become primarily a shrine or museum. They decided that they would build a new parish hall, keeping the present 96 year old building, which would give adequate facilities for religious education, an expanded parish life, and would also serve as a valuable instrument for service to the community. After the needs had been carefully studied and the plans drawn, a building fund campaign was successfully carried out. The contract for the new building was signed on March 7th, 1950 and the groundbreaking ceremony took place in March. The work is progressing well and the cornerstone is scheduled to be laid on June 11th with Bishop Frederick D. Goodwin of Virginia, presiding. The building is expected to be finished before December 1st.

The new Christ Church Memorial Parish Hall will harmonize with the 183 year old Church building and is designed to accentuate its architectural beauty and charm. The lovely red colonial brick church has a commanding position in the churchyard which includes half a block. It is located in the heart of downtown Alexandria on U. S. Highway No. 1 which is also the Mount Vernon Memorial Boulevard. Here for 183 years it has borne its eloquent witness to the good news of the Christ. Architecturally it is typical of the country churches built in England in the 18th century. The simplicity of the interior of Christ Church creates a natural setting for evangelical, Prayer Book worship which has been the tradition of the Church in Virginia for three and a half centuries.

The Rev. B. B. Comer Lile became rector of Christ Church on October 15th, 1944. The Rev. O. V. T. Chamberlain became assistant rector on March 1st, 1946.

NO "GRAVE DISTURBANCE" AT CHRIST CHURCH

★ Christ churchyard in Alexandria, Virginia, was used as a burying ground from 1765 to 1815 and many interesting tombstones still remain. Some local residents thought that there had been interments on the site of the new Christ Church Memorial Parish Hall. The vestry, however, knew that the first parish hall of Christ Church had stood on this site and that the tombstones on the site had been moved to that location in recent years. Many of them had originally marked graves which are now under the present 96 year old parish hall. When the new parish hall excavation was made careful watch was kept for any evidence of interments. In spite of the fears which had been expressed there was absolutely no "grave disturbance at Christ Church," as a Washington newspaper humorously sub-headed a front page story recently.

SPECIALIST IN CHURCHES

★ Mr. Frank L. Cowles, general contractor for Christ Church Memorial Parish Hall, Alexandria, Virginia, is a specialist in erecting church buildings. Within the last few years he has built St. Clement's Episcopal Church and Grace Episcopal Church in Alexandria besides erecting buildings for Christian Science, Roman Catholic, Methodist, Lutheran and Presbyterian congregations in northern Virginia.

GIFTS IN KIND ARE MADE

★ A member of Christ Church, Alexandria, Virginia, who manufactures brick, when called on to contribute to the new parish hall, offered to give all the face brick for the building as his pledge. Another member, who is in the construction business, gave the excavation for the new building. These unusual gifts in kind were received with great appreciation.

COLONIAL ARCHITECTURE HIS SPECIALTY

★ Milton L. Grigg, architect for Christ Church Memorial Parish Hall, Alexandria, Va., is an outstanding authority on Colonial architecture. For several years he worked on the reconstruction of Colonial Williamsburg. He has been architect for many residences and public buildings of colonial design and has been commissioned as architect for many churches, including two Gothic structures in the Washington area, namely: Grace Episcopal Church, Alexandria, and the Church of the Atonement, Washington, D. C. He is the architect for the restoration of "The Ramsay House" the oldest building in Alexandria, erected in 1749. Mr. Grigg is the architect for the restoration of Montecello, the home of Thomas Jefferson, and for several other buildings of Jeffersonian authorship.

BISHOP BUDLONG TO RETIRE

★ Bishop Budlong of Connecticut is to retire on January 15, 1951, after a notable service in the episcopate of nearly 20 years. Subject to acceptance by the House of Bishops, he presented the resignation to the convention of his diocese, meeting at Christ Church Cathedral, Hartford.

The diocese has been largely reorganized during his episcopate so that the administration today is extremely efficient. Also clergy salaries have been notably increased; parish properties have been put in fine condition; missionary offering has been greatly increased; baptisms and confirmations have topped all previous records.

It is anticipated that Bishop and Mrs. Budlong will continue to reside in Hartford after his retirement, and that he will continue to serve the Church by assisting Bishop Walter Gray as occasion warrants.

COMMENCEMENT AT BERKELEY

★ Bishop Bentley, vice-president of the National Council, is to be the headliner at the commencement of Berkeley Divinity School, held in New Haven June 2. The alumni sermon will be by the Rev. Elmer D. Horstmann, rector of Christ Church, Bridgeport, Conn.

GENERAL CONVENTION OF 1952

★ The Rev. Gardiner M. Day, chairman of the local committee on arrangements for the 1952 General Convention in Boston, submitted his preliminary report at the diocesan convention meeting in Boston. The dates will be Sept. 8-19, with Symphony Hall the meeting place for Deputies and Horticultural Hall for Bishops and for exhibits of church organizations. The opening service will be in the Boston Garden, as will also the service at which the United Thank Offering is presented.

The sessions of the Auxiliary will be held in the ball room of the Copley Plaza, with the parish house of Trinity Church, across the street, available for sectional meetings.

Emmanuel Church will be headquarters for the youth convention, with larger meeting held in the new building of an insurance company which is nearby.

Resolutions were passed by the delegates in opposition to the death penalty, declaring that it "falls for the most part on obscure, impoverished, friendless or defective individuals and rarely on the well-to-do and educated. The Church believes that each individual is sacred, as a child of God, and that to legalize the killing of an offender is to deny the basic Christian doctrines of forgiveness of sin and the power of redemption, and that mercy is a Christian duty."

The convention also condemned pending state and federal bills which it said would curb civil liberties in the name of hunting down Communists. The resolution stated that the constitution "guarantees freedom of religion, of speech, of press and of peaceful assembly. We oppose every measure which would undermine the civil liberties and democratic institutions of our country and support those measures which would strengthen and extend our democracy."

Another resolution asked that the surpluses of food held by the government be made available to areas of need at home and overseas.

COMMENCEMENT AT GENERAL

★ Commencement at the General Seminary is being held this week, May 22-24. Prof. Stanley Brown-Serman of the Virginia Seminary preached the baccalaureate at a service Monday evening and Prof. Frederick C. Grant of Union Seminary, Witness book editor, gave the alumni address on "preaching value in the new translation of the New Testament" on Tuesday. The commencement address on the 24th was by Prof. Kirkpatrick Scott-Craig of Dartmouth.

EPISCOPAL CHURCH NEWS

OVER MILLION DOLLARS FOR COLLEGE WORK

★ Bishop Hobson announced at the convention of Southern Ohio, meeting at Christ Church, Cincinnati, that $1,095,000 had been raised during the past year for the diocesan building fund for colleges. He stated also that more than $183,000 had been pledged for the national missionary work of the Church. The announcement was the climax of the diamond jubilee convention which was attended by 350 delegates, as well as civic leaders and visiting bishops.

A surprise event was a luncheon, at which gifts were presented, marking the 20th anniversary of the consecration of Bishop Hobson. A chorus of clergy presented an original musical appreciation in the style of a Gilbert and Sullivan operetta. The preacher at the anniversary service, held May 9, was Bishop Barton of Eastern Oregon, who is also the chairman of The Witness advisory board. Bishop Paul Matthews, retired diocesan of New Jersey, was the featured speaker at the banquet.

LAYMEN'S LEAGUE HAS MEETING

★ The laymen's league of Southwestern Virginia had its annual meeting May 6 at St. John's, Roanoke. The highlight of the session was an address by Prof. E. M. McCrady of the University of the South, who is at present on loan to the atomic energy commission at Oak Ridge, Tenn. He said that, happily for him, his work is on the constructive possibilities of atomic energy, but he did discuss to some extent its awful possibilities, declaring that the bombs dropped in Japan are now completely out of date and cannot even be compared with those now possessed by the country.

Among his interesting statements and epigrams were: "Years ago it used to be the fashion for scientists to be rather opposed to the Church. In these days there is a larger proportion of scientists who are members of the Church than I have ever known." . . . "The conception of the Church as the body of Christ really came to me through the biological approach." . . . "The trouble about Christianity in the lives of many people is that it is tried in such a half-hearted way." . . . "It is still a somewhat puzzling thing that a supposedly Christian Germany so easily went into Nazism." . . . "Aside from my regular work, a study of the relation of science, philosophy and religion is one of my chief and most interesting activities." . . . "Christ did not say you have to prove his divinity or the validity of his commandments." . . . "It is possible to be definitely religious without scientific information. On the other hand science is one of the most inspiring bases of my own faith."

RESOLUTIONS PROMPT LIVELY DEBATE

★ Resolutions introduced at the convention of the diocese of Washington, held May 7-8, caused lively debate. The convention went on record as opposing the principle of federal appropriations to parochial and other private schools, except for such social services as luncheons, etc. It also adopted a resolution for the elimination of racial restrictions in the diocese and community. It approved efforts to bring DPs into the country but tabled a resolution favoring home rule for the District of Columbia on the grounds that it is a political question.

Bishop Dun reported that in 1920, a year in which special efforts for the national Church were made, the diocese gave $68,000; in 1949 the sum of $98,000 went to the National Council.

MELISH APPEAL DENIED

★ The appellate division of the Brooklyn supreme court has refused the Rev. John Howard Melish permission to reargue his case or institute another appeal. He has announced that he will carry the case to the court of appeals in Albany. Dr. Melish was removed as rector of Holy Trinity last year by Bishop DeWolfe, charged with supporting the activities of his son and assistant which were described as "radical."

At the convention of the diocese, held at Garden City, May 16, the new vestry of Holy Trinity, strongly pro-Melish, was recognized and the delegates from the parish were seated.

COMMENCEMENT AT PHILADELPHIA

★ Commencement at the Philadelphia Divinity School is to be held May 30-June 1. Sixteen graduates will receive diplomas at a service conducted by Bishop Hart as the president of the trustees. Honorary doctorates are to be awarded to the Rev. George Copeland, rector of St. Peter's, Weldon, Pa.; the Rev. W. N. Parker, rector of the Epiphany, Sherwood, Pa.; and the Rev. Alfred M. Smith, chaplain of the Philadelphia City Mission Society.

The alumni essay will be by the Rev. Herbert Satcher, rector of St. Aidan's, Cheltenham, Pa., and the commencement address will be by Bishop Pardue of Pittsburgh.

NEW INSTRUCTOR AT SEABURY

★ Noah Fehl, fellow at the University of Chicago, becomes a part-time instructor in philosophy at Seabury Western Seminary in September. He will also be director of Brent House, center for work among Oriental students at U. of C.

CONVENTION OF LONG ISLAND

★ Bishop DeWolfe, addressing the convention of Long Island, meeting at Garden City May 16, condemned "a pagan materialism which bids well to destroy the modern world by immorality, H-bombs, destruction and industrialism."

He also opposed revision of the Prayer Book which "almost always causes controversy to arise in the Church, and it would seem unwise to disturb further the minds and the life of our people."

He reported that since the last convention the diocese had expended $425,000 for new buildings and capital repairs.

By the unanimous vote of the 800 delegates, the convention agreed to permit three women to serve on the diocesan council. They are to serve however for but one year, whereas the men on the council serve three-year terms. Another precedent was established when the convention met in joint session with the Woman's Auxiliary.

PENNSYLVANIA HAS CONVENTION

★ A record missionary budget of $474,000 for 1951 was voted at the convention of the diocese of Pennsylvania, meeting May 8 in Philadelphia. Approval was also given to the raising of a special fund of $400,000 to meet "long-deferred capital needs of the diocese." It was announced that a 50-acre estate has been given to the diocese. It includes a house of 19 rooms and a swimming pool. It will be used for conferences and retreats.

NEW JERSEY HOLDS CONVENTION

★ The convention of New Jersey, meeting at Trenton, adopted a budget of $172,000 for 1951, of which $96,000 is for the National Council. Approval was also given to Bishop Gardner's proposal for a campaign next year for $150,000 for advance work throughout the diocese.

A resolution was passed reaffirming "the conviction of General Convention that our foreign policy should be so directed as to support and strengthen the United Nations" and it called upon the U. S. government "to continue to explore every avenue of possible reconciliation with the Soviet Union, within the framework of the United Nations."

Another resolution which was approved called for the inclusion of lay employees of the Church in the federal social security set-up.

CARLETON COLLEGE CONFERENCE

★ The case for Christianity was the theme for the faith and action conference held at Carleton College, Northfield, Minn., May 7-9, under the supervision of the Rev. James Flint, dean of the chapel. Guest speakers were Prof. Elton Trueblood of Earlham College; Rev. William Young, Presbyterian of Highland Park, Ill.; Rev. Alan Watts, Episcopal chaplain at Northwestern; Prof. Daniel C. Williams of Chicago Theological School.

The purpose of the conference was to investigate the nature of the faith behind the "good works" which was dealt with at a similar affair last year. Speakers and students also attempted to discover the justification for the claims of Christianity that it is the highest belief known to man and offers a solution to the problems that harass humanity.

SPECIAL SERVICE FOR NURSES

★ A service for practical nurses was held May 7 in St. Paul's Cathedral, Detroit, preceded by a colorful procession of several hundred nurses in uniform. The service was sponsored jointly by the local council of churches and the cathedral.

HENRY DARLINGTON IS HONORED

★ Parishioners and friends met in the parish house of the Church of the Heavenly Rest, New York, on May 14 following the morning service, to honor the retiring rector, the Rev. Henry Darlington.

A special presentation on behalf of the congregation was made by Clarence G. Michalis, senior warden. Mr. Michalis read from a set of resolutions adopted by the vestry at a meeting in December: "It would be difficult to put into words the affection, admiration and deep appreciation of those to whom he has so faithfully ministered for more than a quarter of a century."

The gifts included a check, a new automobile and an inscribed watch. "These tokens," Mr. Michalis continued, "are accompanied by the wish that the years which lie ahead may be filled with all the good health and happiness which he so richly deserves."

"The real test of our affection," he concluded, "lies in how we carry on the spiritual work to which he has given so much of his life. There is the real test of your devotion and affection to him."

Darlington thanked and blessed the parishioners and urged them to "transfer everything" to the Rev. John Ellis Large, who will succeed him as rector June 1.

DEAN SWEET WANTS MORE PLANNING

★ Dean Sidney E. Sweet of St. Louis, addressing the Cincinnati Council of Churches, said that Christianity is not a dominant enough factor in city life. "There are too many subsidized small churches, with inadequate equipment and inefficient leadership," he declared. He maintained that subsidies may be justified for churches in underprivileged areas, downtown areas and college towns, "but where neighborhood churches are subsidized for years and serve only a small group, the subsidies are an actual misuse of Christian funds."

All denominations, he said, should agree to locate or relocate churches only with the advice and consent of committees representing all of them.

DAY OF PRAYER FOR PEACE

★ Carl M. Saunders, editor of the Citizen-Patriot, daily newspaper of Jackson, Mich., won the Pulitzer Prize for an editorial urging the designation of Memorial Day as a day of national prayer for peace. It is believed probable that Congress will continue to make this special designation annually. The first day so observed was Memorial Day, 1949.

Mr. Saunders is a member of the current confirmation class at St. Paul's Church, Jackson, of which the Rev. Howard V. Harper is rector.

PREACHING MISSION IN PARIS

★ The six American and British churches in Paris, France, sponsored a preaching mission, May 7-10, with the Rev. Bryan Green of England the preacher. The chairman was Dean Sturgis Lee Riddle, dean of the American Pro-Cathedral of the Holy Trinity. It marked the first time that all the English speaking churches in the city have united in sponsoring a religious program.

LAYREADERS SERVICE IN PITTSBURGH

★ More than 175 layreaders of the diocese of Pittsburgh attended a service on May 14 at the Ascension, Pittsburgh. The preacher was Bishop Pardue.

UNIT OF RESEARCH AND FIELD STUDY

★ The Rev. George A. Wieland, director of the home department of the National Council, has announced the setting up of a unit of research and field study. "From diocese and district alike," Wieland said, "has come the demand for guidance, direction and actual supervision of survey needs. We have been building up the skills and facilities necessary to meet those demands. There is no possible way in which we can meet all of the requests for this service in the immediate future. We shall need to establish priorities in order to avoid too crowded a schedule. We shall need to have complete cooperation from the diocese or district requesting such a study. We shall need to have a clear understanding as to the purposes and objectives of any survey we undertake.

"The major purpose of any study of this sort as we see it, is to know the facts. Until we know factually where we are now, it is difficult, if not impossible, to chart an intelligent course for the future. Once we know the facts and the historical background which produced them we are ready to move forward. Gains and losses, successes and failures, present needs and opportunities, are all significant. Once we have the facts the road ahead is easier to define. No study has real value until it becomes the foundation of a strategic program of development and growth."

Wieland explained that official arrangement by the bishop and council of the convention of a diocese is required before any study of such diocese will be made; that aims and objectives of the study shall be worked out, a local committee appointed, a budget or appropriation to cover expense shall be provided,

Bulwark of Freedom

THE fact of the Ascension, like the doctrine of the Trinity, is a great bulwark of human freedom. The concept of and the belief in the Holy Trinity is a profound symbol of the nature of the incentives and the quality of the thought of men who believe in and will fight for liberty. But the Ascension was a specific event, both physical and spiritual in its nature, taking place in a remote corner of the Roman Empire, which, in itself, made over both men and nations.

For the Ascension of our Lord means the extending to universal world scope of the healing, renewing impact of Jesus of Nazareth on a few Palestine peasants. What he did to the lepers and madmen and to Mary Magdelene, Zacchaeus and Lazarus before Good Friday and to Peter and the rest of the Apostles after Easter, he has done and is doing around the world ever since. The Ascension of Christ is the universalizing of revolution.

Wherever conservative or sophisticated or timid folk gather today, one is certain to hear sooner or later, as an argument against change—whether of character or of institutions — the mournful cliche: "You can't change human nature." The really basic answer to such an argument is, of course, the fact of the Ascension. The truly human nature of our Lord has been exalted to eternal dominion, by virtue of which he has been changing our individual human natures ever since (whenever we let him in) and has been transforming human institutions and civilizations throughout the course of Christian history—which the specious tenets of "neo-orthodoxy" have stubbornly failed to recognize.

For typical examples of institutional transformation: in the early Christian fellowship, when the Church was coming to grips with the disintegrating empire of Rome, two firmly established institutions in the culture of that day—suicide as the natural and logical way out when life had ceased to thrill or satisfy, and child-murder when the unwanted or ill-formed infant threatened to be an uncomfortable family or community problem—were extirpated from respectable society and, in their place, hospitals and asylums were created and developed as the expression of the spirit of the Christian fellowship by the dominating power of the ascended Lord.
